'tis further necessary, that the same spirit
appear in all sort of encounters. Pope.

TO ENCOUNTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To meet face to face; to front.

If I must die,
I will encounter darkness as a bride,
And hug it in mine arms. Shakespeare.
The fashion of the world is to avoid cost, and you encounter it. Shakespeare.

Thou stronger may'st endure the flood of light;
And while in shades I hear my fainting sight,
Encounter the descending excellence. Dryden.

2. To meet in a hostile manner; to rush against in conflict.

Putting themselves in order of battle, they encountered their enemies. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

3. To meet with reciprocal kindness.

See they encounter thee with their hearts thanks;
Both sides are even. Shakef. Macbeth.

4. To attack; to meet in the front.

Which way soever we turn, we are encountered with clear evidences and sensible demonstrations of a Deity. Tillotson.

5. To oppose; to oppugn.

Jurors are not bound to believe two witnesses, if the probability of the fact does reasonably encounter them. Hale.

6. To meet by accident.

I am most fortunate thus to encounter you:
You have ended my business, and I will merrily Accompany you home. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

TO ENCOUNTER. v. n.

1. To rush together in a hostile manner; to conflict.

Encounter so,
As both the tury of two desperate men,
Which, in the very meeting, fall and die. Shakef.

Five times, Marcius,
Have I fought with thee; so often hast thou beat me:
And wouldst do so, I think, should we encounter.
As often as we eat. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

2. To engage; to fight: it hath with before the thing.

Our wars
Will turn into a peaceful comick sport,
When ladies crave to be encounter'd with. Shakef.

Both the wings of his fleet had begun to encounter with the Christians. Knolles's Hist. of the Turke.

Those who have the most dread of death, must be content to encounter with it, whether they will or no. Wake.

3. To meet face to face.

1. To come together by chance.

ENCOUNTERER. n. f. [from encounter.]

1. Opponent; antagonist; enemy.

The lion will not kick with his feet, but he will strike such a stroke with his tail, that he will break the back of his encounterers with it. Morc.

2. One that loves to accost others. An old term.

Oh, these encounterers! so gilt of tongue,
They give a coating welcome ere it comes;
And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts
To every ticklish leader. Shakef. Troilus and Cressida.

TO ENCOURAGE. v. a. [encourager, French.]

1. To animate; to incite to any thing:

They encourage themselves in an evil matter. Pf. lxiv. 5.

2. To give courage to; to support the spirits;
to inspirit; to embolden.

Kinds of musick encourage men, and make them warlike, or make them soft and effeminate. Bacon.
I would neither encourage the rebels, nor discourage the protestants loyalty. King Charles.

3. To raise confidence; to make confident.

I doubt not but there are ways to be found, to assist our reason in this most useful part; and this the judicious Hooker encourages me to say. Locke.

ENCOURAGEMENT. n. f. [from encourage.]

1. Incitement to any action or practice; incentive.

2. Encrease of confidence.

Such strength of heart
Thy conduct and examples gives; nor small Encouragement, Godolphin, wife and just. Phillips.

3. Favour; countenance; support.

For when he dies, farewell all honour, bounty,
All generous encouragement of arts. Orway's Orphan.

The reproach of immortality will lie heaviest against an established religion, because those who have no religion will profess themselves of that which has the encouragement of the law. Rogers.

ENCOURAGER. n. f. [from encourage.] One that supplies incitements to any thing; a favourer.

Live then, thou great encourager of arts,
Live ever in our thankful hearts. Dryden.

As the pope is a matter of polite learning, and a great encourager of arts; so at Rome these arts immediately thrive, under the encouragement of the prince. Addison.

TO ENCROACH. v. a. [acroccher, from eroc, a hook, French.]

1. To make invasions upon the right of another; to put a hook into another man's possessions to draw them away.

Those Irish captains of counties have encroached upon the queen's freeholders and tenants. Spenser.

2. To advance gradually and by stealth upon that to which one has no right: with on before the subject.

This hour is mine; if for the next I care, I grow too wide,
And do encroach upon death's side. Herbert.
Tisphoney, let loose from under ground,
Before her drives diseases and almight;

And every moment rises to the fight,
Aspiring to the skies, encroaching on the light. Dryd.

TO ENCROACH. v. n.

1. To creep on gradually without right.

The superstition that riseth voluntarily, and by degrees minglith itself with the rites, even of every divine service, done to the only true God, must be considered of as a creeping and encroaching evil.

Th' encroaching ill you early should oppose;
Flatter'd, 'tis worse, and by indulgence grows. Dryd.

2. To pass bounds.

They fabled how the serpent, whom they call'd
Ophion, with Eurynome, the wide
Encroaching Eve perhaps, had first the rule
Of high Olympus. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Next fence'd with hedges and deep ditches round,
Exclude th' encroaching cattle from thy ground. Dryd.

ENCROACHER. n. f. [from encroach.]

1. One who seizes the possession of another by gradual and silent means.

The bold encroachers on the deep,
Gain by degrees huge tracts of land,
'Till Neptune, with one general sweep, Turns all again to barren strand. Swift.

2. One who makes slow and gradual advances beyond his rights.

Full dress creates dignity, augments consciousness, and keeps at distance an encroacher. Clarissa.

ENCROACHMENT. n. f. [from encroach.]

1. An unlawful gathering in upon another man. For example: if two men's grounds lie together, the one presses too far upon the other; or if a tenant owe two shillings rent-service to the lord, and the lord takes three: so the Spencers encroached to themselves royal power and authority. Cowel.

But this usurper his encroachment proud.
Stays not on man: to God his tow'r intends Siege, and defiance. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. To advance into the territories or rights of another.

As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of: this left no room for controversy about the title, nor for encroachment on the right of others. Locke.

The ancient Romans made many encroachments on the sea, and laid the foundations of their palaces within the very borders of it. Addison on Italy.

The people, since the death of Solon, had already made great encroachments. Swift.

TO ENCUMBER. v. a. [encumbrer, French.]

1. To clog; to load; to impede.

We have, by this many years experience, found that exceeding great good, not encumbered with any notable inconvenience. Hooker.

Encumber'd with his vest, without defence. Dryd.

2. To entangle; to embarrass; to obstruct.

The verbal copier is encumbered with so many difficulties at once, that he can never disentangle himself. Dryden.

The god awak'd,
And thrice in vain he shook his wing,
Encumber'd in the silken string. Prior.

3. To load with debts; as, his estate is cumbered with mortgages.

ENCUMBRANCE. n. f. [from encumber.]

1. Clog; load; impediment.

Philosophers agreed in despising riches, at best, considering them as unnecessary encumbrances of life.
Temple.

Dead limbs are an encumbrance to the body, instead of being of use to it. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Excessiveness; useless addition.

Strip from the branching Alps their piny load,
The huge encumbrance of horribl'k woods. Thomson.

3. Burthen upon an estate.

In respect of the encumbrances of a living, consider whether it be sufficient for his family, and to maintain hospitality. Ayl.

ENCYCLICAL. adj. [ἐγκυκλιος.] Circular; sent round through a large region.

This council was not received in patriarchal sees, which is evident from Photius's encyclical epistle to the patriarch of Alexandria. Stillingfleet.

ENCYCLOPEDIA. n. f. [ἐγκυκλοπαιδία.] ENCYCLOPEDIA. The circle of sciences; the round of learning.

In this encyclopædia and round of knowledge, like the great wheels of heaven, we must observe two circles, that while we are daily carried about, and whirled on by the swing and rapt of the one, we may maintain a natural and proper course in the sober wheel of the other. Brown's Vulgar Err.

Every science borrows from all the rest, and we cannot attain any single one without the encyclopædy. Glanville.

This art may justly claim a place in the encyclopædia, especially such as serves for a model of education for an able politician. Arbutnot.

ENCYSTED. adj. [κυστός.] Enclosed in a vesicle or bag.

Encysted tumours borrow their names from a cyst or bag in which they are contained. Sbarp's Surgery.

END. n. f. [εὐς, Saxon.]

1. The extremity of the length of any thing materially extended. Of bodies that have equal dimensions we do not use end: the extremity of breadth is side.
Jonathan put forth the end of the rod that was in his hand, and dipt it in a honeycomb. 1 Sam.
2. Extremity or last part in general.
The extremity and bounds of all bodies we have no difficulty to arrive at; but, when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress into this endless expanse: of that it can neither find, nor conceive any end. Locke.
3. The last particle of any assignable duration.
Behold the day growth to an end. Judges.
At the end of two months she returned. Judges.
If the world's age and death be argu'd well
By the sun's fall, which now tow'rd's earth doth bend,
Then we might fear, that virtue, since she fell
So low as woman, should be near her end. Donne.
4. The conclusion or cessation of any action.
Jacob had made an end of commanding his sons. Gen.
Yet vainly most their age in study spend;
No end of writing books, and to no end. Denham.
The causes and designs of an action are the beginning: the effects of these causes, and the difficulties met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties, are the end. Broom's Epic Poetry.
5. When end is not used materially, it is opposed to beginning.
Better is the end than the beginning thereof. Ecclesi.
6. The conclusion or last part of any thing: as, the end of a chapter; the end of a discourse.
7. Ultimate state; final doom.
Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace. Psalms.
8. The point beyond which no profession can be made.
They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wits end. Pf. cvii. 27.
9. Final determination; conclusion of debate or deliberation.
My guilt be on my head, and there's an end! Shakespeare.
10. Death; fate; decease.
I determine to write the life and end, the nature and the fortunes of George Villiers. Watson.
The soul receives intelligence,
By her near genius, of the body's end,
And so imparts a sadness to the sense. Daniel's Cir.
'Tis in the great business of life to hit ourselves, for our end, and no man can live well that hath not death in his eye. L'Esfrange.

Remember Milo's end,
Wedge'd in that timber which he strove to rend. Roscommon.

My God, my father, and my friend,
Do not forsake me in my end. Roscommon.

Unblam'd through life, lamented in thy end. Pope.

11. Cessation; period.
What is the sign of the end of the world? Matth.
Great houses shall have an end. Amos.
12. Limit; termination.
There is no end of the store. Nabum.
13. Abolition: total loss.
There would be an end of all civil government, if the assignment of civil power were by such institution. Locke.
14. Cause of death; destroyer.
Take heed you dally not before your king,
Lest he that is the supreme King of kings,
Confound your hidden falsehood, and award
Either of you to the other's end. Sbak. Rich. III.
15. Consequence; conclusive event; conclusion.
O, that a man might know
The end of this day's business ere it come!
But it sufficeth that the day will end. Shakespeare.
The end of these things is death. Rom. vi. 21.
16. Fragment; broken piece.
Thus I clothe my naked villainy
With old odd ends, stol'n from Holy Writ,
And seem a saint. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
17. Purpose; intention.
There was a purpose to reduce the monarchy to a republic, which was far from the end and purpose of that nation. Clarendon.
I have lov'd!
What can thy ends, malicious beauty, be?
Can he who kill'd thy brother, live for thee? Dryden.
Heav'n, as its instrument, my courage sends;
Heav'n ne'er sent those who fight for private ends. Dryden.

Others are apt to attribute them to some false end or intention. Addison's Spectator.

18. Thing intended; final design; the termination of intellectual prospect.
Wisdom may have fram'd one and the same thing to serve commodiously for divers ends, and of those ends any one may be sufficient cause for continuance, though the rest have ceased. Hooker.
All those things which are done by him, have some end for which they are done; and the end for which they are done, is a reason of his will to do them. Hooker.
Her only end is never-ending bliss;
Which is, the eternal face of God to see,
Who last of ends, and first of causes is;
And to do this, the most eternal be. Davies.
The end of the commandment is charity. 1 Tim.
'Two things I shall propound to you, as ends; since the wise men of this world have made them theirs. Suckling.
Such conditions did fully comply with all those ends, for which the parliament had first taken up arms. Clarendon.

Hear and mark
To what end I have brought thee hither. Milton.
Life, with my Ludamora, I would chuse;
But, losing her, the end of living lose. Dryden.
For when success a lover's toil attends,
Few ask'd if fraud or force attain'd his ends. Pope.
The end of our fast is to please God, and make him propitious. Smalridge.

19. An END. [Probably corrupted from on end.] Upright; erect: as, his hair stands an end.
20. An END has a signification in low language not easily explained; as, most an end, commonly: perhaps it is properly on end, at the conclusion; or corrupted from some old word not easily recoverable.
Say 'till thou to vex me here?
Slave, that still an end, tames me to thame! Shakespeare.

1. To terminate; to conclude; to finish.
They have ended all my harvest. Ruth.
He would in one battle end quarrel with them, either win or lose the empire. Knolles.
That expensive war under which we have so long groan'd, is not yet ended. Smalridge.
2. To destroy; to put to death.
The lord of Stafford dear to-day hath bought Thy likeness; for instead of thee, King Harry,
This sword hath ended him. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

To END. v. n.

1. To come to an end; to be finished.
Then ease your weary Trojans will attend,
And the long labours of your voyage end. Dryden.
2. To die. [τελευτάω.]
Yet happy were my death, mine ending blest,
If this I could obtain, that, breast to breast,
Thy bosom might receive my yielded spirit. Fairfax.
3. To terminate; to conclude.
Our laughing, if it be loud and high, commonly ends in a deep sigh; and all the instances of pleasure have a sting in the tail. Taylor.
4. To cease; to fail.
His sovereignty, built upon either of these titles, could not have descended to his heir, but must have ended with him. Locke.
5. To conclude action or discourse.
The angel ended, and in Adam's ear
So charming left his voice. Milton.

To ENDA'MAGE. v. a. [from damage.] To mischief; to prejudice; to harm.
Nor ought he car'd whom he endamaged
By tortious wrong, or whom bereav'd of right. Spenser.
It cometh sometime to pass, that a thing unnecessary in itself doth notwithstanding appear convenient to be still held, even without use, left, by reason of that coherence which it hath with somewhat most necessary, the removal of the one should endamage the other. Hooker.
Where your good word cannot advantage him,
Your slander never can endamage him. Shakespeare.
Gather our soldiers, scatter'd and dispers'd,
And lay new platforms to endamage them. Shakespeare.

These banish'd men that I have kept withal, Are men endow'd with worthy qualities. Shakespeare.

With what ease, Endow'd

Endu'd with royal virtues as thou art,
Might'st thou expel this monster from his throne?
Milton.

Whatsoever other knowledge a man may be endowed withal, he is but an ignorant person who doth not know God, the author of his being.
Tilloson.

Every Christian is endued with a power, whereby he is enabled to resist and conquer temptations.
Tilloson.

2. In the following passage it seems incorrectly printed for endow.
Leah said, God hath endued me with a good dowry.

ENDURANCE. n. f. [from endure.]

1. Continuance; lastingness.

Some of them are of very great antiquity and continuance, others more late and of less endurance.
Spenser's Ireland.

2. Patience; sufferance.

Great things of small
One can create; and in what place soe'er
Thrive under evil, and work ease out of pain,
Through labour and endurance.
Milton.

Their fortitude was most admirable in their presence and endurance of all evils, of pain, and of death.
Temple.

3. State of suffering.

I would fain know whether that man takes a rational course to preserve himself, who refuses the endurance of these higher troubles, to secure himself from a condition infinitely more miserable?
South.

4. Delay; procrastination. Obsolete.

I should have ta'en some pains to bring together
Yourself and your accusers, and have heard you,
Without endurance further.
Shakep. Henry VIII.

To ENDURE. v. a. [endurer, French; du-rare, Latin.]

1. To bear; to sustain; to support unbroken.

The hardness of bodies is caused chiefly by the jeuneness of the spirits, and their imparity with the tangible parts, which make them not only hard, but fragile, and less enduring of pressure.
Bacon.

Both were of shining steel, and wrought so pure,
As might the strokes of two such arms endure.
Dryd.

2. To bear with patience.

So dear I love him, that with him all deaths
I could endure; without him, live no life.
Milton.

The gout haunts usually the easy and the rich, the nice and the lazy, who grow to endure much, because they can endure little.
Temple.

By thine own tongue thou art condemn'd, and must Endure our law.
Shakep. Cymbeline.

Taking into the city all such things as they thought needful for the enduring of the siege, they destroyed all the rest.
Knolles's Hist.

3. To undergo; to sustain.

I wish to die, yet dare not death endure.
Dryd.

4. To continue in. Not used.

The deer endureth the womb but eight months,
and is complete at six years.
Brown's Vulg. Err.

To ENDURE. v. n.

1. To last; to remain; to continue.

Labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life.
John.

Doth the crown endure to every generation?
Proverbs.

By being able to repeat measures of time, or ideas of stated length of duration in our minds, we can imagine duration, where nothing does really endure or exist.
Locke.

A charm that shall to age endure

The mind benevolent and pure.
Anon.

2. To brook; to bear; to admit.

For how can I endure to see the evil that shall come unto my people? Or how can I endure to see the destruction of my kindred?
Ezra. viii. 6.

Our great English lords could not endure that any kings should reign in Ireland but themselves; nay, they could hardly endure that the crown of England should have any power over them.
Davies.

ENDURE. n. f. [from endure.]

1. One that can bear or endure; sustainer;
sufferer,

They are very valiant and hardy; for the most part great endurers of cold, labour, hunger, and all hardiness.
Speiser.

2. Continuer; laster.

ENDWISE. adv. [end and wise.] Erectly;
uprightly; on end.

A rude and unpolished America, peopled with stout and naked Indians, living in pitiful huts and cabbins, made of poles set endwise.
Ray on the Great.

To ENECATE. v. a. [eneco, Lat.] To kill;
to destroy.

Some plagues partake of such a pernicious degree of malignity, that, in the manner of a most presen-taneous poison, they enecate in two or three hours, suddenly corrupting or extinguishing the vital spirits.
Harvey on the Plague.

ENEMY. n. f. [enemi, French; inimicus, Latin.]

1. A publick foe.

All these statutes speak of English rebels and Irish enemies, as if the Irish had never been in condition of subjects, but always out of the protection of the law.
Davies on Ireland.

The enemy thinks of raising threescore thousand men for the next summer.
Addison on the War.

2. A private opponent; an antagonist.

I lay unto you, love your enemies.
Matt.

3. Any one who regards another with malevolence; not a friend.

Kent in disguise,
Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service
Improper for a slave.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

4. One that dislikes.

He that designedly uses ambiguities, ought to be looked on as an enemy to truth and knowledge.
Locke.

Bold is the criticke, who dares prove
These heroes were no friends to love;
And bolder he who dares aver,
That they were enemies to war.
Prior.

5. [In theology.] The fiend; the devil.

Defend us from the danger of the enemy.
Common Prayer.

ENERGETICK. adj. [energicus.]

1. Forcible; active; vigorous; powerful in effect; efficacious.

These miasms entering the body, are not so energetic as to venerate the entire mass of blood in an instant.
Harvey.

2. Operative; active; working; not at rest.

If then we will conceive of God truly, and, as far as we can, adequately, we must look upon him not only as an eternal Being, but also as a Being eternally energetic.
Grew.

ENERGY. n. f. [energia.]

1. Power not exerted in action.

They are not effective of any thing, nor leave no work behind them, but are energies merely; for their working upon mirrors, and places of echo, doth not alter any thing in those bodies.
Bacon.

2. Force; vigour; efficacy; influence.

Whether with particles of heavenly fire
The God of nature did his soul inspire;
Or earth, but new divided from the sky,
And pliant still, retain'd th' ethereal energy.
Dryd.

God thinketh with operation infinitely perfect, with an omnipotent as well as an eternal energy.
Grew.

Beg the blessed Jesus to give an energy to your imperfect prayers, by his most powerful intercession.
Smalridge.

What but God!
Inspiring God! who, boundless spirit all,
And unmitting energy, pervades,
Adjusts, sustains, and agitates the whole.
Thomson.

3. Faculty; operation.

Matter, though divided into the subtlest parts, moved swiftly, is senseless and stupid, and makes no approach to vital energy.
Ray.

How can concussion of atoms beget self-consciousness, and powers and energies that we feel in our minds?
Bentley.

4. Strength of expression; force of signification; spirit; life.

Who did ever, in French authours, see

The comprehensive English energy?
Roscommon.

Swift and ready and familiar communication is made by speech; and, when animated by elocution, it acquires a greater life and energy, ravishing and captivating the hearers.
Holder.

Many words deserve to be thrown out of our language, and not a few antiquated to be restored, on account of their energy and sound.
Swift.

To ENERVATE. v. n. [enervo, Lat.] To weaken; to deprive of force; to emasculate.

Great empires, while they stand, do enervate and destroy the forces of the natives which they have subdued, resting upon their own protecting forces.
Bacon.

Sheepish softness often enervates those who are bred like fondlings at home.
Locke.

On each enervate string they taught the note,
To pant, or tremble through an eunuch's throat.
Pope.

Footmen exercise themselves, whilst their enervate lords are softly lolling in their chariots.
Arbutnot and Pope.

ENERVATION. n. f. [from enerve.]

1. The act of weakening; emasculation.

2. The state of being weakened; effeminacy.

To ENERVE. v. a. [enervo, Lat.] To weaken; to break the force of; to crush.

We shall be able to solve and enerve their force.
Digby.

Such object hath the pow'r to soft'n and tame
Severest temper, smoothe the rugged'st brow,
Enerve, and with voluptuous hope dissolve.
Milton.

To ENFAMISH. v. a. [from famis.] To starve; to famish; to kill with hunger.
Diss.

To ENFEEBLE. v. a. [from feeble.] To weaken; to enervate; to deprive of strength.

I've belied a lady,
The princess of this country; and the air on't
Revengingly enfeebles me.
Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

My people are with sickness much enfeebled.
Shak.

Much hath hell debas'd, and pain
Enfeebled me, to what I was in heav'n!
Milton.

Some employ their time in affairs below the dignity of their persons; and being called by God, or the republick, to bear great burdens, do enfeebled their understandings by sordid and brutish business.
Taylor's Rule of living holy.

Sure, nature form'd me of her softest mold,
Enfeebled all my soul with tender passions,
And sunk me even below my own weak sex.
Addif.

To ENFEOFF. v. a. [seoffamentum, low Latin.] To invest with any dignities or possessions. A law term.

If the eldest son enfeoff the second, reserving homage, and that homage paid, and then the eldest son dies without issue, it will descend to the eldest son heir, and the seignory is extinct.
Hale.

ENFEOFFMENT. n. f. [from enfeoff.]

1. The act of enfeoffing.

2. The instrument or deed by which one is invested with possessions.

To ENFETTER. v. a. [from fetter.] To bind in fetters; to enchain. Not in use.

His soul is so enfetter'd to her love,
That she may make, unmake, do what she list.
Shakespeare.

To ENFORCE. v. a. [enforcer, French.]

- To give strength to; to strengthen; to invigorate.
 - To make or gain by force.
The idle stroke, enforcing furious way,
Missing the mark of his mistimed fight,
Did fall to ground. Fairy Queen.
Sometimes with lunatic bans, sometimes with prayers
Enforce their charity. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 - To put in act by violence.
Sker away as swift as stones Enforced from the old Assyrian slings. Shakefp.
 - To infligate; to provoke; to urge on;
to animate.
Fear gave her wings, and rage enforc'd my flight
Through woods and plains. Fairy Queen.
If you knew to whom you shew this honour,
I know you would be prouder of the work,
Than customary bounty can enforce you. Shakefp.
 - To urge with energy.
All revoke
Your ignorant election; enforce his pride,
And his old hate to you. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
He prevailed with him, by enforcing the ill consequence of his refusal to take the office, which would be interpreted to his dislike of the court.
Clarendon.
To avoid all appearance of disaffection, I have taken care to enforce loyalty by an invincible argument. Swift.
 - To compel; to constrain.
For competence of life I will allow you,
That lack of means enforce you not to evil. Shakefp.
A just disdain conceived by that queen, that so wicked a rebel should prevail against her, did move and almost enforce her to send over that mighty army. Davies on Ireland.
 - To press with a charge. Little used.
In this point charge him home, that he affects Tyrannick pow'r: If he evade us there,
Enforce him with his envy to the people,
And that the spoils got on the Antiates
Was ne'er distributed. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
- To ENFORCE. v. n. To prove; to evince;
to shew beyond contradiction.
Which laws in such case we must obey, unless there be reason shewed, which may necessarily enforce that the law of reason, or of God, doth enjoin the contrary. Hooker.
- ENFORCE. n. f. [from force.] Power;
strength. Not used.
He now defies thee chace to single fight,
As a petty enterprise of small enforce. Milton.
- ENFORCEDLY. adv. [from enforce.] By violence; not voluntarily; not spontaneously; not by choice.
If thou did'st put this fow'r cold habit on,
To castigate thy pride, 'twere well, but thou Dost it enforcedly: thou'dst courtier be,
Wert thou not beggar. Shakespeare's Timon.
- ENFORCEMENT. n. f. [from enforce.]
1. An act of violence; compulsion; force offered.
Confess 'twas hers, and by what rough enforcement
You got it from her. Shakespeare.
He that contendeth against these enforcements, may easily master or resist them. Raleigh's History.
- Sanction; that which gives force to a law.
The rewards and punishments of another life, which the Almighty has established as the enforcements of his law, are of weight enough to determine the choice. Locke.
 - Motive of conviction; urgent evidence.
The personal descent of God himself, and his assumption of our flesh to his divinity, was an enforcement beyond all the methods of wisdom that were ever made use of in the world. Hammond.
 - Pressing exigence.
More than I have said,
The leisure and enforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell on. Shakefp. Rich. III.

ENFORCER. n. f. [from enforce.] Compeller; one who effects by violence.

When a man tumbles a cylinder or roller down an hill, 'tis certain that the man is the violent enforcer of the first motion of it. Hammond.

ENFOULDRED. adj. [from foudre, French.]
Mixed with lightning. Obsolete.

Heart cannot think what courage and what cries,
With foul enfolded furore and flashing fire,
The hell-bred beast threw forth unto the skies.
Fairy Queen.

To ENFRANCHISE. v. a. [from franchise.]
1. To admit to the privileges of a freeman.

The English colonies, and some sept of the Irishry, enfranchised by special charters were admitted to the benefit of the laws. Davies.

Romulus was the natural parent of all those people that were the first inhabitants of Rome, or of those that were after incorporated and enfranchised into that name, city, or government. Hale.

2. To set free from slavery.

Men, forbearing wine, come from drinking healths to a draught at a meal; and, lastly, to discontinue altogether: but if a man have the fortitude and resolution to enfranchise himself at once, that is the best. Bacon's Essays.

If they won a battle, prisoners became slaves, and
by their masters. Temple.

3. To free or release from custody.

His mistress
Did hold his eyes lockt in her crystal looks.
—Belike, that now she hath enfranchis'd them,
Upon some other paw for fealty Shakespeare.

4. To denizen; to endenizen.

These words have been enfranchised amongst us.
Watts.

ENFRANCHISEMENT. n. f. [from enfranchise.]

1. Investiture of the privilege of a denizen.

The incorporating a man into any society, or body politick. For example, he that is by charter made denizen of England, is said to be enfranchised; and so is he that is made a citizen of London, or other city, or burghs of any town corporate, because he is made partaker of those liberties that appertain to the corporation. Cowel.

His coming hither hath no farther scope,
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg Enfranchisement immediate on his knees, Shakefp.

2. Release from prison or from slavery.

Never did captive with a freer heart
Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace
His golden uncontroll'd enfranchisement. Shakefp.

ENFROZEN. particip. [from frozen.] Con-gealed with cold. Not used.

Yet to augment the anguish of my smart,
Thou hast enfrozen her disdainful breast,
That no one drop of pity there doth rest. Spenser.

To ENGAGE. v. a. [engager, French.]

1. To make liable for a debt to a creditor.

I have engag'd myself to a dear friend,
Engag'd my friend to his mere enemy,
To feed my means. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.

2. To impawn; to stake.

They most perfidiously condemn
Those that engag'd their lives for them. Hudibras.

3. To enlist; to bring into a party.

All wicked men are of a party against religion:
some lust or interest engageth them against it. Tillot.

4. To embark in an affair.

So far had we engag'd ourselves, unfortunate souls, that we list not to complain, since our complaints could not but carry the greatest accusation to ourselves. Sidney.

Before I engage myself in giving any answer to this objection of inconspicuous lights, I would see the effect certainly averred. Digby.

5. To unite; to attach; to make adherent.

Good-nature engages every body to him. Addison.

6. To induce; to win by pleasing means; to gain.

To ev'ry duty he could mind engage,
Provoke their courage, and command their rage.
Waller.

His beauty these, and those his blooming age,
The rest his house and his own fame engage. Dryd.
So shall I court thy dearest truth,
When beauty ceases to engage;

So thinking on thy charming youth,
I'll love it o'er again in age. Prior.

7. To bind by any appointment or contract.

We have been firm to our allies, without declining any expence to which we had engaged ourselves, and we have even exceeded our engagement.
Aterbury.

8. To seize by the attention: as, he was deeply engaged in conversation.

9. To employ; to hold in business.
For I shall sig of battles, blood, and rage,
Which princes and their people did engage. Dryden.

10. To encounter; to fight.

of Holland was sent with a body to meet and engage with it. Clarendon.

2. To embark in any business; to enlist in any party.

'Tis not indeed my talent to engage
In lofty trifles, or to swell my page
With wind and noise. Dryden's Persius.

ENGAGEMENT. n. f. [from engage, engagement, French.]

1. The act of engaging, impawning, or making liable to a debt.

2. Obligation by contract.

We have, in expence, exceeded our engagement.
Aterbury.

3. Adherence to a party or cause; partiality.

This practice may be obvious to any who impartially, and without engagement, is at the pains to examine. Swift.

4. Employment of the attention.

Play, either by our too constant or too long engagement in it, becomes like an employment or profession.
Rogers.

5. Fight; conflict; battle. A word very poetical.

Our army, led by valiant Torrismond,
Is now in hot engagement with the Moors. Dryden.
Encourag'd by despair, or obstinate
To fall like men in arms, some dare renew,
Feeble engagement, meeting glorious fate
On the firm land. Philips.

6. Obligation; motive.

This is the greatest engagement not to forfeit an opportunity. Ham.

To ENGAGE. v. a. [from gaol.] To imprison; to confine.

Within my mouth you have engag'd my tongue,
Doubly portcullis'd with my teeth and lips. Shakefp.

To ENGARRISON. v. a. [from garrison.]

Neptune with a guard doth engarrison her strongly.
Howel.

To ENGENER. v. a. [engenderer, French.]

1. To beget between different sexes.

This bastard love is engendered betwixt lust and idleness.

2. To produce; to form.

Oh nature! thou, who of the self-same mettle,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man is pufft, Engender'st the black toad and adder blue. Shakefp.

Again, if souls do other souls beget,

'Tis by themselves, or by the body's pow'r:

If by themselves, what doth their working let,

But they might souls engender ev'ry hour? Davies.

3. To excite; to cause; to produce.

Say, can you fast? Your stomachs are too young,
And abstinence engenders maladies. Shakespeare.

The presence of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects and his loyal friends. Shakefp.

That engenders thunder in his breast,
And makes him roar these accusations forth. Shaksp.
It unloads the mind, engenders thoughts, and animates virtue. Addison.

4. To bring forth.
Vice engenders shame, and folly brood's o'er grief. Prior.

To ENGE'NDER. v. n. To be caused; to be produced.
Thick clouds are spread, and storms engender there. Dryden.

ENGINE. n. f. [engin, French; ingegno, Italian.]

1. Any mechanical complication, in which various movements and parts concur to one effect.

2. A military machine.
This is our engine, towers that overthrows;
Our spear that hurts, our sword that wounds our foes. Fairf.

3. Any instrument.
The sword, the arrow, the gun, with many terrible engines of death, will be well employed. Raleigh.
He takes the scissars, and extends
The little engine on his finger ends. Pope.

4. Any instrument to throw water upon burning houses.
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play;
And some, more bold, mouset ladders to the fire. Dryden.

5. Any means used to bring to pass, or to effect. Usually in an ill sense.
Prayer must be divine and heavenly, which the devil with all his engines so violently opposeth. Duppa's Rules for Devotion.

6. An agent for another. In contempt.
They had the especial engines been, to rear,
His fortunes up into the state they were. Daniel.

ENGINEER. n. f. [ingenieur, French.]
One who manages engines: one who directs the artillery of an army.
For 'tis the sport to have the engineer
Hoist with his own petard. Shakspere's Hamlet.
Him thus enrag'd,
Deserving from afar, some engineer,
Dext'rous to guide th' unerring charge, design'd,
By one nice shot, to terminate the war. Pbllips.
An author, who points his satire at a great man, is like the engineer who signalized himself by this ungenueous practice. Addison.

ENGINEERY. n. f. [from engine.]

1. The act of managing artillery.
They may defend in mathematicks to fortification, architecture, engineery, or navigation. Milton.

2. Engines of war; artillery.

Approaching, grofs and huge, in hollow cube Training his devilish engineery. Milton.

To ENGI'RD. v. a. [from gird.] To encircle; to surround; to environ; to encompass.

My heart is drown'd with grief,
My body round engirt with misery;
For what's more miserable than discontent? Shaksp.
That gold must round engirt these brows of mine. Shakspere.

ENGLISH. adj. [engler, Saxon.] Belonging to England; thence English is the language of England.

He hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian; and you may come into the court, and swear that I have a poor pennyworth in the English. Shakspere.
Of English tale, the coarser sort is call'd plaister, or parget; the finer, spoad. Woodward.

To ENGLISH. v. a. [from the noun.] To translate into English.

The hollow instrument terebra, we may english piercer. Bacon.

We find not a word in the text can properly be rendered anise, which is what the Latins call anethum, and properly englished dill. Brown.

To ENGLU'T. v. a. [engloutir, French.]

1. To swallow up. It is now little used in any sense.

Neither my place, nor ought I heard of business,
Hath rais'd me from my bed; nor doth the general
Take hold on me: for my particular grief
Englutns and swallows other sorrows. = Shakspere.
Certainly, thou art so near the gulf,
Thou needs must be englutied. Shaksp. Henry V.
How many prodigal bits have slaves and peasants
This night englutted! Shakspere's Timon.

2. To fill.
Whose grieved minds, which choler did englut,
Against themselves turning their wrathful sight. Spenser.

3. To glut; to pamper.
Being once englutted with vanity, he will straightway loath all learning. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

To ENGO'RE. v. a. [from gore.] To pierce; to prick. Not used.

As savage bull, whom two fierce mastiffs bait,
When rancour doth with rage him once engore,
Forgets with wary ward them to await,
But with his dreadful horns them drives asore. Spensf.

To ENGO'RGE. v. a. [from gorge, French, a throat.] To swallow; to devour; to gorge.

This fraught with rancour and engorged ire,
He cast at once him to avenge for all. Spenser.
That is the gulf of greediness, they say,
That deep engorgeth all this world is prey. Spenser.

To ENGO'RGE. v. n. To devour; to feed with eagerness and voracity; to riot.
Greedily the engorg'd without restraint,
And knew not eating death? Milton's Par. Lost.

To ENGRA'IL. v. a. [from grele, French, hail.] To variegate; to spot as with hail. A word now used only in heraldry, for to indent in curve lines.
Æacides then thews
A long lance, and a caldron, new engrail'd with twenty hues. Chapman's Iliads.

Polwheel beareth a faultier engrail'd. Carriv.

To ENGRA'IN. v. a. [from grain.] To die deep; to die in grain.

See thou how fresh my flowers being spread,
Dyed in lillie white and crimson red,
With leaves engrain'd in lully green. Spensf.

To ENGRAPPLE. v. a. [from grapple.] To close with; to contend with hold on each other.

There shall young Hotspur, with a fury led,
Engrapple with thy son, as fierce as he. Daniel.

To ENGRASP. v. a. [from grasp.] To seize; to hold fast in the hand; to gripe.

Now 'gan Pyrocles wax as wood as he,
And him affronted with impatient might;
And both together fierce engrasped he,
Whiles Guyon standing by, their uncouth strife does see. Spensf.

To ENGRA'VE. v. a. preter. engraved; part. pass. engraved or engraven. [engraver, French.]

1. To picture by incisions in any matter.
Her ivory forehead, full of bounty brave,
Like a broad table, did itself dispread,
For love his lofty triumphs to engrave,
And write the battles of his great godhead. Fairy Q.
O'er all, the heav'n's respligent image shines;
On either gate were six engraven signs. Addison.
Names fresh engrav'd appear'd of wits renown'd;
I look'd again, nor could their trace be found. Pope.

2. To mark wood or stone.
Engrave the two stones with the names. Ex. xxviii. 11.

3. To impress deeply; to imprint.
It will scarce seem possible, that God should engrave principles, in men's minds, in words of uncertain signification. Locke.
Our Saviour makes this return, fit to be engraven in the hearts of all promoters of charity. Aiterbury.

Sounds which address the ear, are lost and die in one short hour; but that which strikes the eye,

Lives long upon the mind: the faithful light
Engraves the knowledge with a beam of light. Watts.

4. [from grave.] To bury; to inhume; to inter.

The sun had charge of them, now being dead,
In seemly fort their corse to engrave,
And deck with dainty flowers their bridal bed. Spensf.

ENGRA'VE. n. f. [from engrave.] A cutter in stone or other matter.
Images are not made in the brain itself, as the pencil of a painter or engraver makes the images in the table, but are imprinted in a wonderful method in the soul. Hale.

To ENGRIVE. v. a. [from grieve.] To pain; to vex; to afflict; to disconsolate.

The gnawing anguish, and sharp jealousy,
Which his sad speech infix'd in my breast,
Rankled so sore, and fester'd inwardly,
That my griev'd mind could find no rest. Fairy Q.
Aches, and hurts, and cords, do engrieve either towards rain, or towards frost. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To ENGROSS. v. a. [grossir, French.]

1. To thicken; to make thick.
But more happy he than wife,
Of that sea's nature did him not advise;
The waves thereof so slow and sluggish were,
Engross'd with mud, which did them soul agrieve,
That every weighty thing they did upheave. Fairy Q.

2. To encrease in bulk.
Though pillars, by channeling, be seemingly engraffed to our sight, yet they are truly weakened in themselves. Wotton.

3. To fatten; to plump up.
Not sleeping, to engross his idle body;
But praying, to enrich his watchful soul. Shaksp.

4. To seize in the gross; to seize the whole of any thing.

If thou engraffest all the griefs as thine,
Thou robb't it me of a moiety. Shakspere.
Those two great things that so engross the desires and designs of both the nobler and ignobler sort of mankind are to be found in religion; namely, wisdom and pleasure. South.

A dog, a parrot, or an ape,
Or some worse brute in human shape,
Engross the fancies of the fair. Swift.

5. To purchase the whole of any commodity for the sake of selling at a high price.

6. To copy in a large hand.

Here is the indictment of the good lord Hastings.
Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd. Shaksp.
A clerk, foredoom'd his father's soul to cross,
Who pens a stanza when he should engross. Pope.

ENGROSSER. n. f. [from engross.] He that purchases large quantities of any commodity, in order to sell it at a high price.

A new sort of engrossers, or forestallers, having the seeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen in the woollen manufactures, out of their warehouses, set the price upon the poor landholder. Locke.

ENGROSSMENT. n. f. [from engross.] Appropriation of things in the gross; exorbitant acquisition.

Our thighs are pack't with wax, our mouths with honey:

We bring it to the hive; and, like the bees,
Are murder'd for our pains! This bitter taste Yield his engrossments to the dying father. Shaksp.
Those held their immoderate engrossments of power and favour by no other tenure than presumption. Swift.

To ENGUARD. v. a. [from guard.] To protect; to defend; to surround as guards.

Not used.
A hundred knights! yes, that on ev'ry dream
He may enguard his dotage with their pow'rs,
And hold our lives at mercy. Shaksp. King Lear.

To ENHAUCE. v. a. [hausser, enhausser, French.]

1. To lift up; to raise on high. A sense now obsolete.

4 R Both

Both of them high at once their hands enbane'd,
And both at once their huge blows down did sway.

Spenser.

2. To raise; to advance; to heighten in price.

The desire of money is every where the same; its vent varies very little, but as its greater scarcity enbances its price, and increases the sumable. Locke.

3. To raise in esteem.

What is it but the experience of want that enbances the value of plenty? L'Esrange.

The remembrance of the difficulties we now undergo, will contribute to enbance our pleasure. Atterbury.

4. To aggravate; to increase from bad to worse.

To believe or pretend that whatever our hearts incite is the will of God within us, is the principle of villainy that hath acted in the children of disobedience, enbanced and improved with circumstances of greater impudence than the most abominable heathens were guilty of. Hammond.

The relation which those children bore to the priesthood, contributed to enbance their guilt, and increase their punishment. Atterbury.

ENHANCEMENT. n. s. [from enbance.]

1. Encrease; augmentation of value.

Their yearly rents are not improved, the landlords making no less gain by fines than by enbancement of rents. Bacon.

2. Aggravation; increase of ill.

Jocular slanders have, from the slightness of the temptation, an enbancement of guilt. Government of the Tongue.

ENIGMA. n. s. [ænigma, Lat. ænygma.]

A riddle; an obscure question; a position expressed in remote and ambiguous terms.

The dark enigma will allow
A meaning; which, if well I understand,
From sacrilege will free the god's command. Dryd.

A custom was amongst the ancients of proposing an enigma at festivals, and adjudging a reward to him that solved it. Pope.

ENIGMATICAL. adj. [from ænigma.]

1. Obscure; ambiguously or darkly expressed.

Your answer, sir, is enigmatical. Shakesp.
Enigmatical deliveries comprehend useful veilities; but being mistaken by liberal expositors at first, they have been misunderstood by most since. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Whilst they affect enigmatical obscurity, they puzzle the readers of their divulged processes. Boyle.
Athenæus gives instances of the enigmatical propositions in use at Athens, and of the forfeitures and rewards upon the solution or nonsolution. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.

2. Cloudy; obscurely conceived or apprehended.

Faith here is the assent to those things which come to us by hearing, and are so believed by adherence, or dark enigmatical knowledge, but hereafter are seen or known demonstratively. Hammond.

ENIGMATICALY. adv. [from ænigma.] In a sense different from that which the words in their familiar acceptation imply.

Homer speaks enigmatically, and intends that these monsters are merely the creation of poetry. Broom.

ENIGMATIST. n. s. [from ænigma.] One who deals in obscure and ambiguous matters; maker of riddles.

That I may deal more ingenuously with my reader than the above-mentioned enigmatist has done, I shall present him with a key to my riddle. Addison.

TO ENJOIN. v. a. [enjoindre, French.] To direct; to order; to prescribe. It is more authoritative than direct, and less imperious than command.

To satisfy the good old man,
I would bend under any heavy weight
That he'll enjoin me to. Shakesp. Much Ado.

Monks and philosophers, and such as do continually enjoin themselves. Bacon's Natural History.

It endeavours to secure every man's interest, by enjoining that truth and fidelity be inviolably preserved. Tillotson.

ENJOINER. n. s. [from enjoin.] One who gives injunctions. Dist.

ENJOINMENT. n. s. [from enjoin.] Direction; command.

TO ENJOY. v. a. [jouir, enjoir, French.]

1. To feel or perceive with pleasure; to have a pleasing sense of; to be delighted with.

I could enjoy the pangs of death,
And smile in agony. Addison's Cato.

2. To obtain possession or fruition of.

Edward the saint, in whom it pleased God, righteous and just, to let England see what a blessing sin and iniquity would not suffer it to enjoy. Hooker.

He, who, to enjoy
Plato's clysmum, leap'd into the sea, Cleombrotus. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. To please; to gladden; to exhilarate; to glad; to delight. This sense is usual with the reciprocal pronoun, and is derived from enjoir.

Creatures are made to enjoy themselves, as well as to serve us. More.

When a man shall, with a sober, sedate, diabolical rancour, look upon and enjoy himself in the sight of his neighbour's sin and shame, can he plead the instigation of any appetite in nature? Soub.

TO ENJOY. v. n. To live in happiness.

Then I shall be no more!
And Adam, wedded to another Eve,
Shall live with her enjoying, I extinct. Milton.

ENJOYER. n. s. [from enjoy.] One that has fruition or possession. Dist.

ENJOYMENT. n. s. [from enjoy.] Pleasure; happiness; fruition.

His hopes and expectations are bigger than his enjoyments. Tillotson.

TO ENKINDLE. v. a. [from kindle.]

1. To set on fire; to inflame; to put in a flame.

Edmund, enkindle all the sparks of nature
To quit this horrid act. Shakesp. King Lear.

2. To rouse passions; to set the soul into a flame.

Your hand
Gave sign for me to leave you: so I did,
Fearing to strengthen that impatience,
Which seem'd too much enkindled. Shakesp.

3. To incite to any act or hope.

Do you not hope your children shall be kings,
When those who gave the thane of Cawder to me,
Promis'd no less to them?
—That, trusted home,
Might yet enkindle you unto the crown. Shakesp.

TO ENLARGE. v. a. [enlargir, French.]

The wall, in lustre and effect like glass,
Which o'er each object casting various dyes,
Enlarges some, and others multiplies. Pope.

2. To increase any thing in magnitude; to extend.

Where there is something both lasting and scarce, and so valuable to be hoarded up, there men will not be apt to enlarge their possessions of land. Locke.

3. To increase by representation; to magnify; to exaggerate.

To dilate; to expand.

O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you,
our heart is enlarged. 2 Cor. vi. 11.

5. To set free from limitation.

Though she appear honest to me, yet at other places

she enlargeth her mirth so far, that there is shew'd construction made of her. Shakesp.

6. To extend to more purposes or uses.

It hath grown from no other root than only a desire to enlarge the necessary use of the word of God, which desire hath begotten an error, enlarging it farther than soundness of truth will bear. Hooker.

7. To amplify; to aggrandise.

This is that science which would truly enlarge men's minds, were it studied. Locke.

Could the mind as in number, come to so small a part of extension or duration as excluded divisibility, that would be the indivisible unit, or idea; by repetition of which it would make its more enlarged ideas of extension and duration. Locke.

8. To release from confinement.

Enlarge the man committed yesterday,
That rail'd against our person. Shakesp. Henry V.

9. To diffuse in eloquence.

They enlarged themselves upon this subject with all the invidious insinuations they could devise. Clarendon.

TO ENLARGE. v. n.

1. To expatiate; to speak in many words.

1. To make quick; to make alive; to animate.
These great orbs thus radically bright,
Primitive founts and origins of light,
Enliven worlds denied to human light. Priest.
In a glass-house the workmen often fling in a small quantity of fresh coals, which seems to disturb the fire, but very much enlivens it. Swift.
2. To make vigorous or active.
3. To make sprightly or vivacious.
4. To make gay or cheerful in appearance.

ENLIVENER. n. s. [from enliven.] That which animates; that which puts in motion; that which invigorates.

- But fire th' enlivenance of the general frame,
Is one, its operation still the same;
Its principle is in itself; while ours
Works, as confederates war, with mingled pow'rs. Dryden.

To ENLUMINE. v. n. [enluminer, French.] To illumine; to illuminate; to enlighten. Not in use.

- For having yet, in his deducted sight,
Some sparks remaining of that heav'nly fire,
He is enlumin'd with that goodly light,
Unto like goodly semblance to aspire. Spenser.

ENMITY. n. s. [from enemy; as if enemity, inamity.]

1. Unfriendly disposition; malevolence; aversion.
Their being forced to their books, in an age at enmity with all restraint, has been the reason why many have hated books. Locke.
2. Contrariety of interests or inclinations; mutual malignity.
They shall within this hour,
On a dissent of a doit break out
In bitterest enmity. Shakespere's Coriolanus.
Between thee and the woman I will put Enmity; and between thine and her seed:
Her seed shall bruise thy head, thou bruise his heel. Milton.

- How far those controversies, and appearing enmities of those glorious creatures, may be carried, is not my business to shew or determine. Dryden.
3. State of opposition.
Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God?
You must firmly be convinced, that every sin you commit sets you at enmity with heaven, and will, if not forsaken, render you incapable of it. Wake.

4. Malice; mischievous attempts.
I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To wage against the enmity o' th' air. Shakespere.

He who performs his duty in a station of great power, must needs incur the utter enmity of many, and the high displeasure of more. Atterbury.

2. Completely; fully.

Here finish'd he, and all that he had made View'd, and beheld! all was entirely good. Milton.

Chyle may be said to be a vegetable juice in the stomach and intestines; as it passeth into the lacteals it grows still more animal, and when it has circulated often with the blood, it is entirely so. Arbutnot.

General consent entirely altered the whole frame of their government. Swift.

3. With firm adherence; faithfully.

Which when his pensive lady saw from far,
Great woe and sorrow did her soul assay,
As weening at the sad end of the war,
And 'gan to highest God entirely pray. Fairy Queen.

ENTIRENESS. n. s. [from entire.]

1. Totality; completeness; fulness.

In an arch, each single stone, which, if severed from the rest, would be perhaps defenceless, is sufficiently secured by the solidity and entireness of the whole fabrick, of which it is a part. Boyle.

2. Honesty; integrity.

TO ENTITILE. v. a. [entituler, French.]

1. To grace or dignify with a title or honourable appellation.

2. To give a title or discriminative appellation; as, to entitle a book.

Besides the Scripture, the books which they call ecclesiastical were thought not unworthy to be brought into publick audience, and with that name they entitled the books which we term Apocryphal. Hooker.

Next favourable thou,
Who highly thus to entitle me vouchsaf'st Far other name deserving! Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. To superscribe, or prefix as a title.

How ready zeal for party is to entitle christianity to their designs, and to charge atheism on those who will not submit. Locke.

We have been entitled, and have had our names prefixed at length to whole volumes of mean productions. Swift.

4. To give a claim to any thing.

But we, descended from your sacred line
Entitled to your heav'n, and rites divine,
Are banish'd earth. Dryden's Virgil.

God discovers the martyr and confessor without the trial of flames and tortures, and will hereafter entitle many to the rewards of admision which they had never the opportunity of performing. Addison.

He entitled himself to the continuance of the divine protection and goodness, by humiliation and prayer. Atterbury.

Hardly even is the penitent sinner saved; thus difficult is that duty, by which alone he can be reconciled to his Creator, and entitled to the mercies of the gospel. Rogers.

5. To grant a thing as claimed by a title.

This is to entitle God's care how and to what we please. Locke.

ENTITY. n. s. [entitas, low Latin.]

1. Something which really is; a real being.

Dear hope, earth's dowry and heaven's debt,
The entity of things that are not yet:
Subtlest, but surest being. Crispian.

Fortune is no real entity, nor physical efficacy, but a mere relative signification. Bentley.

Here entity and quiddity,
The souls of desunct bodies fly. Hudibras.

2. A particular species of being.

All eruptions of air, though small and slight, give an entity of sound, which we call crackling, puffing, and spitting; as in bay salt and bay leaves, cast into the fire. Bacon.

God's decrees of salvation and damnation, both Romish and Reformed, affix to men's particular entity, absolutely considered, without any respect to demeanours. Hammond's Fundamentals.

TO ENTOIL. v. a. [from toil.] To ensnare; to entangle; to bring into toils or nets.

He cut off their land-forces from their ships, and entailed both their navy and their camp with a greater power than theirs, both by sea and land. Bacon.

TO ENTOMB. v. a. [from tomb.] To put into a tomb; to bury.

Processions were first begun for the interring of holy martyrs, and the visiting of those places where they were entombed. Hooker.

The cry went once for thee, and yet it may again,
If thou wouldst not entomb thyself alive,
And cause thy reputation in a tent. Shakespeare.

They within the bea'st's vast womb,
The choice and flower of all their troops entomb'd. Denham.

ENTRAILS. n. s. without a singular. [entrailles, Fr. entræa.]

1. The intestines; the inward parts; the guts.

What, hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine entrails,
That not a tear can fall? Shakesp. Henry VI.

Tho

The entrails are all without bones; save that a bone is sometimes found in the heart of a stag.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

I fear that harden'd heart from out her breast,
Which with her entrails makes my hungry hounds a feast.

Dryden.

2. The internal parts.

A precious ring that lightens all the hole,
And shews the ragged entrails of this pit.

Shakespeare.

He had brought to light but little of that treasure, that lay so long hid in the dark entrails of America.

Locke.

The earth hath lost

Most of her ribs, as entrails; being now,
Wounded no less for marble than for gold.

Ben. Jonson.

To ENTRAIL. v. a. [intralciare, Italian.]

To mingle; to interweave; to diversify.

Over him, art striving to compare
With nature, did an arbor green dispreed,
Framed of wanton ivy, flow'ring fair,
Through which the fragrant eglantine did spread,
His pricking arms entail'd with roses red.

Fairy Q.

A little wicker basket,
Made of fiae twigs, entrail'd curiously,
In which they gather'd flowers.

Spenser's Protbal.

ENTRANCE. n. s. [entrant, French.]

1. The power of entering into a place.

Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions? Pray, get you out.

Shakespeare.

Where diligence opens the door of the understanding, and impartially keeps it, truth is sure to find both an entrance and a welcome too.

Smitb.

2. The act of entering.

The reason, that I gather, he is mad,
Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner,
Of his own door being shut against his entrance.

Shakespeare.

Better far, I guess,

That we do make our entrance several ways.

All the world's a stage,

And all the men and women merely players;
They have their exits and their entrances.

Shakespeare.

3. The passage by which a place is entered; avenue.

He charged them to keep the passages of the hilly country; for by them there was an entrance into Judea.

Judith.

Palladio did conclude, that the principal entrance was never to be regulated by any certain dimensions, but by the dignity of the maister.

Wotton.

Many are the ways that lead
To his grim cave, all dismal! yet to sense
More terrible at th' entrance than within.

Milton.

Let this, and every other anxious thought,
At th' entrance of my threshold be forgot.

Dryden.

4. Initiation; commencement.

This is that which, at first entrance baulks and cools them: they want their liberty.

Locke.

Hakewell on Providence.

The earl of Holland we have had occasion to mention before in the first entrance upon this discourse.

Clarendon.

To ENTRANCE. v. n. [from trance; transse, French, from transco, Latin, to pass over; to pass for a time from one region to another.]

1. To put into a trance; to withdraw the soul wholly to other regions, while the body appears to lie in a dead sleep.

2. To put into an extasy; to make insensible of present objects.

With delight I was entranced, and carried so far from myself, as that I am sorry that you ended so soon.

Spenser.

Adam, now enfore'd to close his eyes,
Sunk down, and all his spirits became entrac'd.

Milton.

And I so ravish'd with her heav'nly note,
I stood entrac'd, and had no room for thought;
But all o'erpower'd with ecstacy of bliss,
Was in a pleasing dream of paradise.

Dryden.

To ENTRAP. v. a. [from trap.]

1. To ensnare; to catch in a trap or snare.

Take heed mine eyes, how ye do stare
Henceforth too rashly on that guileful net;
In which, if ever eyes entrap'd are,
Out of her hands ye by no means shall get.

Spenser.

The fraud of England, not the force of France,
Hath now entrap'd the noble-minded Talbot.

Shak.

2. To involve unexpectedly in difficulties or distresses; to entangle.

Misfortune waits advantage to entrap
The man most wary, in her whelming lap.

Isaac entreated the Lord for his wife.

Gen. xxxv. 21.

2. To prevail upon by solicitation.

I have a wife, whom I protest, I love;
I would she were in heaven, so she could entreat some pow'r to change this curriish Jew.

Shakespeare.

The Lord was entreated of him, and Rebecca his wife conceived.

Gen. xxv. 21.

It were a fruitless attempt to appease a power, whom no prayers could entreat, no repentance reconcile.

Rogers.

3. To treat or use well or ill.

Whereas thy servant worketh truly, entreat him not evil.

Ecclef. vii. 20.

Must you, sir John, protect my lady here?
Entreat her not the worse in that I pray
You use her well.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Well I entreated her, who well deserv'd:
I call'd her often; for she always serv'd:
Use made her person easy to my sight,
And ease insensibly produc'd delight.

Prior.

4. To entertain; to amuse. Not used.

My lord, I must entreat the time alone.
—God shield I should disturb devotion.

Shakespeare.

5. To entertain; to receive. Not in use.

The garden of Proserpino this night,
And in the midst thereof a silver seat,
With a thick arbour goodly overdight,
In which the often us'd, from open heat,
Herself to shroud, and pleasures to entreat.

Fairy Q.

To ENTRE'AT. v. n.

1. To offer a treaty or compact. Not used.

Alexander was the first that entreated peace with them.

Mac.

2. To treat; to discourse. Not used.

The most admirable mystery of nature is the turning of iron, touch'd with the loadstone, toward the North-pole, of which I shall have farther occasion to entreat.

Hakewill.

3. To make a petition.

They charged me, on pain of perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, or any way sustain him.

Shakespeare.

The Janizaries entreated for them, as valiant men.

Knolles.

ENTRE'ATANCE. n. s. [from entreat.] Petition; entreaty; solicitation. Not used.

These two entreatance made they might be heard, Nor was their just petition long deny'd.

Fairfax.

ENTREATY. n. s. [from entreat.] Petition; prayer; solicitation; supplication; request.

If my weak orator
Can from his mother win the duke of York, Anon expect him here; but if he be Obdurate to entreaties, God forbid

We should infringe the holy privilege
Of sanctuary.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

ENTREMETS. n. s. [French.] Small plates set between the main dishes.

Chards of beet are plants of white beet transplanted, producing great tops, which, in the midst, have a large white main shoot, which is the true chard used in pottages and entremets.

Mortimer.

ENTRY. n. s. [from enter; entrée, French.]

1. The passage by which any one enters a house.

Some there are that know the resorts and falls of business, that cannot sink into the main of it; like a house that hath convenient stairs and entries, but never a fair room.

Bacon.

A fruit long entry to the temple led,
Blind with high walls, and horror over head.

Dryd.

Is all this hurry made
On this account, because thou art afraid
A dirty hall or entry should offend.

Dryd.

The curious eyes of thy invited friend?
We proceeded through the entry, and were necessarily kept in order by the situation.

Taiter.

2. The act of entrance; ingrefs.

Bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emolition; and the mixture of oil and water is better than either of them alone, because water enteteth better into the pores, and oil after entry fasteneth better.

Bacon's Natural History.

The lake of Constance is formed by the entry of the Rhine.

Addison.

By the entry of the chyle and air into the blood, by the lacteals, the animal may again revive.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. To cover; to hide; to surround.

The best and wholesom'st spirits of the night envelop you, good provost.

Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas.

A cloud of smoke envelops either host,
And all at once the combatants are lost:
Darkling they join adverse, and shock unseen,
Courfers with courfers jutting, men with men.

Dryd.

It is but to approach nearer, and that mist that envelops them will remove.

Nocturnal shades

This world envelops, and th' inclement air
Persuades men to repel benumbing frosts.

Philips.

3. To line; to cover on the inside.

His iron coat, all overgrown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Dark'ned with filthy dust.

Fairy Queen.

ENVELOPE. n. s. [French.] A wrapper; an outward case; an integument; a cover.

Send these to paper-sparing Pope;
And, when he sits to write,
No letter with an envelope
Could give him more delight.

Swift.

To ENVE'NOM. v. a. [from venom.]

1. To tinge with poison; to poison; to impregnate with venom. It is never used of the person to whom poison is given, but of the draught, meat, or instrument by which it is conveyed.

The treacherous instrument is in thy hand,
Unbated and envenom'd.

Shakespeare.

Alcides, from Oechalia crown'd
With conquest, felt th' envenom'd robe, and tore,
'Thro' pain, up by the roots Thessalian pines.

Milt.

Net

Nor with envoyment'd tongue to blast the fame
Of harmless men. Phillips.

2. To make odious.

Oh, what a world is this, when what is comely Envenoms him that bears it! Shakesp. As you like it.

3. To enrage; to exasperate.

With her full force she threw the pois'nous dart,
And fix'd it deep within Amata's heart;
That thus envenom'd she might kindle rage
And sacrifice to strife her house and husband's rage.
Dryden.

ENVIABLE. adj. [from envy.] Deserving envy; such as may excite envy.

They, in an enviable mediocrity of fortune, do happily possess themselves. Carew's Surv. of Cornwall.

ENVIER. n. s. [from envy.] One that envies another; a maligner; one that desires the downfall of another.

Men had need beware how they be too perfect in compliments; for that enviers will give them that attribute to the disadvantage of their virtues. Bacon.
They ween'd

To win the mount of God, and on his throne
To set the envier of his state, the proud
Aspirer; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain.
Milton.

All preferments in church and state were given by him, all his kindred and friends promoted, and all his enemies and enviers discountenanced.
Clarendon

ENVIOUS. adj. [from envy.]

1. Infected with envy; pained by the excellence or happiness of another.

A man of the most envious disposition that ever infected the air with his breath, whose eyes could not look right upon any happy man, nor ears bear the burden of any man's praise. Sidney.

Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

2. Sometimes with against.

Be not thou envious against evil men. Prov. xxiv. 19.

3. Sometimes with at.

Neither be thou envious at the wicked.
Prov. xxiv. 19.

4. Commonly with of.

Sure you mistake the precept, or the tree;
Heaven cannot envious of his blessings be. Dryden.

ENVIOUSLY. adv. [from envious.] With envy; with malignity; with ill-will, excited by another's good.

Damned spirits, being fallen from heaven, endeavour enviously to obstruct the ways that may lead us thither. Duppa.

How enviously the ladies look,
When they surprize me at my book!
And sure as they're alive at night,
As soon as gone, will fiew their sp'ght. Swift.

TO ENVIRON. v. a. [environner, French.]

1. To surround; to encompass; to encircle.

I stand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea. Shakesp. Lear.
The country near unto the city of Sultania is on every side environed with huge mountains.

The manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as so many chains, environed the same site and temple. Bacon.

Within the environing rocks stood the city. Sandys.
Thought following thought, and step by step led on,
He enter'd now the bordering desert wild,
And with dark shades and rocks environ'd round,
His holy meditation thus pursu'd. Milton.
God hath scattered several degrees of pleasure and pain in all things that environ and affect us, and blended them together in almost all our thoughts.
Locke.

2. To involve; to envelope.

May never glorious sun reflect his beams
Upon the country where you make abode!
But darkness and the gloomy shade of death!
Environ you, 'till mischief and despair
Drive you to break your necks. Shakesp. Henry VI.
Since the mist goes, and I must mourn, come, night,
Environ me with darkness whilst I write. Donne.

Locke.

Donne.

Donne.

3. To surround in a hostile manner; to besiege; to hem in.

Metbought a legion of foul fiends
Environed me, and howled in mine ears. Shakesp.

In thy danger,
If ever danger do environ thee,
Comment thy grievance to my holy prayer. Shakesp.

I did but prompt the age to quit their clogs,
By the known rules of ancient liberty,
When it straight a barbarous noise environs me. Milt.

4. To inclose; to invest.

The soldier, that man of iron,
Whom ribs of horror all environ. Cleveland.

ENVIRONS. n. s. [environs, French.] The neighbourhood, or neighbouring places round about the country.

TO ENUMERATE. v. a. [enumero, Latin.]

To reckon up singly; to count over distinctly; to number.

You must not only acknowledge to God that you are a sinner, but must particularly enumerate the kinds of sin whereof you know yourself guilty.

Besides enumerating the gross defect of duty to the queen, I shew how all things were managed wrong. Swift.

ENUMERATION. n. s. [enumeratio, Latin.]

The act of numbering or counting over;
number told out.

Whoever reads St. Paul's enumeration of duties, must conclude, that well nigh the business of Chri-tianity is laid on charity. Spratt.

The chemists make spirit, salt, sulphur, water, and earth their five elements, though they are not all agreed in this enumeration of elements. Watts.

TO ENUNCIATE. v. a. [enuncio, Latin.]

To declare; to proclaim; to relate; to express.

ENUNCIATION. n. s. [enunciatio, Latin.]

1. Declaration; publick attestation; open proclamation.

Preaching is to strangers and infants in Christ, to produce faith; but this sacramental enunciation is the declaration and confession of it by men in Christ, declaring it to be done, and owned, and accepted, and prevailing. Taylor.

2. Intelligence; information.

It remembers and retains such things as were never at all in the sense; as the conceptions, enun-ciations, and actions of the intellect and will.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. Expression.

ENUNCIATIVE. adj. [from enunciate.]

Declarative; expressive.

This presumption only proceeds in respect of the dispositive words, and not in regard of the enunciative
terms thereof. Ayliffe.

ENUNCIATIVELY. adv. [from enunciative.]

Declaratively.

ENVOY. n. s. [envoye, French.]

1. A publick minister sent from one power to another.

Now the Lycian lots conspire
With Phœbus; now Jove's envoy through the air Brings dismal tidings. Denham.

Perseus sent envoys to Carthage to kindle their hatred against the Romans. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. A publick messenger, in dignity below an ambassador.

3. A messenger.

The watchful sentinels at every gate,
At every passage to the senses, wait;
Still travel to and fro the nervous way,
And their impressions to the brain convey;
Where their report the vital envoys make,
And with new orders are commanded back. Blackmore.

TO ENVY. v. a. [envier, French; invidere,
Latin.]

1. To hate another for excellence, happiness, or success.

Envy thou not the oppressor, and chuse none of his ways. Prov. iii. 31.

A woman does not envy a man for fighting courage, nor a man a woman for her beauty.

2. To grieve at any qualities of excellence in another.

I have seen the fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour. Shakesp. Lear.

You cannot envy your neighbour's wisdom, if he gives you good counsel; nor his riches, if he supplies you in your wants; nor his greatness, if he employs it to your protection. Swift.

3. To grudge; to impart unwillingly; to withold maliciously.

Jonson, who, by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, seemed to envy others that knowledge. Dryden.

TO ENVY. v. n. To feel envy; to feel pain at the sight of excellence or felicity; with at.

In seeking tales and informations
Against this man, whose honesty the devil
And his disciples only envy at,
Ye blew the fire that burns ye. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

He that loves God is not displeas'd at accidents which God chuses, nor envies at those gifts he bestows. Taylor.

Who would envy at the prosperity of the wicked,
and the success of persecutors? Taylor.

ENVY. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Pain felt and malignity conceived at the sight of excellence or happiness.

Envy is a repining at the prosperity or good of another, or anger and displeasur at any good of another which we want, or any advantage another hath above us. Ray on the Creation.

Envy, to which th' ignoble mind's a slave,
Is emulation in the learn'd or brave. Pope.

2. It is used sometimes with of.

All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar. Shakesp.

3. Sometimes with to.

Many suffered death merely in envy to their vir-tuous and superior genius. Swift.

4. Rivalry; competition.

You may see the parliament of women, the little envies of them to one another. Dryden.

5. Malice; malignity.

Madam, this is a meer distraction;
You turn the good we offer into envy. Shakesp. Lear.

6. Publick odium; ill repute; invidiousness.

Edward Plantagenet should be shewed unto the people; to discharge the king of the envy of that opinion and bruit, how he had been put to death privily. Bacon.

TO ENWHEEL. v. a. [from wheel.] To encompass; to encircle. A word probably peculiar to Shakesp.

Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heav'n,
Before, behind thee, and on ev'ry hand
Enwheel thee round. Shakesp. Lear's Othello.

TO ENWOMB. v. a. [from womb.]

1. To make pregnant.

Me then he left enwomb'd of this child,
This luckless child, whom thus ye see with blood.
Spenser.

I'm your mother;
And put you in the catalogue of those
That were enwomb'd mine. Shakesp. Lear.

2. To bury; to hide as in a womb.

Or as the Africk niger stream enwombs
Itself into the earth, and after comes,
Having first made a natural bridge to pass,
For many leagues, far greater than it was;
May't not be said, that her grave shall restore
Her greater, purer, since than before? Donne.

EOLIPILE. n. s. [from Eolus and pila.] A hollow ball of metal with a long pipe; which ball, filled with water, and exposed to the fire, sends out, as the water heats, at intervals, blasts of cold wind through the pipe.

Considering the structure of that globe, the exterior crust, and the waters lying round under it, both exposed to the sun, we may fitly compare it to an colipile, or an hollow sphere with water in it, which the heat of the fire rarefies, and turns into vapours and wind. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

ΕΡΑ'CT. n. f. [ἑρακτι.] A number, whereby we note the excess of the common solar year above the lunar, and thereby may find out the age of the moon every year. For the solar year consisting of 365 days, the lunar but of 354, the lunations every year get eleven days before the solar year: and thereby, in 19 years, the moon completes 20 minutes 12 lunations, or gets up one whole solar year; and having finished that circuit, begins again with the sun, and so from 19 to 19 years. For the first year afterwards the moon will go before the sun but 11 days; the second year 22 days; the third 33 days: but 30 being an entire lunation, cast that away, and the remainder 3 shall be that year's epact; and so on, adding yearly 11 days. To find the epact, having the prime or golden number given, you have this rule: Divide by three; for each one left add ten; Thirty reject: the prime makes epact then. Harris.

As the cycle of the moon serves to shew the epacts, and that of the sun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations; so this Dionysian period serves to shew these two cycles both together, and how they proceed or vary all along, 'till at last they accomplish their period, and both together take their beginning again, after every 532d year. Holder.

ΕΡΑ'ULMENT. n. f. [French, from epaule, a shoulder.] In fortification, a sidewalk made either of earth thrown up, of bags of earth, gabions, or of fascines and earth. It sometimes denotes a semibastion and a square orillion, or mass of earth faced and lined with a wall, designed to cover the cannon of a cazemate. Harris.

ΕΡΕ'NTHESIS. n. f. [ἑρευθισις.] [In grammar.] The addition of a vowel or consonant in the middle of a word. Harris.

ΕΡ'ΠΙΑ. n. f. [Hebrew.] A measure among the Jews, containing fifteen solid inches. The epba and the bath shall be of one measure; that the bath may contain the tenth part of an homer, and the epba the tenth part of an homer. Ezekiel.

ΕΡΗ'ΜΕΡΑ. n. f. [ἑρημερα.]
1. A fever that terminates in one day.
2. An insect that lives only one day.

ΕΡΗ'ΜΕΡΑΛ. } adj. [ἑρημεριος.] Diurnal;
ΕΡΗ'ΜΕΡΙΚ. } beginning and ending in a day.

This was no more than a mere bubble or blast, and like an ephemeral hit of applause. Wotton.

ΕΡΗ'ΜΕΡΙΣ. n. f. [ἑρημερις.]
1. A journal; an account of daily transactions.

2. An account of the daily motions and situations of the planets.

When casting up his eyes against the light, Both month and day, and hour he measur'd right; And told more truly than the ephemeris; For art may err, but nature cannot miss. Dryden.

ΕΡΗ'ΜΕΡΙΣΤ. n. f. [from ephemeris.] One who consults the planets; one who studies or practises astrology.

The night before, he was discoursing of and fighting the art of foolish astrologers, and generalistical ephemerists, that pry into the horoscope of nature's.

ΕΠΗ'ΜΕΡΩΝ-ΥΩΜ. n. f. [from ἑπιμερωσ and υωμ.] A sort of worm that lives but a day.

Swammerdam observes of the ephemeron-worm; that their food is clay, and that they make their cells of the same. Derham.

ΕΡΗ'ΟΔ. n. f. [ἑρηδω.] A sort of ornament worn by the Hebrew priests. That worn by the high priest was richly composed of gold, blue, purple, crimson, and twisted cotton; and upon the part which came over his two shoulders were two large precious stones, upon which were engraven the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, upon each stone six names. Where the ephod crossed the high priest's breast, was a square ornament, called the breast plate; in which twelve precious stones were set, with the names of the twelve tribes of Israel engraved on them, one on each stone. The ephods worn by the other priests were of plain linen. Calmet.

He made the epbod of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen. Exod. xxxix. 2.

Array'd in epbods; nor so few As are those pearls of morning dew, Which hang on herbs and flowers. Sandys.

ΕΠ'ΙΟ. adj. [epicus, Latin; ἑπος.] Narrative; comprising narrations, not acted, but rehearsed. It is usually supposed to be heroic, or to contain one great action atchieved by a hero.

Holmes, whose name shall live in epic song, While music numbers, or while verse has feet. Dryd.
The epic poem is more for the manners, and the tragedy for the passions. Dryden.

From morality they formed that kind of poem and fable which we call epic. Broom.

ΕΠ'ΙΟΔ'ΙΟΝ. n. f. [ἑπιόδιος.] An elegy; a poem upon a funeral.

You from above shall hear each day One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay; These, your own anthems, shall become Your lasting epicidium. Sandys's Paraphrase.

ΕΠ'ΙΟΤΥΡΕ. n. f. [epicurus, Latin.] A follower of Epicurus; a man given wholly to luxury.

Then fly false thants, And mingle with the English epicurees. Shakefp.
The epicure buckles to study, when shame, or the desire to recommend himself to his mistress, shall make him uneasy in the want of any sort of knowledge. Locke.

ΕΠ'ΙΟΤΥΡΕΑΝ, adj. Luxurious; contributing to luxury.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts; Keep his brain fuming; epicurean cooks, Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite. Shakefp.
What a damn'd epicurean rascal is this! Shak.

ΕΠ'ΙΟΤΥΡΙΣΜ. n. f. [from epicure.] Luxury; sensual enjoyment; gross pleasure.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires; Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd, and bold, That this our court, infected with their manners, Shews like a riotous inn; epicurism and lust Make it a tavern or a brothel. Shakefp. King Lear.
There is not half so much epicurism in any of their most studied luxuries, as a bleeding fame at their mercy. Government of the Tongue.
Some good men have ventured to call manificence, the greatest sensuality, a piece of epicurism. Calamy's Sermons.

ΤΟ ΕΠ'ΙΟΤΥΡΙΖΕ. v. a. [from epicurus.] To devour like an epicure. A word not used.

While I could see thee full of eager pain My greedy eyes epicuriz'd on thine. Flatman.

ΕΠ'ΙΟΤΥΛΕ. n. f. [ἑπι and κύκλος.] A little circle whose centre is in the circumference of a greater; or a small orb, which, being in the deferent of a planet, is carried along with its motion; and yet, with its own peculiar motion, carries the body of the planet fastened to it round about its proper centre. Harris.

In regard of the epicycle, or lesser orb, wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is various and unequal. Brown.

Gird the sphere

With centric and eccentric, scribb'l'd o'er; Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton's Par. Lost.

ΕΠ'ΙΟΤΥΛΟΙΔΕΣ. n. f. [ἑπικύκλῳιδες.] A curve generated by the revolution of the periphery of a circle along the convex or concave part of another circle. Harris.

ΕΠ'ΙΔΕ'ΜΙΚΑΛ. } adj. [ἑπι and δῆμοσ.]
ΕΠ'ΙΔΕ'ΜΙΚ. }

1. That which falls at once upon great numbers of people, as a plague.

It was conceived not to be an epedemic disease, but to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the predispositions of seasons. Bacon.

As the proportion of epidemic diseases shews the aptness of the air to sudden and vehement impressions, the chronical diseases shew the ordinary temper of the place. Grant.

2. Generally prevailing; affecting great numbers.

The more epidemic, and prevailing this evil is, the more honourable are those who shine as exceptions. Soub.

He ought to have been busied in losing his money, or in 'other amusements equally laudable and epidemic among persons of honour. Swift.

3. General; universal. Not used, nor proper.

They're citizens o' th' world, they're all in all: Scotland's a nation epidemic. Cleaveland.

ΕΠ'ΙΔΕ'ΡΜΙΣ. n. f. [ἑπιδερμις.] The scarf-skin of a man's body.

ΕΠ'ΙΓΡΑΜ. n. f. [epigramma, Latin.] A short poem terminating in a point.

A college of witerackers cannot figt me out of my humour: do't thou think I care for a satire or an epigram? Shakespeare.

What can be more witty than the epigram of Moore upon the name of Nicolaus, an ignorant physician that had been the death of thousands? Peacham of Poetry.

I writ

An epigram that boasts more truth than wit. Gay.

ΕΠ'ΙΓΡΑΜΜΑΤ'ΙΚΑΛ. } adj. [epigrammaticus,] ΕΠ'ΙΓΡΑΜΜΑΤ'ΙΚ. } Latin.]

1. Dealing in epigrams; writing epigrams.

Our good epigrammatical poet, old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous fore-speaking to lie in names. Camden.

2. Suitable to epigrams; belonging to epigrams.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatick, wit and gross hyperboks; he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines but glares not; and is stately, without ambition. Addison.

He has none of those little points and peculiarities that are so often to be met with in Ovid; none of the epigrammatick turns of Lucan; none of those swelling sentiments which are so frequent in Statius and Claudian; none of those mixt embellishments of Tasso. Addison.

ΕΠ'ΙΓΡΑ'ΜΜΑΤ'ΙΣΤ. n. f. [from epigram.] One who writes or deals in epigrams.

A jest upon a poor wit, at first might have had an epigrammatist for its father, and been afterwards gravely understood by some painful collector. Pope.

Such a customer the epigrammatist Martial meets withal, one who, after he had walked through the fairest street twice or thrice, cheapening jewels, plate, rich hangings, came away with a wooden dish. Peacham.

ΕΠ'ΙΓΡΑΦ'ΙΕ. n. f. [ἑπιγραφή.] An inscription on a statue. Dist.

EPILEPSY. n. f. [ἐπιληψία.] A convulsion, or convulsive motion of the whole body, or some of its parts, with a loss of sense. A convulsive motion happens when the blood, or nervous fluid, runs into any part with so great violence, that the mind cannot refrain them. Quincy.

My lord is fell into an epilepsy:
This is the second fit. Shakespeare's Othello.
Melancholy distempers are deduced from spirits drawn from that cachochymia; the phrenitis from choleric spirits, and the epilepsy from fumes. Floyer on the Humours.

EPILEPTICK. adj. [from epilepsy.] Convulsed; diseased with an epilepsy.
A plague upon your epileptick village!
Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool? Shakespeare.
Epilepticks ought to breathe a pure air, unaffected with any steams, even such as are very fragrant. Arbutnot on Diet.

EPILOGUE. n. f. [epilogus, Latin.] The poem or speech at the end of a play.
If it be true that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to good wits they do use good bushes, and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues. Shakespeare.
Are you mad, you dog?
I am to rise and speak the epilogue. Dryden.

EPIPHYTIS. n. f. [ἐπιφυττία.] A sore at the corner of the eye.

The epiphytis is of the bigness of a lupin, of a dusky red, and sometimes of a livid and pale colour, with great inflammation and pain. Wifeman's Surg.

EPIPHANY. n. f. [ἐπιφάνεια.] A church festival, celebrated on the twelfth day after Christmas, in commemoration of our Saviour's being manifested to the world, by the appearance of a miraculous blazing star, which conducted the magi to the place where he was. Dill.

EPIPHONE'MA. n. f. [ἐπιφώνημα.] An exclamation; a conclusive sentence not closely connected with the words foregoing.

I know a gentleman, who made it a rule in reading to skip over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration at the end. If those preachers who abound in epiphonemas would but look about them, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance and the other asleep, except perhaps an old female beggar or two in the isles; who, if they be sincere, may probably groan at the sound. Swift.

EPIPHORA. n. f. [ἐπιφορά.] An inflammation of any part, but more especially a defluxion of humours on the eyes. Harris.

EPIPHYLLOSPERMIOUS. adj. [from ἐπι, φύλλον, and σπέρμα.] Is applied to plants that bear their seed on the back part of their leaves. Harris.

EPIPHYSIS. n. f. [ἐπιφύσις.] Accretion; the part added by accretion; one bone growing to another by simple contiguity, without any proper articulation. Quincy.

The epiphysis of the os femoris is a distinct bone from it in a child, whereas in a man they do entirely unite. Wifeman.

EPIFLOCE. n. f. [ἐπιφλόγη.] A figure of rhetoric, by which one aggravation, or striking circumstance, is added in due gradation to another; as, he not only spared his enemies, but continued them in employment; not only continued, but advanced them.

EPISCOPACY. n. f. [episcopatus, Latin.] The government of bishops, the government of the church established by the apostles.

The bishops durst not contest with the assembly in jurisdiction; so that there was little more than the name of episcopacy preserved. Clarendon.

Prelacy itself cannot be proved by prescription, since episcopacy is not prescribed by any time whatsoever. Ayliffe.

EPISCOPAL. adj. [from episcopus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to a bishop.
The plot of discipline sought to erect a popular authority of elders, and to take away episcopal jurisdiction. Hooker.

2. Vested in a bishop.
The apostle commands Titus not only to be a pattern of good works himself, but to use his episcopal authority in exhorting every rank and order of men. Rogers.

EPISCOPATE. n. f. [episcopatus, Latin.] A bishoprick; the office and dignity of a bishop.

EPISODI. n. f. [ἐπισόδιον.] An incidental narrative, or digression in a poem, separable from the main subject, yet rising naturally from it.

The poem hath no other episodes than such as naturally arise from the subject. Addison's Spectator.

EPISODICAL. } adj. [from episode.] Con-

EPISODICK. } tained in an episode; pertaining to an episode.

Episodical ornaments, such as descriptions and narrations, were delivered to us from the observations of Aristotle. Dryden.

I discover the difference between the episodick and principal action, as well as the nature of episodes. Notes on the Odyssey.

EPISPASTICK. n. f. [ἐπισπαστικός.]

1. Drawing.
2. Blistering. This is now the more frequent, though less proper sense.

This matter ought to be solicited to the lower parts, by fomentations, bathing, epispasticks, and blistering. Arbutnot.

EPISTLE. n. f. [ἐπιστολή.] A letter. This word is seldom used but in poetry, or on occasions of dignity and solemnity.

When loose epistles violate chaste eyes, She half consents, who silently denies. Dryden.

EPISTOLARY. adj. [from epistle.]

1. Relating to letters; suitable to letters.
2. Transacted by letters.

I shall carry on an epistolary correspondence between the two heads. Addison.

EPISTLER. n. f. [from epistle.] A scribbler of letters.

EPI'TAPH. n. f. [ἐπιτάφιος.] An inscription upon a tomb.

Live still, and write mine epitaph. Shakespeare.
Some thy lov'd dust in Parian stones enshrine,
Others immortal epitaphs design;
With wit and strength that only yields to thine. Smith.

EPI'THALAMIUM. n. f. [ἐπιθάλμιον.] A nuptial song; a compliment upon marriage.

I presume to invite you to these sacred nuptials: the epithalamium sung by a crowned muse. Sandys.
The forty-fifth psalm is an epithalamium to Christ and the church, or to the lamb and his spouse. Burnet.

EPI'THEM. n. f. [ἐπιθέμιον.] A liquid medicament externally applied.

Cordials and epithems are also necessary, to resist the putrefaction and strengthen the vitals. Wifeman.

EPI'THET. n. f. [ἐπιθέτων.]

1. An adjective denoting any quality good or bad: as, the verdant grove, the craggy mountain's lofty head.
I presume with phlegm, leaving the epithets of false, scandalous, and villainous, to the author. Swift.

2. It is used by some writers improperly for title, name.
The epithet of shades belonged more properly to the darkness than the refreshment. Decay of Piety.

3. It is used improperly for phrase, expression.
For which of my good parts did you first suffice love for me? —

Suffer love! a good epithet: I do suffer love indeed; for I love thee against my will. Shakespeare.

EPI'TOME. n. f. [ἐπιτομή.] Abridgement; abbreviate; compendious abstract; compendium.

This is a poor epitome of your's, Which, by th' interpretation of full time, May shew like all yourself. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Epitomes are helpful to the memory, and of good private use; but set forth for publick monuments, accuse the industrious writers of delivering much impertinency. Wotton.

It would be well, if there were a short and plain epitome made containing the most material heads. Locke.

Such abstracts and epitomes may be reviewed in their proper places. Watts's Improvem. of the Mind.

TO EPI'TOMISE. v. a. [from epitome.]

1. To abstract; to contract into a narrow space.

Who did the whole world's soul contract, and drew into the glasses of your eyes;
So made such mirrors and such spies,
That they did all to you epitomise. Donne.

If the ladies take a liking to such a diminutive race, we should see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature. Addison.

2. Less properly, to diminish by amputation; to curtail.

We have epitomized many particular words to the detriment of our tongue. Addison's Spectator.

EPI'TOMISER. } n. f. [from epitomise.] An EPI'TOMIST. } abridger; an abstracter; a writer of epitomes.

EPOCH. } n. f. [ἐποχή.] The time at EPOCHA. } which a new computation is begun; the time from which dates are numbered.

Moses distinctly computes by certain intervals; memorable æras and epochas, or terms of time. Brown.

These are the practices of the world since the year sixty; the grand epoch of falshood, as well as debauchery. South.

Some lazy ages, lost in sleep and ease,
No action leave to busy chronicles;
Such whose supine felicity but makes
In story chasms, in epochas mistakes. Dryden.

Their several epochas or beginnings, as from the creation of the world from the flood, from the first olympiad, from the building of Rome, or from any remarkable passage or accident, give us a pleasant prospect into the histories of antiquity and of former ages. Holden on Time.

Time is always reckoned from some known parts of this sensible world, and from some certain epochas marked out to us by the motions observable in it. Locke.

Time, by necessity compell'd, shall go Through scenes of war, and epochas of woe. Prior.

EPO'DE. n. f. [ἐπὸδον.] The stanza following the strophe and antistrophe.

EPOPE'E. n. f. [ἐπὸποι.] An epick or heroic poem.

Tragedy borrows from the epopee, and that which borrows is of less dignity, because it has not of its own. Dryden's Virgil.

EPULATIO. n. f. [epulatio, Latin.] Banquet; feast.

Contented with bread and water, when he would dine with Jove, and pretended to epulation, he desired no other addition than a piece of cheese. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EPULOTICK. n. f. [ἐπουλωτικός.] A cicatrifying medicament.

The ulcer, incarned with common sarcoticks, and the ulcerations about it, were cured by treatment of tuty, and such like epuloticks. Wifeman of Infirm.

EQUABILITY. n. f. [from equable.] Equality to itself; evenness; uniformity.

For the celestial bodies the equability and constancy of their motions argue them ordained by Wisdom.

EQUABLE, adj. [æqualis, Latin.] Equal to itself; even; uniform in respect to form, motion, or temperature.

He would have the vast body of a planet to be as elegant and round as a factitious globe represents it; to be every where smooth and equable, and as plain as the eolian fields.

Nothing abates acrimony of the blood more than an equable motion of it, neither too swift nor too slow; for too quick a motion produceth an alkaline, and too slow an acid acrimony.

EQUABLY, adj. [from equable.] Uniformly; in the same tenour; evenly; equally to itself.

If bodies move equably in concentrick circles, and the squares of their periodical times be as the cubes of their distances from the common centre, their centripetal forces will be reciprocally as the squares of the distances.

EQUAL, adj. [æqualis, Latin.]

1. Like another in bulk, excellence, or any other quality that admits comparison; neither greater nor less; neither worse nor better.

If thou be among great men, make not thyself equal with them.

May join us; equal joy, as equal love.

Although there were no mao to take notice of it, every triangle would contain three angles equal to two right angles.

2. Adequate to any purpose.

The Scots trusted not their own numbers as equal to fight with the English.

3. Even; uniform.

He laughs at all the vulgar cares and fears, At their vain triumphs, and their vainer tears; An equal temper in his mind he found, When fortune flatter'd him, and when she frown'd.

-Think not of me, perhaps my equal mind May learn to bear the fate the gods allot me.

4. In just proportion.

It is not permitted me to make my commendation equal to your merit.

5. Impartial; neutral.

Each to his proper fortune stand or fall; Equal and unconcern'd I look on all: Rixilians, Trojans, are the same to me, And both shall draw the lots their fates decree.

6. Indifferent.

They who are not disposed to receive them, may let them alone, or reject them; it is equal to me.

7. Equitable; advantageous alike to both parties.

He submitted himself, and swore to all equal conditions.

8. Being upon the same terms.

They made the married, orphans, widows, yea and the aged also, equal in spoils with themselves.

EQUAL, n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. One not inferior or superior to another.

He is enamour'd on Hero: I pray you, dissuade him from her; she is no equal for his birth.

He would make them all equals to the citizens of Rome.

Those who were once his equals, envy and defame him, because they now see him their superior; and those who were once his superiors, because they look upon him as their equal.

To my dear equal in my native land, My plighted vow I gave: I his received: Each swore with truth, with pleasure each believ'd: The mutual contract was to heav'n convey'd.

2. One of the same age.

I profited in the Jews religion above many my equals in mine own nation.

TO EQUAL, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make one thing or person equal to another.

2. To rise to to the same state with another person.

I know no body so like to equal him, even at the age he wrote most of them, as yourself.

3. To be equal to.

One whose all not equals Edward's moiety.

4. To recompense fully; to answer in full proportion.

She fought Sicheus through the shady grove, Who answer'd all her cares, and equal'd all her love.

Nor you great queen, these offices repent, Which he will equal, and perhaps augment.

TO EQUALISE, v. a. [from equal.]

1. To make even.

To equalise accounts we will allow three hundred years, and so long a time as we can manifest from the Scripture.

2. To be equal to: a sense not used.

That would make the moved body, remaining what it is, in regard of its bigness, to equalise and fit a thing bigger than it is.

Ye lofty beeches tell this matchless dame, That if together ye fed all one flame, It could not equalise the hundredth part Of what her eyes have kindled in my heart.

EQUALITY, n. f. [from equal.]

1. Likeness with regard to any quantities compared.

Equality of two domestic powers, Breeds scrupulous faction.

2. The same degree of dignity.

Of proud ambition; who, not content With fair equality, fraternal state, Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd, Over his brethren.

3. Evenness; uniformity; constant tenour; equability.

Measure out the lives of men, and periodically define the alterations of their tempers, conceive a regularity in mutations, with an equality in constitutions, and forget that variety which physicians therein discover.

According to this equality wherein God hath placed all mankind, with relation to himself, in all the relations between man and man there is a mutual dependance.

4. Evenness; uniformity; constant tenour; equability.

Measure out the lives of men, and periodically define the alterations of their tempers, conceive a regularity in mutations, with an equality in constitutions, and forget that variety which physicians therein discover.

EQUALLY, adv. [from equal.]

1. In the same degree with another person or thing; alike.

To reconcile men's vices to their fears is the aim of all the various schemes and projects of sin, and is equally intended by atheism and immorality.

2. Evenly; equably; uniformly.

If the motion of the sun were as unequal as of a ship, sometimes slow, and at others, swift; or, if being constantly equally swift, it yet was not circular, and produced not the same appearances, it would not help us to measure time more than the motion of a comet does.

3. Impartially.

We shall use them, As we shall find their merits and our safety May equally determine.

The covetous are equally impatient of their condition, equally tempted with the wages of unrighteousness, as if they were indeed poor.

4. Evenly; equably; uniformly.

If the motion of the sun were as unequal as of a ship, sometimes slow, and at others, swift; or, if being constantly equally swift, it yet was not circular, and produced not the same appearances, it would not help us to measure time more than the motion of a comet does.

5. Impartially.

Let me lament That our stars unconceivable should have divided Our equalness to this.

EQUALNESS, n. f. [from equal.] Equality.

EQUANGULAR, adj. [from æquus and angulus, Latin.] Consisting of equal angles.

EQUANIMITY, n. f. [æquanimis, Lat.]

Evenness of mind; neither elated nor depressed.

EQUANIMOUS, adj. [æquanimis, Lat.] Even; not dejected; not elated.

EQUATION, n. f. [æquare, Lat.] The investigation of a mean proportion collected from the extremities of excess and defect, to be applied to the whole.

We are to find out the extremities on both sides, and from and between them the middle daily motions of the sun along the Ecliptick; and to frame tables of equation of natural days, to be applied to the mean motion by addition or subtraction, as the case shall require.

By an argument taken from the equations of the times of the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites, it seems that light is propagated in time, spending in its passage from the sun to us about seven minutes of time.

EQUATION, [In algebra.] Is an expression of the same quantity in two dissimilar terms, but of equal value; as $3x = 36d$.

EQUATION, [In astronomy.] The difference between the time marked out by the sun's apparent motion, and the time that is measured by its real or middle motion; according to which clocks and watches ought to be adjusted.

EQUATOR, n. f. [æquator, Lat.] The equator on the earth, or equinoctial in the heavens, is a great circle, whose poles are the poles of the world. It divides the globe into two equal parts, the northern and southern hemispheres. It passes through the east and west points of the horizon; and at the meridian is raised as much above the horizon as is the complement of the latitude of the place. Whenever the sun comes to this circle, it makes equal days and nights all round the globe, because he then rises due east and sets due west, which he doth at no other time of the year.

By reason of the convexity of the earth, the eye of man, under the equator, cannot discover both the poles: neither would the eye, under the poles, discover the sun in the equator.

On the other side the equator there is much land still remaining undiscovered. Rocks rich in gems, and mountains big with mines, That on the high equator ridgy rise, Whence many a bursting stream auriferous plays.

EQUATORIAL, adj. [from æquator.] Pertaining to the equator; taken at the equator.

The planets have spheroidal figures, and obliquities of their equatorial to their ecliptick planes.

EQUESTRIAN, adj. [æquestris, Latin.]

1. Being on horseback.

2. Skilled in horsemanship.

3. Belonging to the second rank in Rome.

EQUERRY, n. f. [écurie, Dutch.] Master of the horse.

EQUICRURAL, adj. [æquus and crus, Latin.]

1. Having legs of an equal length.

2. Having the legs of an equal length, and longer than the base; isosceles.

An equicrural triangle goes upon a certain proportion of length and breadth.

We successively draw lines from angle to angle until seven equicrural triangles be described.

EQUIDISTANT.

EQUIDISTANT. adj. [æquus and distans, Latin.] At the same distance.

EQUIDISTANTLY. adv. [from æquidistant.] At the same distance.

The fixt stars are not all placed in the same concave superficies, and æquidistant from os, as they seem to be.

The liver, seated on the right side, by the subclavian division æquidistantly communicates unto either arm.

EQUIFORMITY. n. f. [æquus and forma, Latin.] Uniform equality.

No diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts and equiformity of motion.

EQUILATERAL. adj. [æquus and latus, Latin.] Having all sides equal.

Circles or squares, or triangles equilateral, which are all figures of equal lines, can differ but in greater or lesser.

Trifling futility appears in their twelve signs of the zodiack and their aspects: why no more aspects than diametrically opposite, and such as make equilateral figures?

TO EQUIBRATE. v. a. [from æquilibrum.] To balance equally; to keep even with equal weight on each side.

If the point of the knife, drawn over the loadstone, have in this affriction been drawn from the equator of the loadstone towards the pole, it will attract one of the extremes of an æquibrated magnetic needle.

The bodies of fishes are æquibrated with the water in which they swim.

all their particular circumstances, they have their sense restrained. Stillingfleet.
The greater number of those who held this were misguided by equivocal terms. Swift.

2. Uncertain; doubtful; happening dif- ferent ways.

Equivocal generation is the production of plants without seed, or of insects or animals without parents, in the natural way of coition between male and female; which is now believed never to happen
but that all bodies are univocally produced. Harris.
There is no such thing as equivocal or spontaneous generation; but all animals are generated by animal parents of the same species with themselves.
Ray.

Those half-learn'd widdings, num'rous in our isle
As half-form'd insects on the Banks of Nae;
Unfinish'd things, one knows not what to call,
Their generation's so equivocal. Pope.

Passing the hate spot ermalins. Sidney.

ER'MINE. n. s. [bermine, French, from armenius, Latin.] An animal in cold countries, which very nearly resembles a wea-sele in shape; having a white pile, and the tip of the tail black, and furnishing a valuable fur. The fellmonger, and fur-riers put upon it little bits of Lombardy lambkin, which is noted for its shining black colour, the better to set off the whiteness of the ermine. Trevoux.
Ermine is the fur of a little beast, about the big-ness of a weasel, called Mus Armenius; for they are found in Armenia. Peasbun on Blazoning.
A lady's honour must be touch'd;

The way, thou leading. Milton.

3. To deviate from any purpose.
But errs not nature from this gracious end,
From burning suns when livid deaths descend. Pope.

4. To commit errors; to mistake.
It is a judgment main'd and most imperfect,
That will counsel perfection so could err.
Against all rules of nature. Shakespeare's Othello.
For do they not err that devise evil? Prov. xiv. 22.
Possibly the man may err in his judgment of circumstances, and therefore let him fear; but because it is not certain he is mistaken, let him not despair.
Taylor's Rule of living holy.
Nor has it only been the heat of erring persons that has been thus mischievous, but sometimes men of right judgments have too much contributed to the breach. Decay of Piety.

The muses' friend, unto himself severe,
With silent pity looks on all that err. Waller.
He who from the reflected image of the sun in water would conclude of light and heat, could not err more grossly. Cheyne.

—I told him that your father was in Venice. Shakef.

A quean I have I not forbid her my house? She comes of errands does she? Shakespeare.

When he came, behold the captains of the host were sitting, and he said, I have an errand to thee, O captain. Kings.

From them I go
This uncouth errand sole. Milton's Paradise Lost.
His eyes,

That run thro' all heav'n's, or down to th' earth,
Bear his swift errands over moist and dry,
O'er sea and land. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Well thou do'it to hide from common sight
Thy close intrigues, too bad to bear the light;
Nor doubt I, but the silver-footed dame,
Tripping from sea, or such an errand came. Dryd.

ERRANT. adj. [errans, Latin; errant,
French.]

1. Wandering; roving; rambling. Particularly applied to an order of knights much celebrated in romances, who roved about the world in search of adventures.

It was thought that there are just seven planets, or errant stars, in the lower orbs of heaven; but it is now demonstrable unto sense, that there are many more. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Chief of domestick knights and errants,
Either for charlet or for warrant. Hudibras.

2. Vile abandoned; completely bad. See ARRANT.

Good impertinence;
Thy company, if I slept not very well,
A-nights, would make me an errant fool with questions. Ben Jonson's Cavaline.

ESCUAGE. n. f. [from escu, French, a shield.]

Escuage, that is, service of the shield, is either uncertain or certain. Escunge uncertain is likewise twofold: first, where the tenant by his tenure is bound to follow his lord, going in person to the king's wars for many days. The days of such service seem to have been rated by the quantity of the land so holden: as, if it extend to a whole knight's fee, then the tenant was bound thus to follow his lord forty days. A knight's fee was so much land as, in those days, was accounted a sufficient living for a knight; and that was six hundred and eighty acres as some think, or eight hundred as others, or 15l. per annum: Sir Thomas Smith saith, that centus equestris is 40l. revenue in free lands. If the land extend but to half a knight's fee, then the tenant is bound to follow his lord but twenty days. The other kind of this escuage uncertain is called Cattleward, where the tenant is bound to defend a castle. Escuage certain is where the tenant is set at a certain sum of money to be paid in lieu of such uncertain services. Cowel.

ESCULENT. adj. [esculentus, Latin.] Good for food; eatable.

I knew a man that would fast five days; but the same man used to have continually a great wisp of herbs that he smelled on, and some esculent herbs of strong scent, as garlick. Bacon.

2. Formal exiſtence; that which makes any thing to be what it is.
 The viſible church of Jeſus is one in outward profeſſion of thoſe things, which ſupernaturally appertain to the very effence of Chriſtianity, and are neceſſarily required in every particular Chriſtian man. Hooker.

3. Exiſtence; the quality of being.
 In ſuch cogitations have I ſtood, with ſuch darkneſs and heavineſs of mind, that I might have been perſuaded to have reſigned my very effence. Sidney.

4. Being; exiſtent perſon.
 As far as gods, and heav'nly effences Can periſh. Milton's Paradise Loſt.

5. Species of exiſtent being.
 Here be four of your ſpecies diſſering as the four elements; and yet you are friends: as for Eupolis, becauſe he is temperate, and without paſſion he may be the fifth effence. Bacon.

6. Conſtituent ſubſtance.
 For ſpirits when they pleaſe,
 Can either ſex aſſume, or both; ſo loſt
 And uncompoſed is their effence pure;
 Not ty'd or manacled with joint or limb. Milton.

7. The cauſe of exiſtence. This ſenſe is not proper.
 She is my effence; and I leave to be,
 If I be not by her fair influence
 Foſter'd, illumin'd, cheriſh'd, kept alive. Shakesf.

8. [In medicine.] The chief properties or virtues of any ſimple, or compoſition collected in a narrow compaſs.

9. Perfume; odour; ſcent.
 Our humble province is to 'tend the fair;
 To ſave the powder from too rude a gale,
 Nor let th' imprifon'd effences exhale. Pope.

To ESSENCE. v. a. [from effence.] To perfume; to ſcent.

The huſband rails, from morning to night, at effenced ſops and tawdry courtiers. Addiſon's Spect.

ESSENTIAL. adj. [effentialis, Latin.]

1. Neceſſary to the conſtitution or exiſtence of any thing.
 The diſcipline of our church, although it be not an effential part of our religion, ſhould not be raſhly altered, as the very ſubſtance of our religion will be intereſted in it. Bacon.

From that original of doing good, that is effential to the infinite being of our Creator, we have an excellent copy tranſcribed. Spratt.

This power cannot be innate and effential to matter; and if it be not effential, it is conſequently moſt manifelt it could never ſupervene to it, unleſs impreſſed and infuſed into it by an immaterial and divine power. Bentley.

A great miniſter puts you a caſe, and aſks your opinion; but conceals an effential circumſtance, upon which the whole weight of the matter turns.

Swift.

And if each system in gradation roll,
Alike essential to the amag whole,
The least confusion but in one, not all
That system only, but the whole must fall. Pope.

2. Important in the highest degree; principal.

Judgment's more essential to a general,
Than courage. Denham's Sophy.

3. Pure; highly rectified; subtly elaborated; extracted so as to contain all the virtues of its elemental parts contracted into a narrow compass.

The juice of the feed is an essential oil or balm, designed by nature to preserve the seed from corruption. Arbutnot.

1. Existence; being.

His utmost ire to the height enrag'd,
Will either quite consume us, or reduce
To nothing this essential. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Nature; first or constituent principles.

The plague of sin has even altered his nature, and eaten into his very essentials. South.

3. The chief point; that which is in any respect of great importance.

ESSENTIALLY. adv. [essentialiter, Latin.]

By the constitution of nature; really; according to the true state of things.

He that loves himself,
Hath not essentially, but by circumstance,
The name of valour. Shake'sp. Henry VI.
Body and spirit are essentially divided, though not locally distant. Glanville.

All sin essentially is, and must be mortal. South.
Knowledge is that which, next to virtue, truly and essentially raises one man above another. Addison's Guardian.

ESSO'INE. n. f. [of the French essoin, or exonné.]

1. He that has his presence forborn or excused upon any just cause; as sickness.

2. Allegement of an excuse for him that is summoned, or sought for, to appear and answer to a court-baron, upon just cause of absence. Cowel.

3. Excuse; exemption.

For every work he challenged essoin,
For contemplation sake; yet otherwise
His life he led in lawless riotise. Fairy Queen.

TO ESTABLISH. v. a. [etabli, French.]

1. To settle firmly; to fix unalterably.

He may establish thee to-day for a people unto himself. Deut.

1. Settlement; fixed state.

All happy peace, and goodly government,
Is settled there in sure establishment. Fairy Queen.

2. Confirmation of something already done; ratification.

He had not the act penned by way of recognition of right; as, on the other side, he avoided to have it by new law; but chose rather a kind of middle way, by way of establishment. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. Settled regulation; form; model of a government or family.

Now come into that general reformation, and bring in that establishment by which all men should be contained in duty. Spenser.

4. Foundation; fundamental principle; settled law.

The sacred order to which you belong, and even the establishment on which it subsists, have often been struck at; but in vain. Asterbury.

5. Allowance; income; salary.

His excellency, who had the sole disposal of the emperor's revenue, might gradually lessen your establishment. Swift.

6. Settled or final rest.

Whilst we set up our hopes and establishment here, we do not seriously consider that God has provided another and better place for us. Wake.

ESTATE. n. f. [estat, French.]

1. The general interest; the business of the government; the publick. In this sense it is now commonly written state.

Many times the things adduced to judgment may be neum & taum, when the reason and consequences thereof may reach to point of estate: I call matters of estate not only the parts of sovereignty, but whatsoever introduceth any great alteration, or dangerous precedent, or concerneth manifestly any great portion of people. Bacon's Essays.

2. Condition of life, with regard to prosperity or adversity.

Thanks to giddy chance,
She cast us headlong from our high estate. Dryden.

3. Condition; circumstances in general.

Truth and certainty are not at all secured by innate principles; but men are in the same uncertain, floating estate with as without them. Locke.

4. Fortune; possession: generally meant of possessions in land, or realities.

She accused us to the king, as though we went about to overthrow him in his own estate. Sidney.
Go, miser! go; for lucre sell thy soul;
Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole,
That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,
See what a vast estate he left his son! Dryd. Pers.

5. Rank; quality.

Who hath not heard of the greatness of your estate? Who seeth not that your estate is much excelled with that sweet uniting of all beauties. Sidney.

6. A person of high rank. This sense is disused.

She is a dutchess, a great estate. Latimer.
Herod, on his birth-day, made a supper to his lords, high captains, and chief states of Galilee. Mark, vi. 21.

TO ESTATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To settle as a fortune.

Why hath thy queen
Summon'd me hither?
—A contract of true love to celebrate,
And some donation freely to estate
On the blest lovers. Shake'sp. Tempest.

TO ESTEEM. v. a. [estimer, French; aestimo, Latin.]

1. To set a value whether high or low upon any thing.

The worth of all men by their end esteem;
And then due praise, or due reproach them yield. Spenser.

A knowledge in the works of nature they honour, and esteem highly profound wisdom; howbeit this wisdom saveth not. Hooker.

I preferred her before sceptres and thrones, and esteemed riches nothing in comparison of her. Wisd. vii. 8.

2. To compare; to estimate by proportion.

Besides, those single forms the doth esteem,
And in her balance doth their values try. Davies.

3. To prize; to rate high; to regard with reverence.

Who would not be loved more, though he were esteemed less? Dryden.

4. To hold in opinion; to think; to imagine.

One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Rom. xiv. 5.

TO ESTEEM. v. n. To consider as to value; with of.

Many would little esteem of their own lives, yet for remorse of their wives and children, would be withheld from that heinous crime.

ESTEEM. n. f. [from the verb.] High value; reverential regard.

Who can see,
Without esteem for virtuous poverty,
Severz Fabricius, or can cease t' admire
The ploughman consul in his coarse attire? Dryden.

Both those poets lived in much esteem with good and holy men in orders. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
I am not uneasy that many, whom I never had any esteem for, are likely to enjoy this world after me. Pope.

ESTE'EMER. n. f. [from esteem.] One that highly values; one that sets an high rate upon any thing.

This might instruct the proudest esteemer of his own parts, how useful it is to talk and consult with others. Locke.

ESTIMABLE. adj. [French.]

1. Valuable; worth a large price.

A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man,
Is not so estimable or profitable
As flesh of muttons, beefs, or goats. Shake'sp. As You Like It.

2. Worthy of esteem; worthy of some degree of honour and respect.

A lady said of her two companions, that one was more amiable, the other more estimable.
You lost one, who gave hopes of being, in time, every thing that was estimable and good. Temple.

ESTIMABLENESS. n. f. [from estimable.]

The quality of deserving regard.

TO ESTIMATE. v. a. [aestimo, Latin.]

1. To rate; to adjust the value of; to judge of any thing by its proportion, to something else.

When a man shall sanctify his house to the Lord, then the priest shall estimate it whether it be good or bad: as the priest shall estimate it, so shall it stand. Lev. xxvii. 14.

It is by the weight of silver, and not the name of the piece, that men estimate commodities and exchange them. Locke.

2. To calculate; to compute.

ESTIMATE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Computation; calculation.

Upon a moderate estimate and calculation of the quantity of water now actually contained in the abyss I found that this alone was full enough to cover the whole globe to the height assigned by Moses. Woodward.

2. Value.

I'd love
My county's good, with a respect more tender,
4 T 2 More

More holy and profound than mine own life,
My dear wife's estimate, her womb's increase,
The treasure of my loins. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Valuation; assignment of proportional value; comparative judgment.

The only way to come to a true estimate upon the odds betwixt a publick and a private life, is to try both.

Outward actions can never give a just estimate of us, since there are many perfections of a man which are not capable of appearing in actions. Addison.

ESTIMATION. n. f. [from estimate.]

1. The act of adjusting proportional value.
If a man should sanctify unto the lord some part of a field, the estimation shall be according to the seed. Leviticus.

2. Calculation; computation.

3. Opinion; judgement.

In our own estimation we account such particulars more worthy than those that are already tried and known. Bacon.

4. Esteem; regard; honour.

Crimes there were laid to his charge many, the least whereof being just, had bereaved him of estimation and credit with men. Hooker.

Of your brace of unprizeable estimations, the one is but frail, and the other casual. Shakespeare.

I know the gentleman

To be of worth and worthy estimation,
And not without desert so well reputed. Shakespeare.

I shall have estimation among the multitude, and honour with the elders. Wifl. viii. 10.

A plain reason of the publick honours due to the magistrate is, that he may be in due estimation and reverence. Atterbury.

ESTIMATIVE. adj. [from estimate.] Having the power of comparing and adjusting the preference.

We find in animals an estimative or judicial faculty, an appetition or aversion, and loco-motive faculty answering the will. Hale.

The error is not in the eye, but in the estimative faculty, which mistakingly concludes that colour to belong to the wall, which indeed belongs to the object. Boyle.

ESTIMATOR. n. f. [from estimate.] A fet- tler of rates; a computist.

ESTIVAL. adj. [estivus, Latin.]

1. Pertaining to the summer.

2. Continuing for the summer.

ESTOVERS. n. f. [law term.] Necessaries allowed by law.

ESTRADE. n. f. [French; stratum, Latin.] An even or level space. Diſt.

To ESTRANGE. v. a. [estranger, French.]

1. To keep at a distance; to withdraw.
Had we not only cut off their corruptions, but also estranged ourselves from them in things indif- ferent, who seeth not how greatly prejudicial this might have been to so good a cause? Hooker.

They know it is our custom of simple reading, not for conversion of infidels estranged from the house of God, but for instruction of men baptized, bred, and brought up in the bosom of the church. Hooker.

See, she weeps;

Thinks me unkind, or false, and knows not why
I thus estrange my person from her bed. Dryden.

2. To alienate; to divert from its original use or possessor.

They have estranged this place, and have burnt incense in it to other gods. Jer. xix. 4.

3. To alienate from affection; to turn from kindness to malevolence or indifference.

How comes it now, my husband, oh, how comes it,
That thou art thus estranged from thyself?

Thyself I call it, being strange to me. Shakespeare.

Adam, estrang'd in look, and alter'd style,
Speech intermitted, thus to Eve renew'd. Milton.

I came to grieve a father's heart estrang'd;
But little thought to find a mistress chang'd. Dryden.

I do not know, to this hour, what it is that has Estranged him from me. Pope.

4. To withdraw or withhold.

We must estrange our belief from every thing which is not clearly and distinctly evidenced.

Glanville's Sceptis.

ESTRANGEMENT. n. f. [from estrange.] Alienation; distance; removal; voluntary abstraction.

Desires, by a long estrangement from better things, come at length perfectly to loath, and fly off from them. South.

ESTRAPADE. n. f. [French.] The de- fence of a horse that will not obey, who, to get rid of his rider, rises mightly before; and while his forehead is yet in the air, yerks furiously with his hind legs. Farrier's Diſt.

ESTREATE. n. f. [extradum, Latin.] The true copy of an original writing: for example, of americiaments or penalties, set down in the rolls of a court, to be levied by the bailiff, or other officer, of every man for his offence. A law term. Corwel.

ESTREPEMENT. n. f. [of the French word estrepier.] Spoil made by the tenant for term of life upon any lands or woods, to the prejudice of him in the reversion. Corwel.

ESTRICH. n. f. [commonly written ostrich; struthiocamelus.] The largest of birds.

To be furious,

Is to be frighted out of fear; and in that mood,

The dove will peck the estridge. Shakespeare.

The peacock, not at thy command assumes,

His glorious train, nor estrich her rare plumes. Sandys.

ESTUANCE. n. f. Heat; warmth. A word rarely found.

Averroes restrained his hilarity, and made no more thereof than Seneca commendeth and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incalcescence, and regulated estuance from wine. Brown.

ESTUARY. n. f. [asuarium, Latin.] An arm of the sea; the mouth of a lake or river in which the tide reciprocates; a frith.

To ESTUATE. v. a. [astuo, Latin.] To swell and fall reciprocally; to boil; to be in a state of violent commotion. Diſt.

ESTUATION. n. f. [from astuo, Latin.] The state of boiling; reciprocation of rise and fall; agitation; commotion.

Rivers and lakes that want fermenting parts at the bottom, are not excited into estuans; therefore some seas flow higher than others. Brown.

The motion of the will is accompanied with a sensible commotion of the spirits, and an estuation of the blood. Norris.

ESTURE. n. f. [astus, Latin.] Violence; commotion.

The seas retain

Not only their outrageous esture there,
But supernatural mischief they expire. Chapman.

ESURIENT. adj. [esuriens, Latin.] Hungry; voracious. Diſt.

ESURINE. adj. [esurio, Latin.] Corroding; eating.

Over much piercing is the air of Hampstead, in which sort of air there is always something esurine and acid. Wifeman.

ETC. A contraction of the two Latin words et cætera, which signifies, and so on; and the rest; and others of the like kind.

To ETCH. v. a. [etzen, German.]

1. A way used in making of prints, by drawing with a proper needle upon a copper-plate, covered over with a ground of wax, &c. and well blacked with the smoke of a link, in order to take off the figure of the drawing or print; which having its backside tintured with white lead, will by running over the stricken out lines with a stiff, impress the exact figure on the black or red ground; which figure is afterwards with needles drawn deeper quite through the ground, and all the shadows and hatchings put in; and then a wax border being made all round the plate, there is poured on a sufficient quantity of well tempered aqua fortis, which insinuating into the strokes made by the needles, usually cuts, in about half an hour, into the figure of the print or drawing on the copper-plate. Harris.

2. To sketch; to draw; to delineate [unless this word be mistaken by Locke for ete.]

There are many empty terms to be found in some learned writers, to which they had recourse to etch out their systems. Locke.

3. [This word is evidently mistaken by Ray for edge.] To move forwards towards one side.

When we lie long awake in the night, we are not able to rest one quarter of an hour without shifting of sides, or at least etching this way and that way, more or less. Ray.

ETCH. n. f. A country word of which I know not the meaning.

When they sow their etch crops, they sprinkle a pound or two of clover on an acre. Mortimer.

Where you find dunging of land makes it rank, lay dung upon the etch, and sow it with barley. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ETERNAL. adj. [æternus, Latin.]

1. Without beginning or end.

The eternal God is thy refuge. Deuter. xxxiii. 27.

2. Without beginning.

It is a question quite different from our having an idea of eternity, to know whether there were any real being, whose duration has been eternal? Locke.

3. Without end; endless; immortal.

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives,
—But in them nature's copy's not eternal. Shakespeare.

4. Perpetual; constant; unintermitting.
Burnt offerings morn and evening shall be thine,
And fires eternal in thy temple shine. Dryden.

5. Unchangeable.

Hobbes believed the eternal truths which he opposed. Dryden.

ETERNAL. n. f. [eternel, French.] One of the appellations of the Godhead.

That law whereby the Eternal himself doth work. Hooker.

The Eternal, to prevent such horrid fray,
Hung out of heav'n his golden scales. Milton.

ETERNALIST. n. f. [æternus, Latin.] One that holds the past existence of the world infinite.

I would ask the eternalists what mark is there that they could expect to desire of the novelty of a world, that is not found in this? Or what mark is there of eternity that is not found in this? Burnet.

To ETERNALIZE. v. a. [from eternal.] To make eternal. Diſt.

ETERNALLY. adv. [from eternal.]

1. Without beginning or end.

2. Unchangeably; invariably.

That which is morally good, or evil, at any time, er in any case, must be also eternally and unchangeably so, with relation to that time and to that case. South.

3. Perpetually; without intermission.
Bear me, some god, to Baja's gentle seats,
Or cover me in Umbria's green retreats,
Where western gales eternally reside,
And all the seasons lavish all their pride. Addison.

ETERNAL. adj. [æternus, Latin.] Eternal; perpetual; endless.

The Cyclops hammers fall
On Mars his armour, forg'd for proof eterne. Shakes.

ETERNITY. n. f. [Eternitas, Latin.]

1. Duration without beginning or end.
In this ground his precious root
Still lives, which, when weak time shall be pour'd out Into eternity, and circular joys
Dancing an endless round; again shall rise. Crashaw.
Thy immortal rhyme
Makes this one short point of time,
To fill up half the orb of round Eternity. Cowley.

By repeating the idea of any length of duration which we have in our minds, with all the endless addition of number, we come by the idea of eternity. Locke.

2. Duration without end.
Beyond is all abyss,
Eternity, whose end no eye can reach! Milton.

Eternity, thou pleasing, dreadful thought!
Through what variety of untried being,
Through what new scenes and changes must we pass!
Addison.

To ETERNIZE. v. a. [æterno, Latin.]

1. To make endless; to perpetuate.
I with two fair gifts
Created him endow'd; with happiness,
And immortality: that fondly loit,
Which other serv'd but to eternize woe. Milton.

2. To make for ever famous; to immortalize.
Mankind by all means seeking to eternize himself, so much the more as he is near his end, doth it by speeches and writings. Sidney.

And well befits all knights of noble name,
That covet in th' immortal book of fame
To be eterniz'd, that fame to haunt. Fairy Queen.
I might relate of thousands, and their names
Eterniz'd here on earth; but those elect
Angels, contented with their fame in heav'n, Seek not the praise of men. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The four great monarchies have been celebrated by the writings of many famous men, who have eterniz'd their fame, and thereby their own. Temple.
Both of them are set on fire by the great actions of heroes, and both endeavour to eternize them.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. Creech seems to have accented the first syllable.

Hence came its name, in that the grateful Jove Hath eterniz'd the glory of his love. Creech's Manil.

ETHER. n. f. [æther, Latin; αἴθρ.]

1. An element more fine and subtile than air; air refined or sublimed.
If any one should suppose that ether, like our air, may contain particles which endeavour to recede from one another; for I do not know that this ether is; and that its particles are exceedingly smaller than those of air, or even than those of light, the exceeding smallness of its particles may contribute to the greatness of the force by which those particles may recede from one another. Newton.

The parts of other bodies are held together by the eternal pressure of the ether, and can have no other conceivable cause of their cohesion and union.
Locke.

2. The matter of the highest regions above.
There fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below. Dryden.

ETHEREAL. adj. [from ether.]

1. Formed of ether.
Man feels men when I press th' ethereal plains. Dryden.

2. Celestial; heavenly.

Go heavenly guest, ethereal messenger,
Sent from whose sovereign goodness I adore. Milton.
Thrones and imperial pow'rs, offspring of Heaven,
Ethereal virtues! Milton's Paradise Lost.

Such as these, being in good part freed from the entanglements of sense and body, are employed, like the spirits above, in contemplating the Divine Wisdom in the works of nature; a kind of anticipation of the ethereal happiness and employment.
Glanville.

Vast chain of being, which from God began,
Natures ethereal, human; angel, man. Pope.

ETHEREOUS. adj. [from ether.] Formed of ether; heavenly.

Behold the bright surface
Of this ethereous mould, whercon we stand. Milton.

ETHICAL. adj. [ἠθικόν.] Moral; treating on morality.

ETHICALLY. adj. [from ethical.] Accord- ing to the doctrines of morality.

My subject leads me not to discourse ethically, but Christiably of the faults of the tongue. Government of the Tongue.

ETHICK. adj. [ἠθικόν.] Moral; deliver- ing precepts of morality. Whence Pope entitled part of his works Ethick Epistles.

ETHICKS. n. f. without the singular. [ἠθικόν.] The doctrine of morality; a system of morality.

For all moral virtues, she was all
That ethicks speak of virtues cardinal. Donne.
I will never set politicks against ethicks; for true ethicks are but as a handmaid to divinity and religion. Bacon.

Perius professes the stoick philosophy; the most generous amongst all the sects who have given rules of ethicks. Dryden.

If the atheists would live up to the ethicks of Epicurus himself, they would make few or no profelytes from the Christian religion. Bentley.

ETHNICK. adj. [ἠθνικόν.] Heathen; Pa- gan; not Jewish; not Christian.

Such contumely as the ethick world durst not offer him, is the peculiar insolence of degenerated Christians. Gov. of the Tongue.

I shall begin with the agreement of profane, whether Jewish or ethick, with the Sacred Writings. Grew.

ETHNICKS. n. f. Heathens; not Jews; not Christians.

This first Jupiter of the ethnicks was then the same Cain, the son of Adam. Raleigh's History.

ETHOLOGICAL. adj. [ἠθολογία and λόγος.] Treating of morality.

ETIOLOGY. n. f. [αἰτιολογία.] An ac- count of the causes of any thing, gen- erally of a distemper.

I have not particulars enough to enable me to enter into the etiology of this distemper. Arbutnot.

ETYMOLOGICAL. adj. [from etymology.] Relating to etymology; relating to the derivation of words.

Excuse this conceit, this etymological observation. Locke.

ETYMOLOGIST. n. f. [from etymology.] One who searches out the original of words; one who shows the derivation of words from their original.

ETMOLOGY. n. f. [etymologia, Lat. ἔτυμος and λόγος.]

1. The descent or derivation of a word from its original; the deduction of formations from the radical word; the analysis of compound words into primitives.

Consumption is generally taken for any universal diminution and colligation of the body which accep-tation its etymology implies. Harvey on Consumptions.

When words are restrained, by common usage, to a particular sense, to run up to etymology, and construe them by dictionary, is wretchedly ridiculous. Collier's View of the Stage.

Pelvis is used by comick writers for a lookingglass, by which means the etymology of the word is visible, and pelvidera will signify a lady who looks in her glass. Addison's Spectator.

If the meaning of a word could be learned by its derivation or etymology, yet the original derivation of words is oftentimes very dark. Watts's Log.

2. The part of grammar which delivers the inflections of nouns and verbs.

ETYMON. n. f. [ἔτυμον.] Origin; primi- tive word.

Blue hath its etymon from the High Dutch blaw; from whence they call hemmel-blue, that which we call sky-colour or heaven's blue. Peacbam.

To EVA'CATE. v. a. [evaco, Latin.] To empty out; to throw out.

Dry air opens the surface of the earth to disin-carcerate venene bodies, or to evacuate them. Harvey on the Plague.

To EVA'CUATE. v. a. [evacuio, Latin.]

1. To make empty; to clear.
There is no good way of prevention but by evacuating clean, and emptying the church. Hooker.

We tried how far the air would manifest its gravity in so thin a medium, as we could make in our receiver, by evacuating it. Boyle.

2. To throw out as noxious, or offensive.

But apt the mind or fancy is to rove,
Uncheck'd, and of her roving is no end,
Till warn'd, or by experience taught, the learn,
That not to know at large of things remote
From use, obscure and subtle, but to know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom; what is more, is fume
Or emptiness, or fond impertinence,
And renders us in things that most concern
Unpractic'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. Milton.

2. Knowledge gained by trial and practice.
Boys immature in knowledge,
Pawn their experience to their present pleasures. Shakespeare.

But if you'll prosper, mark what I advise,
Whom age and long experience render wise. Pope.

2. Ready; dexterous.
The meanest sculptor in th' Emilian square,
Can imitate in brass the nail, and hair;
Expert in trifles, and a cunning fool,
Able t' express the parts, but not dispose the whole. Dryden.

They have not the good luck to be perfectly knowing in the forms of syllogism, or expert in mode and figure. Locke.

3. Skilful by practise or experience. This sense is rare.
Expert men can execute, and judge of particulars, one by one; but the general counsels, and the plots and marshaling of affairs, come best from those that are learned. Bacon.

4. It is used by Pope with of before the object of skill, generally with in.
Thy offspring bloom,
Expert of arms, and prudent in debate,
The gifts of Heaven to guard thy hoary state. Pope's Odyssey.

EXPERTLY. adv. [from expert.] In a skilful, ready, and dexterous manner.

EXPERTNESS. n. f. [from expert.] Skill; readiness; dexterity.
What his reputation, what his valour, honesty, and expertness in war. Shakespeare.

This army, for the expertness and valour of the soldiers, was thought sufficient to have met the greatest army of the Turks. Knolles's History.

EXPIABLE. adj. [from expiate.] Capable to be expiated, or atoned.

TO EXPIATE. v. a. [from expio, Latin.]
1. To annul the guilt of a crime by subsequent acts of piety; to atone for.

Strong and able petty felons, in true penitence, implore permission to expiate their crimes by their assiduous labours in so innocent and so hopeful a work. Bacon's Phis. Remains.

The odium which some men's rigour or remissness had contracted upon my government, I resolved to expiate by regulations. King Charles.

For the cure of this disease a humble, serious, hearty repentance is the only physick; not to expiate the guilt of it, but to qualify us to partake of the benefit of Christ's atonement. Ray.

2. To avert the threats of prodigies.

3. To make reparation for.
The treasurer obliged himself to expiate the injury, to procure some declaration to that purpose, under his majesty's sign manual. Clarendon.

The more they have hitherto embezzled their parts, the more they endeavour to expiate that unchristianity by a more careful managery for the future. Goverment of the Tongue.

EXPIATION. n. f. [from expiate.]
1. The act of expiating or atoning for any crime.

2. The means by which we atone for crimes; atonement.
Law can discover sin, but not remove,
Save by these shadowy expiations weak,
The blood of bulls and goats,
The former part of this poem is but a due expiation for my not serving my king and country in it. Dryden.

Let a man's innocence be what it will, let his virtues rise to the highest pitch of perfection, there will be still in him so many secret sins, so many human frailties, so many offences of ignorance, passion, and prejudice, so many unguarded words and thoughts, that without the advantage of such an expiation and atonement, as Christianity has revealed to us, it is impossible he should be saved. Addison.

3. Practices by which the threats of ominous prodigies were averted.

Upon the birth of such monsters, the Grecians and Romans did use divers sorts of expiations, and to go about their principal cities with many solemn ceremonies and sacrifices. Haywood.

EXPIATORY. adj. [from expiate.] Having the power of expiation or atonement.
His voluntary death for others prevailed with God, and had the force of an expiatory sacrifice. Hacker.

EXPIRATION. n. f. [from expire.]
1. That act of respiration which thrusts the air out of the lungs, and contracts the cavity of the breast. Quincy.

In all expiration the motion is outwards, and therefore rather driveth away the voice than draweth it. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Of an inflammation of the diaphragm, the symptoms are a violent fever, and a most exquisite pain increases upon inspiration; by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. The last emission of breath; death.
We have heard him breathe the groan of expiration. Rambler.

3. Evaporation; act of fuming out.

4. Vapour; matter expired.
Words of this sort resemble the wind in fury and impetuoufness, in transiency and sudden expiration. Decay of Piety.

Close air is warmer than open air, as the cause of cold is an expiration from the earth, which in open places is stronger. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

EXP

5. The cessation of any thing to which life is figuratively ascribed.

To satisfy ourselves of its expiration we darkened the room, and in vain endeavoured to discover any spark of life. Boyle.

6. The conclusion of any limited time.

If 'till the expiration of your month, You will return and sojourn with my sister, Dismissing half your train, come then to me. Shaksp. K. Lear.

This he did in a fortnight after the expiration of the treaty of Uxbridge. Clarendon.

To EXPIRE. v. a. [expiro, Latin.]

1. To breathe out.

To save his body from the scorching fire, Which he from hellish entrails did expire. Fairy Queen.

Anatomy exhibits the lungs in a continual motion inspiring and expiring air. Harvey.
This chaff'd the boar; his nostrils flames expire. Dryd.
And his red eyeballs roll with living fire.

2. To exhale; to send out in exhalations.

The fluid which is thus secreted, and expired forth along with the air, goes off in insensible parcels. Woodward.

1. To make an emission of the breath.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stop'd, it suddenly dies. Walton's Angler.

2. To die; to breathe the last.

For when the fair in all their pride expire, To their first elements the souls retire. Pope.

3. To perish; to fall; to be destroyed.

All thy praise is vain, Save what this verse, which never shall expire, Shall to the purchase. Spenser.

The dead man's skull Is there scarce ask'd, for whom; and good men's lives Expire before the flowers in their caps, Dying ere they sicken. Shaksp.peare.

4. To fly out with a blast.

The distance judg'd for that of every size, The lincks touch, the ponderous ball expires. The vigorous seaman every porthole plies, And adds his heart to every gun he fires. Dryden.

5. To conclude; to terminate; to come to an end.

A month before This bond expires, I do expect return Of thrice three times the value of this bond. Shaksp.peare.

To EXPLAIN. v. a. [explano, Latin.]

To expound; to illustrate; to clear by notes or commentaries.

Such is the original design, however we may explain it away. Ayliffe's Parergon.
You will have variety of commentators to explain the difficult passages to you. Gay.
Some explained the meaning quite away. Pope.

EXPLAINABLE. adj. [from explain.] Capable of being explained or interpreted.

It is symbolically explainable, and implicth purification and cleanness. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EXPLAINER. n. s. [from explain.] Expofitor; interpreter; commentator.

EXPLANATION. n. s. [from explain.]

1. The act of explaining or interpreting.

2. The sense given by an explainer or interpreter.

Before this explanation be condemned, and the bill found upon it, some lawyers should fully inform the jury. Swift.

EXPLANATORY. adj. [from explain.] Containing explanation.

Had the printer given me notice, I would have printed the names and writ explanatory notes. Swift.

EXP

EXPLETIVE. n. s. [expletivum, Latin.]

Something used only to take up room: something of which the use is only to prevent a vacancy.

These are not only useful expletives to matter, but great ornaments of style. Swift.

Of these are the open vowels tire, While expletives their feeble aid do join. Pope.

Expletives, whether words or syllables, are made use of purely to supply a vacancy: do, before verbs plural, is absolutely such; and future refiners may explode did and does. Pope.

EXPLICABLE. adj. [from explicare.] Explainable; possible to be explained.

Many difficulties, scarce explicable with any certainty, occur in the fabrick of human nature. Hale.
Great variety there is in compound bodies, and little many of them seem to be explicable. Boyle.

To EXPLICATE. v. a. [explico, Latin.]

1. To unfold; to expand.

They explicate the leaves, and ripen food For the silk labourers of the mulberry wood. Blackmore.

2. To explain; to clear; to interpret.

They do not understand that part of Christian philosophy which explicates the secret nature of this divine sacrament. Taylor.

Although the truths may be elicited and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The last verse of his last satyr is not yet sufficiently explicated. Dryden.

EXPLICATION. n. s. [from explicare.]

1. The act of opening: unfolding or expanding.

2. The act of explaining; interpretation; explanation.

The church preacheth, first publishing by way of testimony, the truth which from them the hath received, written in the sacred volumes of Scripture; secondly, by way of explication, discovering the mysteries which lie hid therein. Hooker.

Many things are needful for explication, and many for application unto particular occasion. Hooker.

Allowances are made in the explication of our Saviour's parables, which hold only as to the main scope. Atterbury.

3. The sense given by an explainer; interpretation.

'Tis the substance of this theory I mainly depend upon: many single explications and particularities may be rectified upon farther thoughts. Burnet.

EXPLICATIVE. adj. [from explicare.]

Having a tendency to explain.

If the term which is added to the subject of a complex proposition be either essential or any way necessary to it, then it is called explicative; for it only explains the subject; as every mortal man is a son of Adam. Watts's Logick.

EXPLICATOR. n. s. [from explicare.] Expounder; interpreter; explainer.

EXPLICIT. adj. [explicitus, Latin.] Unfolded; plain; clear; not obscure; not merely implied.

We must lay aside that lazy and fallacious method of censuring by the lump, and bring things close to explicit proof and evidence. Burnet.

These speculations, when most refined, serve only to show how impossible it is for us to have a clear and explicit notion of that which is infinite. Scutb's Sermons.

EXPLICITLY. adv. [from explicit.] Plainly; directly; not merely by inference or implication.

This querulous humour carries an implicit repugnance to God's disposals; but where it is indulg'd, it usually is its own expofitor; and explicitly avows it. Government of the Tongue.

To EXPLODE. v. a. [explodo, Latin.]

1. To drive out disgracefully with some noise of contempt; to treat with open contempt; to treat not only with neglect, but open disdain or scorn.

Him old and young Exploded, and had seiz'd with violent hands, Had not a cloud descending snatch'd him thence Unseen amid' the throng. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Thus was th' applause they meant, Turn'd to exploding hiss, triumph to shame, Calt on themselves from their own mouths. Milt.

Old age explodes all but morality. Roscommon.

There is pretended that a magnetical globe or terrella, being placed upon its poles, would have a constant rotation; but this is commonly exploded, as being against all experience. Wilkins.

Shall that man pass for a proficient in Christ's school who would have been exploded in the school of Zeno? South.

Provided that no word, which a society shall give a sanction to, be antiquated and exploded, they may receive whatever new ones they shall find occasion for. Swift.

2. To drive out with noise and violence.

But late the kindled power did explode The maffy ball, and the brass tube unload. Blackmore.

EXPLODER. n. s. [from explode.] An hisser; one who drives out any person or thing with open contempt.

EXPLOIT. n. s. [expletum, Latin, res expleta.] A design accomplished; an achievement; a successful attempt.

Know'st thou not any whom corrupting gold Would tempt into a close exploit of death? Shak.

Flight cannot stain the honour you have won; But mine it will that no exploit have done. Shak.

How shall I relate To human sense th' invisible exploits Of warring spirits? Milton's Paradise Lost.

He breaks fierce Hannibal's insulting heats; Of which exploit thus our friend Ennius treats. Denham.

Will you thus dishonour Your past exploits, and fully all your wars! Addis.

To EXPLOIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform; to achieve. Not used.

He exploited great matters in his own person in Gallia, and by his son in Spain. Camden.

To EXPLORE. v. a. [exploro, Latin.]

Snails exclude their horns, and therewith explore their way. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EXPLORATION. n. s. [from explorate.]

Search; examination.

For exact exploration scales should be suspended where the air is quiet, that, clear of impediments, they may the more freely convert upon their natural verticity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Use may be made of the like way of exploration in that enquiry which puzzles so many modern naturalists. Boyle.

EXPLORATOR. n. s. [from explorate.] One who searches; a searcher; an examiner.

EXPLORATORY. adj. [from explorate.] Searching; examining.

To EXPLORE. v. a. [exploro, Latin.]

To try; to search into; to examine by trial.

Abdiel that sight endur'd not, where he stood Among the mightiest, bent on highest deeds, And thus his own undaunted heart explores. Milt.

Divers opinions I have been inclined to question not only as a naturalist, but as a chymist, whether they be agreeable to true grounds of philosophy, or the exploring experiments of the fire. Boyle.

But Cypis, and the rest of fonder mind, The fatal present to the flames design'd, Or to the wat'ry deep; at least to bore The hollow sides, and hidden frauds explore. Dryden's Æn.

The mighty Stagyrite first left the shore, Spread all his sails and durst the deeps explore; He steer'd securely, and discover'd far, Led by the light of the Mæonian star. Pope.

EXPLOREMENT.

EXPLOREMENT n. s. [from explore.] Search; trial.

The frustrated search of Porta, upon the explorement of many, could scarce find one. Brown.

EXPLOSION n. s. [from explode.] The act of driving out any thing with noise and violence.

Those parts which abound with strata of stone, or marble, making the strongest opposition, are the most furiously shattered, an event observable not only in this, but all other explosions whatever. Woodward.

In gunpowder the charcoal and sulphur easily take fire, and set fire to the nitre; and the spirit of the nitre being thereby rarified into vapour, rushes out with explosion, after the manner that the vapour of water rushes of an æolipile: the sulphur also, being volatile, is converted into vapour, and augments the explosion. Newton's Opt.

With explosion vast, The thunder raises his tremendous voice. Thomson.

EXPLOSIVE adj. [from explode.] Driving out with noise and violence.

These minerals constitute in the earth a kind of natural gunpowder, which takes fire; and by the assistance of its explosive power renders the shock greater. Woodward.

EXPONENT n. s. [from expono, Latin.]

Exponent of the ratio, or proportion between any two numbers or quantities, is the exponent arising when the antecedent is divided by the consequent: thus six is the exponent of the ratio which thirty hath to five. Also a rank of numbers in arithmetical progression, beginning from 0, and placed over a rank of numbers in geometrical progression, are called indices or exponents: and in this is founded the reason and demonstration of logarithms; for addition and subtraction of these exponents answers to multiplication and division in the geometrical numbers. Harris.

EXPONENTIAL adj. [from exponent.]

Exponential curves are such as partake both of the nature of algebraick and transcendental ones. They partake of the former, because they consist of a finite number of terms though those terms themselves are indeterminate; and they are in some measure transcendental, because they cannot be algebraically constructed. Harris.

TO EXPORT v. a. [exporto, Latin.] To carry out of a country, generally in the way of traffick.

Glorious followers taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon.

Edward III by his encouragement of trade, turned the scale so much in favour of English merchandise, that, by a balance of trade taken in his time, the exported commodities amounted to two hundred ninety-four thousand pounds, and the imported but to thirty-eight thousand. Addis. Freeb.

Great ships brought from the Indies precious wood, and exported pearls and robes. Arbutnot.

EXPORT n. s. [from the verb.] Commodity carried out in traffick.

EXPORTATION n. s. [from export.] The act or practice of carrying out commodities into other countries.

The cause of a kingdom's thriving is fruitfulness of soil to produce necessaries, not only sufficient for the inhabitants, but for exportation into other countries. Suiff.

EXPORTER n. s. [from export.] He that carries out commodities, in opposition to the importer, who brings them in.

Money will be melted down, or carried away in coin by the exporter, whether the pieces of each species be by the law bigger or less. Locke.

TO EXPOSE v. a. [expono, expositum, Lat. exposet, French.]

1. To lay open; to make liable.

Take Phycie Pomp; Exposet thyself to feel what wretches feel, That thou may'st shake the superfluous to them, And shew Heaven juſt. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Who here Will envy whom the highest place exposet Foremost to stand against the Thunderer's aim? Milton.

To pass the riper period of his age, Acting his part upon a crowded stage, To lasting toils expos'd, and endless cares, To open dangers, and to secret snares. Prior.

2. To put in the power of any thing.

But still he held his purpose to depart; Far as he lov'd her equal to his life, He would not to the seas expose his wife, Dryden.

3. To lay open; to make bare; to put in a state of being acted upon.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove, And beasts, by nature strong, renew their love; Then fields the blades of buried corn disclose, And while the balmy western spirit blows, Earth to the breath her bosom dates expos'd. Dryden.

4. To lay open, to censure or ridicule; to shew in such a state as brings contempt.

Like Horace, you only expose the follies of men, without arraigning their vices. Dryd. Juv. Dedic. Tully has just expos'd a precept, that a man should live with his friend in such a manner that if he became his enemy, it should not be in his power to hurt him. Addison's Spectator.

A fool might once himself alone expose, Now one in verse makes many more in prose. Pope. Your fame and your property suffer alike, you are at once expos'd and plundered. Pope.

5. To lay open to examination.

Those who seek truth only, freely expose their principles to the test, and are pleas'd to have them examined. Locke.

6. To put in danger.

The exposing himself notoriously did change the fortune of the day, when his troops begun to give ground. Clarendon.

7. To cast out to chance.

A father, unnaturally careless of his child, gives him to another man; and he again exposes him: a third man finding him, breeds up and provides for him as his own. Locke.

Helpless and naked on a woman's knees, To be expos'd or rear'd as the may please, Feel her neglect, and pine for her disease, Prior.

8. To censure; to treat with dispraise. A colloquial abuse of the word.

A little wit is equally capable of exposing a beauty, and of aggravating a fault. Addison's Spect.

EXPOSITION n. s. [from expose.]

1. The situation in which any thing is placed with respect to the sun or air.

Water he chuses clear, light, without taste or smell; drawn from springs with an easterly exposition. Arbutnot.

The diversity of exposition of the several kitchens in this city, whereby some receive the rays of the sun sooner, and others later, will occasion great irregularity as to the time of dining. Arbutnot.

2. Explanation; interpretation: [from expono, expono, Latin.]

My lord of York, it better shew'd with you, When that your flock, assembled by the bell, Encircled you, to hear with reverence

Your exposition on the holy text. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

You are a worthy judge;

You know the law: your exposition

Hath been most found, Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

I have sometimes very boldly made such expositions

of my authors, as no commentator will forgive me. Dryden.

EXPOSITOR n. s. [expositor, Latin.] Explainer; expounder; interpreter.

A mirth-mingling jest,

Which his fair tongue, conceit's expositor,

Delivers in such apt and gracious words,

That aged ears play truant at his tales. Shakespeare.

In the picture of Abraham's sacrificing his son,

Isaac is described as a little boy, which is not con-sentaneous unto the authority of expositors. Brown.

The sinner's conscience is the best expositor of the mind of God, under any judgement or affliction. South's Sermons.

Scholastic, those copious expositors of places, pour out a vain overflow of learning on passages plain and easy. Locke.

TO EXPOSTULATE v. n. [expostulo, Latin.] To canvass with another: to altercation; to debate without open rupture.

More bitterly could I expostulate, Save that for reverence of some alive

I give a sparing limit to my tongue. Shakespeare.

The emperor's ambassador did expostulate with the king, that he had broken his league with the emperor. Hayward.

It is madness for friendless and unarmed innocence to expostulate with invincible power. L'Estr. Durst I expostulate with Providence, I then might ask. Cotton.

The bishop will expostulate, and the tenant will have regard to the reasonableness of the demand. Swift.

EXPOSTULATION n. s. [from expostulate.]

1. Debate; altercation; discussion of an affair in private without rupture.

Expostulations end well between lovers, but ill between friends. Spectator.

2. Charge; accusation.

This makes her bleeding patients to accuse

High Heav'n, and these expostulations use;

Could Nature then no private woman grace,

Whom we may dare to love with such a face? Waller.

Expostulation is a private accusation of one friend touching another, supposed not to have dealt singly or confidentially in the course of good friendship. Ayliffe.

EXPOSTULATOR n. s. [from expostulate.]

One that debates with another without open rupture.

EXPOSTULATORY adj. [from expostulate.]

Containing expostulation.

This fable is a kind of an expostulatory debate between Bounty and Ineratitude. L'Estrange.

EXPOSURE n. s. [from expose.]

1. The act of exposing or setting out to observation.

2. The state of being open to observation.

When we have our naked frailties hid,

That suffer in exposure, let us meet. Shakesp. Macb.

3. The state of being exposed, or being liable to any thing.

Determine on some course,

More than a wild exposure to each chance

That starts i' th' way before thee. Shak. Coriolanus.

4. The state of being in danger.

Ajax sets Therites

To match us in comparisons with dirt;

To weaken and discredit our exposure,

How hard soever rounded in with danger. Shakesp.

5. Exposition; the situation in which the sun or air is received.

The cold now advancing set such plants, as will not endure the house, in pots, two or three inches, lower than the surface of some bed, under a southern exposure. Evelyn.

TO EXPOUND v. a. [expono, Latin.]

1. To explain; to clear; to interpret; to shew the meaning of.

We cannot better interpret the meaning of those words than pope Leo himself expounded them whose speech concerning our Lord's ascension, may serve instead of a marginal gloss. Hooker.

This by Calphurnia's dream is signified.

—And this way you have well expounded it. Shakesp.

He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself. Luke, xxiv. 27.

Those right holy fathers, as in matters of faith they did not make truth, but religiously expounded it; so in matters of ecclesiastical government, they did not create provinces, but ordered the countries which they then had. Ruleigh.

2. To examine; to lay open: a Latinism.

He expounded both his pockets.

And found a watch with rings and lockets. Hudibras.

EXPOUNDER n. s. [from expound.] Explainer; interpreter.

4 X

This they did partly as faithful witnesses; making a mere relation of what God himself had revealed unto them; and partly as careful expounders, teachers, and persuaders thereof. Hooker.

The best he was,
And faithfulest expounder of the laws. Dryd. Jew.
To EXPRESS, v. a. [expimo, expressus, Latin.]

1. To copy; to resemble; to represent.
So kids and whelps their sires and dams express,
And so the great I measur'd by the less. Dryden.
Adorn a dream, expressing human form,
The shape of him who suffer'd in the storm. Dryden.
2. To represent by any of the imitative arts; as poetry, sculpture, painting.
Each skilful artist shall express thy form
In animated gold. Smith's Poedra and Hippolitus.
3. To represent in words; to exhibit by language; to utter; to declare.
Lest thou hast we find express,
Envy bid conceal the rest. Milton.
Though they have learned those sounds; yet there are no determin'd ideas laid up in their minds, which are to be expressed to others by them. Locke.
In moral ideas we have no sensible marks that resemble them, whereby we can set them down: we have nothing but words to express them by. Locke.
True-wit is nature to advantage dress,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well express'd. Pope.
Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women men, for dress. Pope.
To shed tears, among the ancients, when they should express their gratitude to the gods with joy;
was esteem'd a prophanation. Brome.

4. To shew or make known in any manner.
No longer shall thy bodice aptly lace,
That air and shape of harmony express,
Fine by degrees, and delicately less. Pylor.
5. To utter; to declare; with the reciprocal pronoun.
Mr. Philips did express himself with much indignation against me one evening. Pope.
6. To denote; to designate.
Moses and Aaron took these men expressed by their names: Numb. i. 17.
7. To squeeze out; to force out by compression.
Among the watry juices of fruit are all the fruits out of which drink is expressed; as the grape and the apple. Bacon.

8. To extort by violence, or elicit by art: a Latinism.
Halters and racks cannot express from thee,
More than thy deeds: 'tis only judgement waits thee. Ben Jonson.

Art did express
A quintessence even from nothingness
From dull privatives and lean emptiness. Donne.
EXPRESS, adj. [from the verb.]

1. Copied; resembling; exactly like.
Of his presence many a sign
Still following thee, still compassing thee round
With goodness and paternal love; his face
Express, and of his steps the track divine. Milton.
2. Plain; apparent; declared in direct terms.
There hath been some doubt whether containing in Scripture do import express setting down in plain terms; or else comprehending in such sort, that by reason we may from thence conclude all things which are necessary. Hooker.
There is not any positive law of men, whether general or particular, received by formal express consent as in councils; or by secret approbation;
but the same may be taken away, if occasion serves. Hooker.

All the gazers on the skies
Read not in fair heav'n's story
Expresser truth, or truer glory,
Than they might in her bright eyes. Ben Jonson.

3. Clear; not dubious. This seems to be no proper use.
I love to feel myself as an express and settled judgment and affection in things of the greatest moment. More's Div. Dial.

As to the testimonies of the fathers, let them be never so express against all sorts of prayers and invocations, they hold only of such a sort of prayer. Stillingfleet.

Where reason or scripture is express for any opinion, or action, we may receive it as of divine authority. Locke.

4. On purpose; for a particular end.
They who are not induced to believe and live as they ought, by these discoveries which God hath made in Scripture, would stand out against any evidence whatsoever; even that of a messenger sent express from the other world. Atterbury.

EXPRESS, n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A messenger sent on purpose.
The king sent an express immediately to the marquis, with all the particular informations. Clarendon.

As if expresses from all parts had come,
With fresh alarms threatening the state of Rome. Dryd. Jew
Upon the first moment I was discovered, the emperor had early notice of it by an express. Gulliver's Travels.

2. A message sent.
I am content my heart should be discovered to the world, without any of those popular captations which some men use in their speeches and expresses. King Charles.
3. A declaration in plain terms. Not usual.
They do not only contradict the general design and particular expresses of the gospel, but trespass against all logic and common sense. Norris.

rius, Lat.*] This word and its derivatives are generally pronounced extrordinary, whereby the a is liquified into the o.]

1. Different from common order and method; not ordinary.

Evils must be judged inevitable, if there be no apparent ordinary way to avoid them; because where council and advice bear rule of God's extraordinary power, without extraordinary warrant, we cannot presume. Hooker.

Spain had no wars save those which were grown into an ordinary; now they have coupled therewith the extraordinary of the Voltaline and the Palatinate. Bacon.

See what extraordinary armies have been transmitted thither, and what ordinary forces maintained there. Davies.

2. Different from the common course of law.

3. Last; that beyond which there is nothing.

Farewel, ungrateful and unkind! I go,
Condemn'd by thee, to those sad shades below:
I go th' extremest remedy to prove,
To drink oblivion, and to drench my love. Dryden.

4. Pressing in the utmost degree.

Cases of necessity being sometime but urgent, sometime extreme, the consideration of publick utility is urged equivalent to the easier kind of necessity.

5. Rigorous; strict.

If thou be extreme to mark what is amiss, O Lord, who shall abide it?

EXTREME. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. Utmost point; highest degree of any thing.

Thither by happy footed suries hal'd,
At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter change
Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more fierce;
From beds of raging fire to starve in ice
Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine Immoveable, infix'd, and frozen round
Periods of time; thence hurried back to fire. Milton.

Avoid extremes, and shun the faults of such
Who fill are pleas'd too little, or too much. Pope.

They cannot bear that human nature, which they know to be imperfect, should be raised in an extreme, without opposition.

2. Points at the greatest distance from each other; extremity.

The true Protestant religion is situated in the golden mean; the enemies unto her are the extremes on either hand.

The syllogistical form only shews, that if the intermediate idea agrees with those it is on both sides immediately applied to, then those two remote ones, or, as they are called, extremes, do certainly agree.

EXTREMELY. adv. [from extreme.]

1. In the utmost degree.

She might hear, not far from her, an extremely doleful voice; but so suppressed with a kind of whispering note, that he could not conceive the words distinctly.

2. Very much; great; in familiar language.

Whoever sees a scoundrel in a gown reeling home at midnight, is apt to be extremely comforted in his own vices.

EXTREMITY. n. s. [extremitas, Latin.]

1. The utmost point; the highest degree.

He that will take away extreme heat by setting the body in extremity of cold, shall undoubtedly remove the disease; but together with it the diseased too.

Should any one be cruel and uncharitable to that extremity, yet this would not prove that propriety gave any authority.

2. The utmost parts; the parts most remote from the middle.

In its proper colour it is inclining to white, excepting the extremities or tops of the wing feathers, which are black.

The extremities of the joints must be seldom hidden, and the extremities or end of the feet never.

The extremity of pain often creates a coldness in the extremities; but such a sensation is very consistent with an inflammatory distemper.

To EXTRICATE. v. a. [extrico, Latin.]
To disembarass: to set free any one in a state of perplexity; to disentangle.

We run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of. Locke.

These are reliefs to nature, as they give her an opportunity of extricating herself from her oppressions, and recovering the several tones and springs of her vessels. Addison.

EXTRICATION. n. f. [from extricate.] The act of disentangling; disentanglement.

Crude salt has a taste not properly acid, but such as predominates in brine; and it does not appear, that this acid spirit did as such pre-exist in the salt whence it was obtained, so that we may suppose it to have been made rather by transmutation than extrication. Boyle.

EXTRINSICAL. adj. [extrinsecus Latin.]
External; outward; not intimately belonging; not intrinsic. It is commonly written so, but analogy requires extrinsecal.

A body cannot move, unless it be moved by some extrinsic agent: absurd it is to think that a body, by a quality in it, can work upon itself. Digby.

Neither is the atom by any extrinsic impulse diverted from its natural course. Ray on the Creation.

Outward objects, that are extrinsic to the mind; and its own operations, proceeding from powers intrinsic, and proper to itself, which, when reflected on by itself, become also objects of its contemplation, are the original of all knowledge. Locke.

EXTRINSICALLY. adv. [from extrinsecal.]
From without.

If to suppose the soul a distinct substance from the body, and extrinsically advenient, be an error, almost all the world hath been mistaken. Glarville.

EXTRINSICK. adj. [extrinsecus, Latin.]
Outward; external.

When they cannot shake the main fort, they try if they can possess themselves of the outworks, raise some prejudice against his most extrinsic adherents. Government of the Tongue.

Extrinsic modes are such as arise from something that is not in the subject or substance itself; but it is a manner of being which some substances attain, by reason of something external or foreign to the subject; as, this globe lies within two yards of the wall; this man is beloved or hated. Watts.

 As one dead in the bottom of a tomb;
 Either my eyesight fails, or thou look'st pale. Shak.
 Though fight be lost,
 Life yet hath many solaces, enjoy'd
 Where other senses want not their delights,
 At home in leisure and domestick ease,
 Exempt from many a care and chance, to which Eye-sight exposes daily men abroad. Milton's Agon.
 Josephus sets this down from his own eyesight, being himself a chief captain at the siege of Jopata,
 where these events happened. Wilkins.
 He blinds the wife, gives eyesight to the blind,
 And moulds and stamps anew the lover's mind. Dryd.
EY'ESORE. n. f. [eye and sore.] Something offensive to the sight.
 Hath the church of Christ, from the first beginning, by a secret universal instinct of God's good spirit, always tied itself to end neither sermon, nor almost any speech of moment, which hath concerned matters of God, without some special words of honour and glory to the Trinity, which we all adore; and is the like conclusion of psalms become now, at length, an eyesore, or a galling to the ears that hear it? Hooker.
 Fy, doff this habit; shame to your estate,
 And eyesore to our solemn festival. Shakespeare.
 As soon as the two lords came thither they covered, to the trouble of the other; but having presently to speak, they were quickly freed from that eyesore.

 Our eyrie buildeth in the cedars top,
 And dallies with the wind, and scorns the sun. Shak.
 The eagle and the stork,
 On cliffs and cedar-tops their eyries build. Milton.
 Some haggard hawk, who had her eyry nigh,
 Well paunc'd to fasten, and well wing'd to fly.
Dryden.

F.

F

F, A consonant generally reckoned by authors, and admitted by Scaliger, among the semi-vowels, and according to that opinion distinguished in the enumeration of the alphabet by a name beginning with a vowel, which yet has so far the nature of a mute, that it is easily pronounced before a liquid in the same syllable. It has in English an invariable sound, formed by compression of the whole lips, and a forcible breath.
 Its kindred letter is V, which, in the Islandick alphabet, is only distinguished from it by a point in the body of the letter.

Of any point in't shall not only be

Death to thyself, but to thy lewd tongu'd wife. Shak.

He will without fail drive out from before you the Canaanites. Jes. iii. 10.

3. Deficiency; want.

4. Death; extinction.

How grounded he his title to the crown

Upon our fail? Shakesp. Henry VIII.

FAILING. n. f. [from fail.] Deficiency;

imperfection; fault not atrocious; lapse.

Besides what failings may be in a matter, even in the expressions there must often be great obscurities.

Digby.

To failings mild, but zealous for desert;

The clearest head and the sincerest heart. Pope.

Even good men have many temptations to subdue, many conflicts with those enemies which war against the soul, and many failings and lapses to lament and recover. Rogers.

FAILURE. n. f. [from fail.]

1. Deficiency; cessation.

There must have been an universal failure and want of springs and rivers all the summer season. Woodward.

2. Omission; non-performance; slip.

He that being subject to an apoplexy, used still to carry his remedy about him; but upon a time shifting his clothes, and not taking that with him, chanced upon that very day to be surprized with a fit: he owed his death to a mere accident, to a little inadvertency and failure of memory. South.

3. A lapse; a slight fault.

FAIN. adj. [peagn, Saxon.]

1. Glad; merry; cheerful; fond. It is still retained in Scotland in this sense.

And in her hand she held a mirror bright,

Wherewith her face she often viewed fain. Fairy Q.

My lips will be fain when I sing unto thee, and lo will no soul whom thou hast delivered. Psal. lxxi.

2. Forced; obliged; compelled. [This sig-nification seems to have arisen from the mistake of the original signification in some ambiguous expressions: as, I was fain to do this, would equally suit with the rest of the sentence, whether it was understood to mean I was compelled, or I was glad to do it for fear of worse. Thus the primary meaning seems to have been early lost.]

Every weight to shroud it did constrain,

And this fair couple eke to shroud themselves were fain. Spenser.

Whoever will hear, he shall find God; whoever will study to know, shall be also fain to believe.

Hooker.

I was fain to swear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medlar. Shakesp.

When Hildebrand had accursed Henry IV. there were none so hardy as to defend their lord; wherefore he was fain to humble himself before Hildebrand.

The learned Castilio was fain to make trenchers at Bailes to keep himself from starving. Locke.

FAIN. adv. [from the adjective.] Gladly; very desirously; according to earnest wishes.

Now I would give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground: I would fain die a dry death.

Shakespeare.

Why would't thou urge me to confess a flame

I long have stifled, and would fain conceal. Addison.

Fain would I Raphael's godlike art rehearse,

And shew th' immortal labours in my verse. Addison.

The plebeians would fain have a law enacted to lay all men's rights and privileges upon the same level. Swift.

To FAIN. v. n. [from the noun.] To

7. Not vigorous; not active.

The defects which hindered the conquest, were the faint prosecution of the war, and the looseness of the civil government. Davies on Ireland.

FAINHEARTED. adj. [faint and heart.]

Cowardly; timorous; dejected; easily depressed.

Fear not, neither be fainthearted. If. vii. 4.

They should resolve the next day, as victorious conquerors to take the city, or else there, as fainthearted cowards to end their days. Knolles.

Now the late fainthearted rout

O'erthrown and scatter'd round about,

Chac'd by the honour of their fear,

From bloody fray of knight and bear,

Took heart again and fac'd about,

As if they meant to stand it out. Hudibras.

Villain, stand off! base, groveling, worthless,

wretches,

Mongrels in faction: poor fainthearted traitors. Addis.

FAINHEARTEDLY. adv. [from faintheart-

ed.] Timorously; in a cowardly manner.

fibres; whence proceeds the sensation of faintness

and debility in a hot day. Arbutnot on Air.

FAIN'TLING. adj. [from faint.] Timorous;

feckle-minded. A burlesque or low word.

There's no having patience, thou art such a fain- ling silly creature. Arbutnot's History of Jobn Bull.

FAIN'TLY. adv. [from faint.]

1. Feebly; languidly.

Love's like a torch, which, if secur'd from blasts,

Will faintly burn; but then it longer lasts:

Expos'd to storms of jealousy and doubt,

The blaze grows greater, but 'tis sooner out. Walfb.

2. Not in bright colours.

Nature affords at least a glimm'ring light;

The lines, tho' touch'd but faintly, are drawn right. Pope.

3. Without force of representation.

I have told you what I have seen and heard but faintly; nothing like the image and horror of it.

Shakesp. King Lear.

For in my way it lies. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
- To drop; to be held or adhere no longer.
His chains fell off from his hands. Act. xii. 7.
- To move down any descent.
All liquid bodies are diffusive; for their parts being in motion, have no connexion one with another, but glide and fall off any way, as gravity and the air presseth them. Burnet.
- To drop ripe from the tree.
As the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig-tree. If. xxiv. 4.
- To pass at the outlet: as a river.
Caesar therefore gave orders to build his galleys on the Loir, and the rivers that fall into it. Arbutnot.
- To be determined to some particular direction.
Birds and fowls that rest one foot to ease the other, naturally lay their heads under their wings, that the centre of gravity may fall upon the foot they stand on. Cbeync.
- To apostatise; to depart from faith or goodness.
Labour to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief. Heb. iv. 11.
They brought scandal
To Israel, diffidence of God, and doubt
In feeble hearts, propense enough before
To waver or fall off, and join with idols. Milton.
Whether some spirit on holy purpose bent,
Or some fall'n angel from below broke loose,
Who comes with envious eyes, and curlt intent,
To view this world and its created Lord. Dryden.
- To die by violence.
God and good angels fight on Richmond's side,
And Richard fall'n in height of all his pride. Shak.

If one should be a prey, how much the better
To fall before the lion than the wolf! Shakespeare.

Than honesty to honesty engag'd?
That this shall be, or we will fall for it. Shakespeare.
A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee.
Es. xci. 7.
Ye shall chase your enemies, and they shall fall before you by the sword. Lev. xxvi. 7.
They not obeying,
Incurr'd, what could they less? the penalty;
And manifold in sin, deserv'd to fall. Milton.
Almon falls, old Tyrrhus' eldest care.
Pierc'd with an arrow from the distant war. Dryden.

- To come to a sudden end.
The greatness of these Irish lords suddenly fell and vanished, when their oppressions and extortions were taken away. Davies.
He silt the face of Caesar did foretell,
And pity'd Rome when Rome in Caesar fell;
In iron clouds conceal'd the publick light,
And impious mortals fear'd eternal night. Dryden.
- To be degraded from an high station; to sink into meanness or disgrace; to be plunged into sudden misery.
What can be their business
With a poor weak woman fall'n from favour! Shak.
- To decline from power or empire; to be overthrown.
What men could do,
Is done already: heaven and earth will witness,
If Rome must fall that we are innocent. Addison.
- To enter into any state worse than the former.
He fell at difference with Ludovico Sfortia, who carried the keys which brought him in, and shut him out. Bacon's Henry VII.
Some painters taking precepts in too literal a sense, have fallen thereby into great inconveniences. Dryd.
- To come into any state of weakness,
terror, or misery.
These, by obtruding the beginning of a change for the entire work of new life, will fall under the former guilt. Hammond.
One would wonder how so many learned men could fall into so great an absurdity, as to believe this river could preserve itself unmixed with the lake.
Addison on Italy.
- The best men fall under the severest pressures. Wake.
- To decrease; to be diminished, as in weight.
From the pound weight, as Pliny tells us, the
As fall to two ounces in the first Punic war: when Hannibal invaded Italy, to one ounce; then, by the Papirian law, to half an ounce. Arbutnot.
- To ebb; to grow shallow; as, the river falls.
- To decrease in value; to bear less price.
When the price of corn falleth, men generally break no more ground than will supply their own turn. Carew.
But now her price is fall'n: Shakespeare's K. Lear.
Rents will fall, and incomes every day lessen,
Till industry and frugality, joined to a well ordered trade, shall restore to the kingdom the riches it had formerly. Locke.
- To sink; not to amount to the full.
The greatness of an estate in bulk and territory, doth fall under measure; and the greatness of finances and revenue doth fall under computation. Bacon.
- To be dejected; to become null.
This book must stand or fall with thee; not by any opinion I have of it, but thy own. Locke.
- To decline from violence to calmness;
from intenseness to remission.
He was illir'd,
And something spoke in choler, ill and hasty;
But he fell to himself again, and sweetly
In all the rest shew'd a most noble patience. Shakespeare.
At length her fury fell, her snaring ceas'd;
And ebbing in her soul, the god decreas'd. Dryden.
- To enter into any new state of the body or mind.

In sweet musick is such art,
Killing care and grief of heart,
Fall asleep, or hearing die. Shakespeare.
Solyman, chased with the loss of his galleys and best soldiers, and with the double injury done unto him by the Venetians, fell into such a rage that he curst Barbarossa. Knoller.
When about twenty, upon the falseness of a lover,
she fell distracted. Temple.
A spark like thee of the man-killing trade,
Fell lick, and thus to his physician said:
Methinks I am not right in every part,
I feel a kind of trembling at my heart;
My pulse unequal, and my breath is strong;
Besides a filthy furr upon my tongue. Dryden's Pers.
And you have known none in health who have pitied you? and behold, they are gone before you, even since you fell into this distemper. Wake.
He died calmly, and with all the easiness of a man falling asleep. Alexander.
Portius himself oft falls in tears before me,
As if he mourn'd his rival's ill success. Addison.
For as his own bright image he survey'd,
He fell in love with the fantastick shade. Addison.
I fell in love with the character of Pomponius Atticus; I longed to imitate him. Blount to Pope.- To sink into an air of discontent or dejection of the look.
If thou persuade thyself that they shall not be taken, let not thy countenance fall. Judith. vi. 9.
If you have any other request to make, hide it not; for ye shall find we will not make your countenance to fall by the answer ye shall receive. Bacon.
I have observ'd of late thy looks are fallen,
O'ercast with gloomy cares and discontent. Addison.
- To sink below something in comparison.
Fame of thy beauty and thy youth,
Among the rest me hither brought,
Finding this same fall short of truth,
Made me stay longer than I thought. Waller.
- To happen; to befall.
For such things as do fall scarce once in many ages, it did suffice to take such order as was requisite when they fell. Hooker.
Orest falls out, that while one thinks too much of his doing, he leaves to do the effect of his thinking. Sidney.
A long advertent and deliberate connexing of consequents, which falls not in the common road of or-
Since this fortune falls to you,
Be content and seek no new. Shakespeare.
If the worst fall that ever fell, I hope, I shall make shift to go without him. Shakespeare.
O, how feeble is man's power;
That if good fortune fall,
Cannot add another hour,
Nor a lost hour recall! Donne.
Since both cannot possess what both pursue,
I'm griev'd my friend, the chance should fall on you. Dryden.
I had more leisure, and disposition, than have since fallen to my share. Swift.
- To come by chance; to light on.
I have two boys
Seek Percy and thyself about the field;
But seeing thou fall'st on me too luckily,
I will assay thee. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
The Romans fell upon this model by chance, but the Spartans by thought and design. Swift.
- To come to a stated method.
The odd hours at the end of the solar year, are not indeed fully six, but are deficient to 44"; which deficiency, in 134 years, collected, amounts to a whole day; and hence may be seen the reason why the vernal equinox, which 'tis the time of the Niene council fell upon the 21st of March, falls now about ten days sooner. Holder on Time.
It does not fall within my subject to lay down the rules of odes. Felton on the Classics.
- To come unexpectedly.
I am fallen upon the mention of mercuries. Boyle.
It happened this evening that we fell into a very pleasing walk, at a distance from his house. Addison.

I am willing to fall this argument: 'tis free for every man to write or not to write in verse, as he thinks it is or is not his talent, or as he imagines the audience will receive it. Dryden.

2. To sink; to depress: the contrary to raise.

If a man would endeavour to raise or fall his voice still by half notes, like the stops of a lute, or by whole notes alone without halts, as far as an eight, he will not be able to frame his voice into it. Bacon's Natural Hist.

3. To diminish; to let sink: opposed to raise.

Upon lessening interest to four per cent, you fall the price of your native commodities, or lessen your trade, or else prevent not the high use. Locke.

4. To yearn; to bring forth.

They then conceiving, did in yearning time Fall party-colour'd lambs, and those were Jacob's. Shakespeare.

FALL, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of dropping from on high.

High o'er their heads a mould'ring rock is plac'd, That promises a fall, and shakes at ever blast. Dryd.

2. The act of tumbling from an erect posture.

I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again, and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again, and caught it again; or whether his fall enraged him, or how it was, he did so set his teeth, and did tear it. Shakespeare.

3. The violence suffered in dropping from on high.

My son coming into his marriage-chamber, happened to have a fall, and died. 2 Esdr. x. 48.

Spirit of wine, mingled with common water, if the first fall be broken, by means of a sops, or otherwise, stayeth above; and once if mingled, it seareth not again, as oil doth. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

A fever or fall may take away my reason. Locke. Some were hurt by the falls they got by leaping upon the ground. Gulliver's Travels.

4. Death; overthrow; destruction incurred.

Whom I myself struck down. Shakespeare's Macb. Our fathers were given to the sword, and for a spoil, and had a great fall before our enemies.

I will begin to pray for myself and for them; for I see the falls of us that dwell in the land. 2 Esdr. viii. 17.

4. Ruin; Dissolution.

Paul's, the late theme of such a muse, whose flight Has bravely reach'd and soar'd above thy height; Now shalt thou stand, though sword, or time, or fire, Or zeal more fierce than they, thy fall confire. Denbam.

6. Downfall; loss of greatness; declension from eminence; degradation; state of being deposed from a high station; plunge from happiness or greatness into misery or meanness, or from virtue to corruption.

Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of ev'ry sin
That has a name. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
False of heart, light of ear, bloody or hand. Shakspeare.
A man to whom he had committed the trust of his person, in making him his chamberlain; this man, no ways disgraced, no ways discontent, no ways put in fear, turns false unto him. Bacon's Hen. VI.
So hast thou cheated Thebes with a wife,
Against thy vow, returning to beguile
Under a borrow'd name; as false to me,
So false thou art to him who let thee free. Dryden.
The ladies will make a numerous party against him, for being false to love in forsaking Dido. Dryden.
 8. Counterfeit; hypocritical; not real; as a false diamond.
False tears true pity moves: the king commands
To loose his fetters. Dryden's En.
 9. In all these senses true is the word opposed.
- FALSE. adv. Not truly; not honestly; not exactly; falsely.
What thou would'st highly,
That thou would'st hably; would'st not play false,
And yet would'st wrongly win. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
- To FALSE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To violate by failure of veracity.
Is't not enough that to this lady mild,
Thou falsedst hath thy faith with perjury? Fairy Q.
 2. To deceive.
Fair seemly pleasure each to other makes,
With goodly purposes there as they sit;
And in his falsed fancy he her takes
To be the fairest wight that lived yet. Fairy Queen.
 3. To make feints; as fencers commonly do.
But, Guyon, in the heat of all his strife,
Was wary wise, and closely did await Advantage, whilst his ire did rage most rife;
Sometimes athwart, sometimes he strook him strait,
And falsed oft his blows t'illude him with such bait. Fairy Queen.
 4. This word is now out of use.
- FALSEHEARTED. adj. [false and heart.]
Traitorous; perfidious; deceitful; hollow.
The traitorous or traitorous, who have misled others, are severely punished; and the neutrals and false-hearted friends and followers, who have started and like a broken bow, he noted. Bacon.

- FALSIFIABLE. adj. [from falsify.] Liable to be counterfeited or corrupted.
- FALSIFICATION. n. s. [falsification, French, from falsify.]
1. The act of counterfeiting any thing so as to make it appear what it is not.
Concerning the word of God, whether it be by misconstruction of the sense, or by falsification of the words, wittingly to endeavour that any thing may seem divine which is not, is very plainly to abuse, and even to falsify Divine evidence, which injury, offered but unto men, is most worthily counted heinous. Hooker.
To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coin is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his person, exceedeth all falsifications; except it should be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeits Divine honour. Bacon.
 2. Confutation.
The poet invents this fiction to prevent posterity from searching after this life, and to preserve his story from detection of falsification. Broune.
- FALSIFIER. n. s. [from falsify.]
1. One that counterfeits; one that makes any thing to seem what it is not.
It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falsifiers of coin; for counterfeit money will endure some one proof, others another, but none of them all proofs. Boyle.

A Liar; one that contrives falsehoods.
Boasters are naturally falsifiers, and the people, of all others that put their shams the worst together.
L'Esfrange.

To FALSIFY. v. a. [falsifier, French.]

1. To counterfeit; to forge; to produce something for that which in reality it is not.

We cannot excuse that church, which through corrupt translations of scripture, delivereth, instead of divine speeches, any thing repugnant unto that which God speaketh; or, through falsified additions, propoeth that to the people of God as Scripture, which is in truth no Scripture.
Hooker.

The Irish bards use to forge and falsify every thing as they list, to please or displease any man.
Spenser.
Falsifying the balance by deceit.
Amos.

2. To confute; to prove false.

Our Saviour's prophecy stands good in the destruction of the temple, and the dissolution of the Jewish economy, when Jews and Pagans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apostate, to baffle and falsify the prediction.
Addison.

3. To violate; to break by falsehood.

It shall be thy work, thy shameful work, which is in thy power to shun, to make him live to see thy faith falsified, and his bed defiled.
Sidney.

He suddenly falsified his faith, and villainously flew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself, mistrusting nothing less than the falsehood of the pirate.
Knolles's History.

This superadds treachery to all the other pestilent ingredients of the crime; 'tis the falsifying the most important truth.
Decay of Piety.

4. To pierce; to run through.

His crest is rash'd away, his ample shield is falsify'd, and round with jav'lin's hill'd.
Dryden.

Of this word Mr. Dryden writes thus: My friends quarrell'd at the word falsified, as an innovation in our language. The fact is confessed; for I remember not to have read it in any English author; though perhaps it may be found in Spenser's Fairy Queen. But suppose it be not there: why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a polished language, the word which is wanting in my native tongue? Horace has given us a rule for coining words, si græco fonte cadant especially when other words are joined with them which explain the sense. I used the word falsify, in this place, to mean that the shield of Turnus was not of proof against the spears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, makes my meaning plain:

*Ma si l'Ubergo d' Ambiera perfetto,
Che mai poter saltarlo in nessun canto,*
Ariosto, cant. xxvi.

Falsar cannot otherwise be turned than by falsify'd: for his shield was falsed, is not English. I might indeed have contented myself with saying his shield was pierced, and bored, and stuck with javelins.
Dryden.

Dryden, with all this effort, was not able to naturalize the new signification, which I have never seen copied, except once by some obscure nameless writer, and which indeed deserves not to be received.

To FALSIFY. v. u. To tell lies; to violate truth.

This point have we gained, that it is absolutely and universally unlawful to lie and falsify.
South.

FALSITY. n. f. [falsitas, Latin.]

Neither are they able to break through those errors, wherein they are so determinately settled, that they pay unto falsity the whole sum of whatsoever love is owing unto God's truth.
H. Wier.

Can you on him such falsities obtrude?
And as a mortal the most wise delude?
Stands.

Probability does not make any alteration, either in the truth or falsity of things; but only imports a different degree of their clearness or appearance to the understanding.
South.

2. A lie; an error; a false assertion or position.

That Danubius ariseth from the Pyrenean hills, that the earth is higher towards the north, are opinions truly charged on Aristotle by the rectorer of Epicurus, and all easily confutable falsities.

Glanville's Scepis.
To FALTER. v. n. [faltar, to be wanting, Spanish; vultur, a stammerer, Islandick, which is probably a word from the same radical.]

1. To hesitate in the utterance of words.
With faltering tongue, and trembling ev'ry vein,
Tell on, quoth she.
Fairy Queen.

The pale assistants on each other star'd,
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd;
The full-born sounds upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the faltering tongue.
Dryd.
He changes, gods! and falters at the question:
His fears, his words, his look, declare him guilty.
Smith.

2. To fail in any act of the body.

This earth shall have a feeling; and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king

Kalander straight thought he saw his niece Parthenia, and was about in such familiar sort to have spoken unto her; but she, in grave and honourable manner, gave him to understand that he was mistaken.
Sidney.

4. Well known; brought into knowledge by frequent practice or custom.

I see not how the Scripture could be possibly made familiar unto all, unless far more should be read in the people's hearing than by a sermon can be opened.
Hooker.

Let us chuse such noble counsel,
That war, or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us.
Shakespeare.

Our sweet
Recess and only consolation left
Familiar to our eyes!
Milton's Paradise Lost.

One idea which is familiar to the mind, connected with others which are new and strange, will bring those new ideas into easy remembrance.
Watts.

5. Well acquainted with; accustomed; habituated by custom.

Or chang'd at length, and to the place conform'd
In temper and in nature, will receive Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain.
Milton.

The senses at first let in particular ideas; and the mind, by degrees, growing familiar, with some of them, they are lodged in the memory, and names got to them.
Locke.

He was amazed how so impotent and grovelling an insect as I, could entertain such inhuman ideas, and in so familiar a manner, as to appear wholly unmoved at all the scenes of blood and desolation.
Guilliver's Travels.

Patient permit the sadly-pleasing strain,
Familiar now with grief, your tears refrain.
Pope.

6. Common; frequent.
To a wrong hypothesis may be reduced the errors that may be occasioned by a true hypothesis, but not rightly understood: there is nothing more familiar than this.
Locke.

What, did he marry me to famish me? Shaksp. The pains of famish'd Tantalus he'll feel, And Sisyphus, that labours up the hill 'The rowling rock in vain; and curst Ixion's wheel. Dryden.

2. To kill by deprivation or denial of anything necessary to life. Milton uses it with of,

Thin air Above the clouds will pine his entrails gross, And famish him of breath if not of bread. Milton.

TO FAMISH. v. n. To die of hunger; to suffer extreme hunger.

You are all resolved rather to die than to famish. Shaksp.

FAMISHMENT. n. f. [from famish.] The pain of hunger; want of food.

Apicius, thou did'st on thy gut bestow Full ninety millions; yet, when this was spent, Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou, Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment, In poison'd portion draok't. Hakewill on Provid.

FAMOUS. n. f. [from famulus.] Renown; celebrity.

1. Renewed; celebrated; much talked of and praised.

Henry the Fifth, too famous to live long; England ne'er lost a king of so much worth. Shak. There rose up before Moses two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, famous in the congregation, men of renown. Numb. xvi. 2. She became famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her. Ezek. xxiii. 10. Pyreus was only famous for counterfeiting all base things; as earthen pitchers, a scullery, rogues together by the ears, and swine tumbling in the mire; whereupon he was surnamed Rupograpus. Peacham on Drawing.

I shall be nam'd among the famous Of women, sung at solemn festivals. Milton's Agon. Many, besides myself, have heard our famous Waller own, that he derived the harmony of his numbers from the Godfrey of Bulloign, turned into English by Fairfax. Dryden.

2. It has sometimes a middle signification, and imports fame whether for good or ill. Menecrates and Menas, famous pyrates, Make the sea serve them. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

FAMOUSLY. adv. [from famous.] With great renown; with great celebration. Then this land was famously enriched With politic grave counsel; then the king Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace. Shaksp. They looked on the particulars as things famously spoken of and believed, and worthy to be recorded and read. Greav's Cos.

FAMOUSNESS. n. f. [from famous.] Celebrity; great fame.

FAN. n. f. [vannus, Latin.]

1. An instrument used by ladies to move the air and cool themselves.

With fears, and fans, and double change of brav'ry, With amber bracelets, beads, with all this knav'ry. Shaksp. Care.

Flavia, the least and slightest toy Can with resistless art employ: In other hands the fan would prove An engine of small force in love; But she, with such an air and mien, Not to be told or safely seen, Directs its wanton motions so, That it wounds more than Cupid's bow; Gives coolness to the matchless dame, To every other breast a flame. Gay.

The modest fan was lifted up no more, And virgins smil'd at what they blush'd before. Pope.

2. Any thing spread out like a woman's fan into a triangle with a broad base.

As a peacock and crane were in company, the peacock spread his tail, and challenged the other to shew him such a fan of feathers. L'Estrange.

3. The instrument by which the chaff is blown away when corn is winnowed.

[Van, French.] Flaile, strawfork, and rake, with a fan that is strong. Tuff. Ailes shall eat clean provender, winnowed with the shovel and with the fan. Is. xxx. 24.

She was fann'd into slumbers by her slaves. Spert.

sentation of things, persons, or scenes of being.

Shakespeare, fancy: 'sweetest child!
Warble his native wood-notes wild.

Milton.

In the soul
Are many lesser faculties, that serve
Reason as chief: among these fancy next
Her office holds; of all external things,
Which the five watchful senses represent,
She forms imaginations, airy shapes,
Which reason joining, or disjoining, frames
All what we affirm, or what deny, and call
Our knowledge, or opinion. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Though no evidence affects the fancy so strongly as that of sense, yet there is other evidence which gives as full satisfaction, and as clear a conviction to our reason. Atterbury.

Love is by fancy led about,
From hope to fear, from joy to doubt:
Whom we now a goddess call,
Divinely grac'd in every feature,
Strait's a deform'd, a perjurd creature;
Love and hate are fancy all. Granville.

2. An opinion bred rather by the imagination than the reason.

Men's private fancies must give place to the higher judgment of that church which is in authority over them. Hooker.

A person of a full and ample fortune, who was not disturbed by any fancies in religion. Clarendon.

I have always had a fancy, that learning might be made a play and recreation to children. Locke.

The little chapel called the Salutation is very neat, and built with a pretty fancy. Addison

4. Image; conception; thought.
How now, my lord, why do you keep alone;
Of sorriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died
With them they think on? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

5. Inclination; liking; fondness.
His fancy lay extremely to travelling. L'Estrange.

For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself,
To fit your fancies to your father's will:
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
To death, or to a vow of single life. Shakespeare.

A resemblance in humour or opinion, a fancy for the same business or diversion, is a ground of affection. Collier.

6. In Shakespeare it signifies love.
Tell me where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourished?
It is engender'd in the eyes,
With gazing sed, and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

7. Caprice; humour; whim.
True worth shall gain me, that it may be said
Desert, not fancy, once a woman led. Dryden.

The Sultan of Egypt kept a good correspondence with the Jacobites towards the head of the Nile, for fear they should take a fancy to turn the course of that river. Arbutnot.

One that was just entering upon a long journey, took up a fancy of putting a trick upon Mercury.
L'Estrange.

8. False notion.
The altering of the scent, colour, or taste of fruit, by infusing, mixing, or cutting into the bark or root of the tree, herb, or flower, any coloured, aromatical, or medicinal substance, are but fancies:
the cause is, for that those things have palled their period, and nourish not. Bacon's Natural History.

9. Something that pleases or entertains without real use or value.
London-pride is a pretty fancy for borders. Mortimer

To FANCY. v. n. [from the noun.] To imagine; to believe without being able to prove.

All are not always bound to hate and punish the true enemies of religion, much less any whom they may fancy to be so: all are always obliged to love his true friends; and to pay for its very enemies.
Strutt's Science.

If our search has reached no farther than simile and metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing; but content ourselves with what our imaginations furnish us with. Locke.

To FANCY. v. a.

1. To portray in the mind; to image to himself; to imagine.
But he whose noble genius is allow'd,
Who with stretch'd pinions soars above the crowd;
Who mightily thought can clothe with manly drefs.
He whom I fancy, but can ne'er express. Dryden.

2. To like; to be pleased with.
Ninus both admiring her judgment and valour, together with her person and external beauty, fancied her so strongly, as, neglecting all princely respects, he took her from her husband. Raleigh.

It is a little hard that the queen cannot demolish
this town in whatever manner she pleaseth to fancy.
Swift.

FANCY-MONGER. n. s. [from fancy.] One who deals in tricks of imagination.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him some good counsel; for he seems to have the quintessence of love upon him. Shakespeare.

FANCYSICK. adj. [fancy and sick] One whose imagination is unsound; one whose distemper is in his own mind.

FAND for fraud. It is retained in Scot-

1. The long tusks of a boar or other animal by which the prey is seized and held;

any thing like 'em.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy fang;
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind;
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n 'till I shrink with cold, I smile and say
This is no flattery. Shakespeare, As you like it.

Some creatures have overlong or outgrowing teeth, which we call fangs or tusks; as boats, pikes, falmons, and dogs, though less. Bacon's Natural Hist.

Prepar'd to fly,
The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves: the nerves no more sustain The bulk; the bulk unprop'd, falls headlong on the plain. Dryden.

Then charge, provoke the lion to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, stooping from your horse, Rivet the panting savage to the ground. Addison.

seems to signify gawdy; ridiculously shewy; vainly decorated: new fangled, is therefore new-fashioned; dressed out in new decorations.

Quick wits be in desire new fangled, and in purpose unconstant. Ajebam.

A book! oh, rare one!
Be not, as in this fangled world, a garment
Nobler than that it covers. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

FANGLESS. adj. [from fang-] Toothless;
without teeth.

The king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instrument of chastisement;
So that his power, like to a fangless lion,
May offer, but not hold. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

By his command we boldly cross'd the line,
And bravely fought where southern stars arise:
We trac'd the farfetch'd gold into the mine,
And that which brib'd our fathers made our prize. Dryden.

2. Studiously fought; elaborately strained; not easily or naturally introduced.

York, with all his farfetch'd policy. Shakefp.
For far-fetch'd rhymes make puzzled angels strain,
And in low prose dull Lucifer complain. Smith.
Under this head we may rank those words which signify different ideas by a sort of an unaccountable farfetch'd analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say, the meat is green when it is half rotted. Watts.

FAR-PIERCING. adj. [far and Pierce.] Striking, or penetrating a great way.

Atlas, her sire, to whose farpiercing eye
The wonders of the deep expanded lie;
Th' eternal columns which on earth he rears,
Eod in the stary vault and prop the spheres. Pope.

FAR-SHOOTING. adj. [far and shoot.] Shooting to a great distance.

Then loud he call'd Aeneas thrice by name;
The loud repeated voice to glad Aeneas came;
Great Jove he said, and the farshooting god,
Inspire thy mind to make thy challenge good. Dryd.

FAR. adj.

1. Distant; remote.
A man taking a far journey. Mark.
But we must beg our bread in climes unknown,
Beneath the scorching of the freezing zone;
And some to far Oasis shall be sold,
To try the Lybian heat, or Scythian cold. Dryden.

2. It was formerly used not only as an adverb but an adjective, with off.

These things seem small and undistinguishable,
Like far off mountains turned into clouds. Shakefp.
If we may behold in any creature any one spark of that eternal fire, or any far off dawning of God's glorious brightness, the same in the beauty, motion, and virtue of this light may be perceived. Raleigh.

3. From FAR. In this sense it is used elliptically for a far, or remote place.

The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth. Deut. xxvii. 49.

4. Remoter of the two; in horsemanship, the right side of the horse, which the rider turns from him when he mounts.

No true Egyptian ever knew in horses
The far side from the near. Dryden's Cleomenes.

5. It is often not easy to distinguish whether it be adjective or adverb: as,

The nations far and near center'd in choice. Dryden.

FAR. n. f. [contracted from farrow.] The offspring of a sow; young pigs.

Sows, ready to farrow at this time of the year,
Are for to be made of and counted full dear;
For now is the loss of the far of the sow
More great than the loss of two calves of the cow. Tusser.

TO FARCE. v. a. [farcio, Latin; farcir, French.]

1. To stuff; to fill with mingled ingredients.

Wrestling is a pastime which either the Cornishmen derived from Corineus, their first pretended founder, or at least it ministred some stuff to the carew.
VOL. I.

The first principles of Christian religion should not be farced with school points and private tenets. Bp. Sanderfon.

2. To extend; to swell out.

'Tis not the balm, the sceptre, and the ball,
The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The enterpriz'd robe of gold and pearl,
The farced title running 'fore the king. Shakefp.

FARCE. n. f. [from the verb; or from farcer, French, to mock.] A dramatick representation written without regularity, and stuffed with wild and ludicrous conceits.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

What should be great, you turn to farce. Prior.
They object against it as a farce, because the irregularity of the plot should answer to the extravagance of the characters, which they say this piece wants, and therefore is no farce. Gay.

FAR'ICAL. adj. [from farce.] Belonging to a farce; appropriated to a farce.

They deny the characters to be farical, because they are actually in nature. Gay.

FAR'CY. n. f. [farcina, Italian; farcin, French.] The leprosy of horses. It is probably curable by antimony.

FARDEL. n. f. [fardello, Italian; fardean, French.] A bundle; a little pack.

Let us to the king: there is that in this fardel will make him scratch his beard. Shakespeare.

Who would fardele bear,
To groan and sweat under a weary life? Shakef.

TO FARE. v. n. [fapan, Saxon; waren, Dutch.]

1. To go; to pass; to travel.

At last, resolving forward still to fare,
Until the blust'ring storm is overblown. Fairy Qu.
His spirits pure were subject to our sight,
Like to a man in shew and shape he far'd. Fairfax.
So on he far'd, and to the border comes
Of Eden. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Sadly they far'd along the sea-beat shore;
Still heav'd their hearts. Pope.

2. To be in any state good or bad.

So bids thee well to fare thy nether friend. Fairy Queen.

A stubborn heart shall fare evil at the last. Ecclef.
Well fare the head, which to our humble sight
Presents that beauty. Waller.

So in this throng bright Sacharis far'd,
Oppress'd by those who strove to be her guard:
As ships, though never so obsequious, fall
Foul in a tempest on their admiral. Waller.

So far'd the flag among th' enraged hounds;
Repels their force, and wounds returns for wounds. Denham.

But as a barque, that, in foul weather,
Toss'd by two adverse winds together,
Is bruis'd and beaten to and fro,
And knows not which to turn him to;
So far'd the knight between two foes,
And knew not which of them t' oppose. Hudibras.

If you do as I do, you may fare as I fare. L'Estrange.

Thus fares the queen, and thus her fury blows
Amidst the crowd. Dryden's Aen.

English ministers never fare so well as in a time of war with a foreign power, which diverts the private feuds and animosities of the nation. Addison.

Some are comforted that it will be a common calamity, and they shall fare no worse than their neighbours. Swift.

3. To proceed in any train of consequences good or bad.

Thus it farth when too much desire of contradiction causeth our speeches to ther to pass by number than to stay for weight. Hooker.

So fares it when with truth falsehood contends. Milton.

4. To happen to any one well or ill: with it preceding in an impersonal form.

When the hand finds itself well warmed and covered, let it refuse the trouble of seeding the mouth; or guarding the head, 'till the body be starved or killed, and then we shall see how it will fare with the hand. South.

5. To feed; to eat; to be entertained with food.

The rich man far'd sumptuously every day. Luke.
Feast your ears with the musick awhile, if they will fare so harshly as on the trumpet's sound. Shakespeare's Timor.

Men think they have far'd hardly, if, in times of extremity, they have descended so low as to eat dogs; but Galen delivereth, that, young, fat, and gelded, they were the food of many nations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FARE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Price of passage in a vehicle by land or by water. Used only of that which is paid for the person, not the goods.

He found a ship going to Tarfish; so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it to go with them unto Tarfish. Jon.

He passage begs with unregarded pray'r,
And wants two farthings to discharge his fare. Dryd.

2. Food prepared for the table; provisions.

But come, so well refresh'd, now let us play,
As meet is, after such delicious fare. Milton.

But when the western winds with vital pow'r
Call forth the tender grass and budding flow'r,
Then, at the last, produce in open air
Both flocks, and send them to their summer's fare. Dryden.

This is what nature's want may well suffice;
He that would more is covetous, not wise:
But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please. Dryd.

Upon his rising up he ordered the peasant to set before him whatever food he had in his house: the peasant brought out a great deal of coarse fare, of which the emperor eat very heartily. Addison.

FAREWELL. adv. [This word is originally the imperative of the verb farewell, or fare you well; sis felix, abi in bonum rem; or bene sit tibi; but in time use familiarised it to an adverb, and it is used both by those who go and those who are left.]

1. The parting compliment; adieu.

But farewell, king; with thus thou wilt appear,
Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here. Shak.

Whether we shall meet again, I know not,
Therefore our everlasting farewell take;
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius. Shakefp.

Be not amazed, call all your senses to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever. Shakespeare.

An iron slumber shuts my swimming eyes;
And now farewell, involv'd in shades of night,
For ever I am ravish'd from thy sight. Dryden.

Farewell, says he; the parting sound scarce fell
From his faint lips, but the replied farewell. Dryd.

O queen, farewell be still possess
Of dear remembrance, blessing still and blest! Pope.

2. It is sometimes used only as an expression of separation without kindness.

Farewell the year, which threaten'd so
The fairest light the world can show. Waller.

Treading the path to nobler ends,
A long farewell to love I gave;
Resolv'd my country and my friends
All that remain'd of me should have. Waller.

3. Its original verbal meaning is preserved when it is used plurally.

Farewell, master Silence: I will not use many words with you; fare you well, gentlemen, both. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

FAREWELL. n. f.

1. Leave; act of departure.

F A R

F A R

F A S

See how the morning opens her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun. Sbak.

If chance the radiant sun with farewell sweet,
Extend his evening beam, the fields revive,
The birds their notes renew, and bleating herds
Attest their joy, that hill and valley ring. Milton.

As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell. Dryden.

Before I take my farewell of this subject, I shall advise the author for the future to speak his meaning more plainly. Addison.

2. It is sometimes used as an adjective; leave-taking.

Several ingenious writers, who have taken their leave of the publick in farewell papers, will not give over so, but intend to appear again; though perhaps under another form, and with a different title. Spectator.

FARINACEOUS. adj. [from farina, Latin.]
Mealy; tasting like meal or flower of corn.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom for mankind is taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of some culmiferous plants; as: oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panick, and millet.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

FARM. n. f. [ferme, French; peopm, provision, Saxon.]

1. Ground let to a tenant; ground cultivated by another man upon condition of paying part of the profit to the owner or landlord.

Touching their particular complaint for reducing lands and farms to their ancient rents, it could not be done without a parliament. Hayward.

2. The state of lands let out to the culture of tenants.

The lords of land in Ireland do not use to set out their land in farms, for term of years, to their tennants; but only from year to year, and some during pleasure. Spenser on Ireland.

It is great wilfulness in landlords, to make any longer farms unto their tenants. Spenser.

To FARM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To let out to tenants at a certain rent.
We are enforce'd to farm our royal realm,
The revenue whereof shall furnish us
For our affairs in hand. Shakespeare's Richard II.

2. To take at a certain rate.
They received of the bankers scant twenty shillings for thirty, which the Earl of Cornwall farmed of the king. Camden's Remains.

3. To cultivate land.
FARMER. n. f. [fermier, French; or from farm.]

1. One who cultivates hired ground.
Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar, and the creature run from the cur: there thou might'st behold the great image of authority; a dog's obeyed in office. Shakespeare.

2. One who cultivates ground, whether his own or another's.
Nothing is of greater prejudice to the farmer than the stocking of his land with cattle larger than it will bear. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FARMOST. n. f. [superlative of far.] Most distant; remotest.

A spacious cave, within its farmost part,
Was hew'd and fashion'd by laborious art,
Through the hill's hollow sides. Dryden's Aen.

FARNESS. n. f. [from far.] Distance; remoteness.

Their nearness on all quarters to the enemy, and their fariness from timely succour by their friends, have forced the commanders to call forth the utter-most number of able hands to fight. Carew.

FARRAGINOUS. adj. [from farrago, Lat.]
Formed of different materials.

Being a confusion of knaves and fools, and a farraginous concurrence of all conditions, tempers, sexes, and ages, it is but natural if their determinations be monstrous, and many ways inconsistent with truth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FARRAGO. n. f. [Latin.] A mass formed confusedly of several ingredients; a medley.

FARRIER. n. f. [ferrier, French; ferri-arius, Latin.]

1. A shoer of horses.
But the utmost exactness in these particulars belong to farriers, saddlers, smiths, and other tradesmen. Digby.

2. One who professes the medicine of horses.
If you are a piece of a farrier, as every groom ought to be, get sack, or strong-beer to rub your horses. Swift.

To FARRIER. v. n. [from the noun.] To practise physick or chirurgery on horses.

There are many pretenders to the art of farringing
and cowlching, yet many of them are very ignorant.
Mortimer.

FARROW. n. f. [feaph, Saxon.] A litter of pigs.

Pour in sow's blood that hath litter'd
Her nine farrow. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

To FARROW. v. a. To bring pigs. It is used only of swine.

Sows ready to farrow this time of the year. Tusser.
The swine, although multiparous, yet being bi-fuculous, and only cloven-hoofed, is farrowed with open eyes, as other bifuculous animals. Brown.

Ev'n her, who did her numerous offspring boast,
As fair and fruitful as the sow that carry'd,
The thirty-pigs at one large litter farrow'd. Dryden.

FART. n. f. [pepr, Saxon.] Wind from behind.

Love is the fart
Of every heart;
It pains a man when 'tis kept close;
And others doth offend, when 'tis let loose. Suckling.

To FART. v. a. [from the noun.] To break
wind behind:

As when we a gun discharge,
Although the bore be ne'er so large,
Before the flame from muzzle burst,
Just at the breech it flashes first;
So from my lord his passion broke,
He farted first and then he spoke. Swift.

FARTHER. adv. [This word is now generally considered as the comparative degree of far; but by no analogy can far make farther or farthest: it is therefore probable, that the ancient orthography was nearer the true, and that we ought to write further and furthest, from forth, forth, forthest, forðon, forðen, Saxon;
the o and u, by resemblance of sound, being first confounded in speech, and afterwards in books.] At a greater distance; to a greater distance; more remotely; beyond; moreover.

To make a perfect judgment of good pictures,
when compared with one another, besides rules, there is farther required a long conversation with the best pieces. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

They contented themselves with the opiunions, fashions, and things of their country, without looking any farther. Locke.

FARTHER. adj. [supposed from far, more probably from forth, and to be written further.]

1. More remote.
Let me add a farther truth, that without ties of gratitude, I have a particular inclination to honour
you. Dryden.

2. Longer; tending to greater distance.
Before our farther way the fates allow,
Here must we fix on high the golden bough. Dryden.

FARTHERANCE. n. f. [more properly furtherance from further.] Encouragement; promotion.

That was the foundation of the learning I have,
and of all the fartherance that I have obtained.
Aschan's Schoolmaster.

FARTHERMORE. adv. [more properly furthermore.] Besides; over and above; likewise.

Farthermore the leaves, body, and boughs of this tree, by so much exceed all other plants, as the greatest men of power and wordly ability surpass the meanest. Raleigh's History.

To FARTHER. v. a. [more proper To further.] To promote; to facilitate; to advance.

He had farthered or hindered the taking of the town. Dryden.

FARTHEST. adv. [more properly furthest.]
See FARTHER.

1. At the greatest distance.
2. To the greatest distance.

FARTHEST. adj. Most distant; remotest.
Yet it must be withal considered, that the greatest part of the world are they which be farthest from perfection. Hobbes.

FARTHING. n. f. [peonðling, Saxon, from peopen, four, that is, the fourth part of a penny.]

1. The fourth of a penny; the smallest English coin.

A farthing is the least denomination or fraction of money used in England. Cocker's Arithmetick.
Else all those things we toil so hard in,
Would not avail one single farthing. Prior.

You are not obliged to take money not of gold or silver; not the halfpence or farthings of England.
Swift.

2. Copper money.
The parish find, 'tis true; but our churchwardens
Feed on the silver, and give us the farthings. Gay.

3. It is used sometimes in a sense hyperbolical: as, it is not worth a farthing; or proverbial.

His son builds on, and never is content,
'Till the last farthing is in structure spent. Dryden.

4. A kind of division of land. Not in use.
Thirty acres make a farthing-land; nine farthings a Cornish acre; and four Cornish acres a knight's fee. Carew.

FARTHINGALE. n. f. [This word has much exercised the etymology of Skinner, who at last seems to determine that it is derived from vertu garde: if he had considered what vert signifies in Dutch, he might have found out the true sense.]
A hoop; circles of whalebone used to spread the petticoat to a wide circumference.

With silken coats, and caps, and golden rings,
With ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales and things.
Shakespeare.

Tell me,
What compass will you wear your farthingale?
Shakespeare.

Arthur wore in hall
Round table, like a farthingale. Hudibras.

Some will have it that it portends the downfall of the French king; and observe, that the farthingale appeared in England a little before the ruin of the Spanish monarchy. Addison.

She seems a medley of all ages,
With a huge farthingale to swell her rustian stuff,
A new commode, a topknot and a ruff. Swift.

FARTHINGSWORTH. n. f. [farthing and worth.] As much as is sold for a farthing.
They are my customers; I hardly ever sell them a farthingworth of any thing. Arbutnot.

FASCES. n. f. [Latin.] Rods anciently carried before the consuls as a mark of their authority.

The duke beheld, like Scipio, with disdain,
That Carthage, which he ruin'd, rise once more;
And shook aloft the fascies of the main,
To fright those slaves with what they felt before.
Dryden.

FASCIA.

FASCIA. n. f. [Latin.] A fillet; a bandage.
FASCIAED. adj. [from fascia.] Bound with fillets; tied with a bandage. DiD.

FASCIA'ION. n. f. [from fascia.] Bandage; the act or manner of binding diseased parts. Three especial sorts of fasciation, or rowling, have the worthies of our profession commended to posterity. Witsman.

FASCINATE. v. n. [fascino, Latin.] To bewitch; to enchant; to influence in some wicked and secret manner.

There be none of the affections which have been noted to fascinate or bewitch, but love and envy. Bacon.

Such a fascinating sin is this, as allows men no liberty of consideration. Decay of Piety.

FASCINA'TION. n. f. [from fascinate.] The power or act of bewitching; enchantment; unseen inexplicable influence.

He had such a crafty and bewitching fashion, both to move pity and to induce belief, as was like a kind of fascination and enchantment to those that saw him or heard him. Bacon.

The Turks hang old rags, or such like ugly things, upon their fairest horses, and other goodly creatures, to secure them against fascination. Waller.

There is a certain bewitchery or fascination in words, which make them operate with a force beyond what we can naturally give an account of. Soub.

FASCINE. n. f. [French.] A faggot. Military cant.

The Black Prince passed many a river without the help of pontoons, and filled a ditch with faggots as successfully as the generals of our times do with fascines. Addison's Spectator.

FASCINOUS. adj. [fascinem, Lat.] Caused or acting by witchcraft, or enchantment. Not in use.

I shall not discuss the possibility of fascinous diseases, farther than refer to experiment. Harvey.

FASHION. n. f. [façon, French; facies, Latin.]

1. Form; make; state of any thing with regard to its outward appearance.

They pretend themselves grieved at our solemnities in erecting churches, at their form and fashion, at the stateliness of them and costliness, and at the opinion which we have of them. Hooker.

The fashion of his countenance was altered. Luke.
 Stand these poor people's friend.

—I will,
 Or let me loose the fashion of a man. Shakespeare.

2. The make or cut of cloaths.

I'll be at charges for a looking-glass, and entertain a score or two of tailors, and entertain a score or two of tailors, To study fashions to adorn my body. Shakespeare.

You, sir, I entertain for one of my hundred; only, I do not like the fashion of your garments. Shakespeare.

3. Manner; fort; way.

For that I love your daughter
 In such a righteous fashion as I do,
 Perforce against all checks, rebukes, and manners,
 I must advance. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 Pluck Casca by the sleeve,
 And he will, after his four fashion, tell you
 What hath proceeded. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

The commissioners either pulled down or detaced all images in churches; and that in such unseasonable and unseasoned fashion, as if it had been done in hostility against them. Hayward.

4. Custom operating upon drefs, or any domestick ornaments.

Here's the note
 How much your chain weighs to the utmost carat,
 The fineness of the gold, the chargeful fashion. Shakespeare.

5. Custom; general practice.

Zelmene again, with great admiration, begun to speak of him; asking whether it were the fashion or no, in Arcadia, that shepherds should perform such valorous enterprises? Sidney.

Though the truth of this hath been universally acknowledged, yet because the fashion of the age is to call every thing into question, it will be requisite to satisfy men's reason about it. Tillotson.

No wonder that pastorals are fallen into disesteem, together with that fashion of life upon which they were grounded. Walsh.

It was not easily reconciled to the common method; but then it was the fashion to do such things. Arbutnot.

6. Manner imitated from another; way established by precedent.

Sorrow so royally in you appears,
 That I will deeply put the fashion on,
 And wear it in my heart. Shakespeare.

7. General approbation; mode.

A young gentleman accommodates himself to the innocent diversions in fashion. Locke.

His panegyrics were bestowed only on such persons as he had familiarly known, and only at such times as others cease to praise, when out of power, or out of fashion. Pope.

8. Rank; condition above the vulgar. It is used in a sense below that of quality.

It is strange that men of fashion, and gentlemen, should so grossly belie their own knowledge. Raleigh.

9. Any thing worn.

Now, by this maiden blossom in my hand,
 I scorn thee, and thy fashion, peevish boy. Shakespeare.

10. The farcy, a distemper in horses; the horses leprosy. A barbarous word.

His horse is possest with the glanders, infested with the fashions, and full of windgalls. Shakespeare.

TO FASHION. v. a. [façonner, French, from the noun.]

1. To form; to mould; to figure.

He loves me well, and I have giv'n him reason;
 Send him but hither, and I'll fashion him. Shakespeare.

Did not he that made me in the womb, make him? And did not one fashion us in the womb? Job.

The graves of the rebellious generations were already fashioned in the clouds, which foot after should swallow up all living creatures. Raleigh.

The rib he form'd and fashion'd with his hands:
 Under his forming hands a creature grew,
 Man like, but different sex. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Inability will every one find in himself, who shall go about to fashion in his understanding any simple idea, not received by his senses from external objects, or by reflection from the operations of his mind about them. Locke.

How could this noble fabrick be design'd,
 And fashion'd, by a maker brute and blind;
 Could it of art such miracles invent?
 And raise a beauteous world of such extent; Blackm.

A different toil another forge employs,
 Here the loud hammer fash on female toys:
 Each trinket that adorns the modern dame,
 First to these little artists ow'd its frame. Gay's Fan.

2. To fit; to adapt; to accommodate.

Laws ought to be fashioned unto the manners and conditions of the people to whom they are meant, and not to be imposed upon them according to the simple rule of right. Spenser.

Ne do, I doubt, but that ye well can fashion
 Yourselves thereto, according to occasion. Hubb. Tale.

Nature, as it grows again tow'rds earth,
 Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy. Shak.

This cardinal,
 Though from an humble stock undoubtedly,
 Was fashion'd to much honour from his cradle. Shak. Hen. VIII.

3. To counterfeit. Not used.

It better fits my blood to be disdain'd of all, than to fashion a carriage to rob love from any. Shakespeare.

4. To make according to the rule prescribed by custom.

The value of the labour employed about one parcel of silver more than another, makes a difference in their price; and thus fashioned plate sells for more than its weight. Locke.

FASHIONABLE. adj. [from fashion.]

1. Approved by custom; established by custom; modish.

The eminence of your condition will invite gentlemen to the study of nature, and make philosophy fashionable. Giarville.

Examine how the fashionable practice of the world can be reconciled to this important doctrine of our religion. Rogers.

'Tis prevailing example hath now made it fashionable. Bentley.

2. Made according to the mode.

Rich, fashionable robes her person deck;
 Pendants her ears, and pearls adorn her neck. Dryd.

3. Observant of the mode.

Time is like a fashionable host,
 That slightly shakes his parting guest by th. hand;
 But with his arms outstretch'd, as he would fly,
 Grasps in the corner: welcome ever smiles,
 And farewell goes out sighing. Shakespeare.

4. Having rank above the vulgar, and below nobility.

FASHIONABLENESS. n. f. [from fashionable.] Modish elegance; such appearance as is according to the present custom.

FEE. n. s. [peoh, Saxon; fee, Danish, cattle; feudum, low Latin; feu, Scottish.]

1. [In law.] All lands and tenements that are held by any acknowledgment of superiority to a higher lord. All lands and tenements, wherein a man hath a perpetual estate to him and his heirs, &c. are divided into allodium and feudum: allodium is every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without acknowledgement of any service, or payment of any rent to any other. Feudum, or fee, is that which we hold by the benefit of another, and in name whereof we owe services, or pay rent, or both, to a superior lord. And all our land in England, the crown-land, which is in the king's own hands, in right of his crown, excepted, is in the nature of feudum; for though a man have land by descent from his ancestors, or bought it for his money; yet is the land of such a nature, that it cannot come to any, either by descent or purchase, but with the burthen that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or first of all received it as a benefit from his lord, to him and to all such to whom it might descend, or be any way conveyed from him. So that no man in England has directum dominium, that is, the very property or demesne in any land, but the prince in right of his crown: for though he that has fee has jus perpetuum & utile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not simply his own. Fee is divided into two sorts; fee-absolute, otherwise called fee-simple, and fee-conditional, otherwise termed fee-tail: fee-simple is that whereof we are seized in those general words, To us and our heirs for ever: fee-tail is that whereof we are seized to us and our heirs, with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body. And fee-tail is either general or special: general is where land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body: fee-tail special, is that where a man and his wife are seized of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies. Cowel.

Now like a lawyer, when he land would let,
 Or sell fee-simples in his master's name.

Here's the Lord of the soil come to seize me for a fray, for entering his fee-simple without leave. Shakespeare. Henry. VI.

2. Property; peculiar.

What concern they?
 The general cause? or is it a fee-grief,
 Due to some single breast? Shakespeare.

3. Reward; gratification; recompense.

These be the ways by which, without reward,
 Livings in courts begotten, though full hard;
 For nothing there is done without a fee. Hubbert.

called the missel thrush, or feeder upon missel.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

4. One that eats in a certain mode; as, a nice feeder, a gross feeder.

But such fine feeders are no guests for me;
Riot agrees not with frugality:
Then, that unfashionable man am I,
With me they'd starve for want of ivory. Dryden.

TO FEEL. pret. felt; part. pass. felt. v. u.
[Felan, Saxon.]

1. To have perception of things by the touch.

The sense of feeling can give us a notion of extension, shape, and all other ideas that enter at the eye, except colours. Addison's Spect.

2. To search by feeling. See FEELER.

They should seek the Lord, if happily they might feel after him, and find him. Ain.

3. To have a quick sensibility of good or evil, right or wrong.

Man, who feels for all mankind. Pope.

4. To appear to the touch.

Blind men say black feels rough, and white feels smooth. Dryden.
Of these tumours one feels flaccid and rumpled;
the other more even, statulent and springy. Sharp.

TO FEEL. v. a.

1. To perceive by the touch.

Suffer me that I may feel the pillars. Judges.

2. To try; to found.

He hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour. Shakespeare.

3. To have perception of.

The air is so thin, that a bird has therein no feeling, of her wings, or any resistance of air to mount herself by. Raleigh.

4. To have sense of external pain or pleasure.

Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel.

Milton.
But why should those be thought to scape, who feel
These rods of scorpions and those whips of steel?
Creech.

5. To be affected by; to perceive mentally.

Would I had never trod this English earth,
Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it!

Shakespeare Henry VIII.
The well-sung woes shall loath my pensive ghost;
He best can paint them who can feel them most. Pope.

Not youthful kings in battle seiz'd alive,
E'er felt such grief, such terror, and despair. Pope.

6. To know; to be acquainted with.

His overthrow heap'd till happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little. Shakespeare Henry VIII.

FEEL. n. f. [from the verb.] The sense of feeling; the touch.

The difference of these tumours will be distinguished by the feel. Sharp's Surgery.

FEELER. n. f. [from feel.]

1. One that feels.

This hand, whose touch,
Whose every touch would force the feeler's soul
To th' oath of loyalty. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

2. The horns or antennæ of insects.

Insects clean their eyes with their forelegs as well as antennæ; and as they are perpetually feeling and searching before them with their feelers or antennæ,
I am apt to think that besides wiping and cleaning the eyes, the uses here named may be admitted. Derham's Physico-Theology.

FEELING. participial adj. [from feel.]

1. Expressive of great sensibility.

O wretched state of man in self-division!
O well thou say'st a feeling declaration
Thy tongue hath made of Cupid's deep incision!
Sidney.

Thy wailing words do much my spirits move,
They uttered are in such a feeling fashion. Sidney.

2. Sensibly felt. This sense is not sufficiently analogical.

Write 'till your ink be dry, and with your tears
Moist it again; and frame some feeling line,
That may discover such integrity. Shakespeare.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakespeare.

I had a feeling sense
Of all your royal favours; but this last Strikes through my heart. Soutberne.

FEELING. n. f. [from feel.]

1. The sense of touch.

Why was the sight
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd;
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That the might look at will through every pore?
Milton.

2. Power of action upon sensibility.

The apprehension of the good,
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse. Shakespeare's Richard II.

3. Perception; sensibility.

Their king, out of a princely feeling, was sparing and compassionate towards his subjects. Bacon.
Great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it. Bacon.

As we learn what belongs to the body by the evidence of sense, so we learn what belongs to the soul by an inward consciousness, which may be called a sort of internal feeling. Watts.

FEELINGLY. adv. [from feeling.]

1. With expression of great sensibility.

The princes might judge that he meant himself, who spake so feelingly. Sidney.
He would not have talked so feelingly of Codrus's bed, if there had been room for a bedfellow in it. Pope.

2. So as to be sensibly felt.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy plang,
And chillish chiding of the Winter's wind,
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n 'till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,

This is no flattery: these are counsellors,
That feelingly persuade me what I am. Shakespeare.
He feelingly knew, and had trial of the late good, and of the new purchased evil. Raleigh.

FEET. n. f. The plural of foot.

His brother's image to his mind appears.
Inflames his heart with rage, and wings his feet with fears. Pope.

FEETLESS. adj. [from feet.] Being without feet.

Geoffrey of Boulloin broched three feetless birds, called Allerions, upon his arrow. Camden.

TO FEIGN. v. a. [feindre, French; fingere,
Latin.]

1. To invent; to image by an act of the mind.

Abominable, inutterable, and worse
Than fables yet have feign'd, or fear conceiv'd, Gorgons, and hydras, and chimeras dire! Milton.
No such things are done as thou sayest, but thou feign'st them out of thine own heart. Neb. vi. 8.

2. To make a show of.

Both his hands, most filthy sculent,
Above the water were on high extent,
And feigned to wash themselves incessantly. F. Q.

3. To make a shew of; to do upon some false pretence.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope.

4. To dissemble; to conceal. Now obsolete.

Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,
As ghastly bug their hair on end does rear;
Yet both do thrive their fearfulness to feign. Fairy Queen.

TO FEIGN. v. u. To relate falsely; to image from the invention; to tell fa-bulously.

There're the poet
Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, fennes, and flood;
Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
Eut mulick for the time doth change his nature. Shakespeare.

FEIGNEDLY. adv. [from feign.] In fiction;
not truly.

Such is found to have been falsely and feignedly in some of the heathens. Bacon.

FEIGNER. n. f. [from feign.] Inventer;
contriver of a fiction.

And these three voices differ; all the things done, the doing and the doer; the things feigned, the feigning and the feigner; so the poem, the poet, and the poet. Ben Jonson.

FEINT. participial adj. [from feign, for feigned; or feint, Fr.] Counterfeit;
feeming.

The mind by degrees loses its natural relish of real, solid truth, and is reconciled insensibly to any thing that can be but dressed up into any feint appearance of it. Locke.

FEINT. n. f. [feint, French.]

1. A false appearance; an offer of something not intended to be.

Courtly's letter is but a feint to get off. Spectator.

2. A mock assault; an appearance of aiming at one part, when another is intended to be struck.

But, in the breast encamp'd, prepares
For well-bied feints and future wars. Prior.

FE'LANDERS. n. f. Worms in hawks.

TO FELICITATE. v. a. [feliciter, French;
felicito, Lat.]

1. To make happy.

I profess
Myself an enemy to all other joys;
And find I am alone felicitate.
In your dear highness' love. Shakespeare.

What

FEL

What a glorious entertainment and pleasure would fill and felicitate his spirit, if he could grasp all in a single survey! Watts.

2. To congratulate.
They might proceed unto forms of speeches, felicitating the good, or depreciating the evil to follow. Brown.

FELICITATION. n. f. [French, from felicitate.] Congratulation. DiB.

FELICITOUS. adj. [felix, Lat.] Happy. DiB.

FELICITOUSLY. adv. [from felicitous.] Happily. DiB.

FELICITY. n. f. [felicitas, Latin; felicité, Fr.] Happiness; prosperity; blissfulness; blessedness.
The joyous day, dear Lord, with joy begin,
And grant that we, for whom thou didst die,
Being with thy dear blood clean wash'd from sin,
May live for ever in felicity. Spenser's Sonnets.
Others in virtue plac'd felicity;
But virtue join'd with riches and long life,
In corporal pleasure they and careless ease. Milton.
The felicities of her wonderful reign may be complete. Atherbury.
How great, how glorious a felicity, how adequate to the desires of a reasonable nature, is revealed to our hopes in the gospel? Rogers.

FELINE. adj. [felinus, Latin.] Like a cat; pertaining to a cat.
Even as in the beaver; from which he differs principally to his teeth, which are canine, and in his tail, which is feline, or a long taper. Grey.

FELL. adj. [pelle, Saxon.]

1. Cruel; barbarous; inhuman.
It seem'd fury, discord, madness fell,
Flew from his lap when he unfolds the same. Fairfax.
So felless foes,
Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep,
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shakespeare.

2. Savage; ravenous; bloody.
That infant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.
I know thee, love! wild as the raging main,
More fell than tigers on the Libyan plain. Pope.
Scorning all the taming arts of man,
The keen hyena, felless of the fell. Thomson.

FELL. n. f. [pelle, Saxon.] The skin; the hide. Not used.
Wipe thine eyes;
The gougers shall devour them, flesh and fell,
Ere they shall make us weep. Shakespeare.
The time has been my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night-shriek; and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir. Shakespeare.

To FELL. v. a. [fellan, German.]

1. To knock down; to bring to the ground.
Villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down. Shakespeare.
Up and down he traverser his ground;
Now wards a falling blow, now strikes again. Daniel.
Taking the small end of his musket in his hand, he struck him on the head with the stock, and fell
him. Raleigh.
His fall, for the present, struck an earthquake into all minds; nor could the vulgar be induced to believe he was *fell*d. Howell.
On their whole host I flew
Unarm'd, and with a trivial weapon *fell*d
Their choicest youth, they only liv'd who fled. Milton.

2. It seems improperly joined with down or along.
Whom with such force he struck he *fell*d him down,
And cleft the circle of his golden crown. Dryden.
I *fell*d along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case. Dryden.

3. To hew down; to cut down.
Then would he seem a farmer that would fell
Bargains of woods, which he did lately fell. Hubb.

FEL

Proud Arcite and fierce Palamon,
In mortal battle doubling blow on blow;
Like lightning flam'd their Faulchions to and fro,
And shot a dreadful gleam; so strong they struck,
There seem'd less force requir'd to fell an oak. Dryden.

FELL. The preterite of To fall.
None on their feet might stand,
Though standing else as rocks; but down they fell
By thousands, angel on archangel roll'd. Milton.

FELLER. n. f. [from fell.] One that hews down.
Since thou art laid down, no *fell*er is come up against us. Jf. xiv. 8.

FELLIFULOUS. adj. [fel and flus, Latin.]
Flowing with gall. DiB.

FELLMONGER. n. f. [from fell.] A dealer in hides.
FELLINESS. n. f. [from fell.] Cruelty; savageness; fury; rage.
When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown so salt, and all his armour steep,
For very fellness load he 'gan to weep. Fairy Queen.

FELLOE. n. f. [selge, Danish.] The circumference of a wheel; the outward part.
It is often written fally or felly.
Out, out, thou trumpet Fortune! all you gods,
In general synod, take away her power;
Break all the spokes and fellies from her wheel,
And bowl the round-oave down the hill of heav'n. Shakespeare.
Axle-trees, naves, felloe, and spokes were all molten. King.

FELLOW. n. f. [quasi, to follow; Minshew; from pe, faith, and lag, bound, Saxon, Junius; fallow, Scottish.]

1. A companion; one with whom we consort.
In youth I had twelve fellows like unto myself, but not one of them came to a good end. Asebam.
To be your fellow,
You may deny me: but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no. Shakespeare. Tempest.
Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
That one should be the common good of both;
One soul should both inspire; and neither prove
His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love? Dryden.

2. An associate; one united in the same affair.
Each on his fellow for assistance calls;
At length the fatal fabric mounts the walls. Dryden's Virgil.

3. One of the same kind.
Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;
And own no liberty, but where they may Without controul upon their fellows prey. Waller.
A shepherd had one favourite dog: he fed him with his own hand, and took more care of him than of his fellows. L'Estrange.

4. Equal; peer.
So you are to be hereafter fellows, and no longer servants. Sidney.
Chieftain of the rest
I chose him here: the earth shall him allow;
His fellows late, shall be his subjects now. Fairfax.

5. One thing suited to another; one of a pair.
When virtue is lodg'd in a body, that seems to have been prepared for the reception of vice; the foul and the body do not seem to be fellows. Addison's Spectator.

6. One like or equal to another: as, this knave hath not his fellow.
7. A familiar appellation used sometimes with fondness; sometimes with esteem; but generally with some degree of contempt.
This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.
—The same indeed; a very valiant fellow. Shakes.
An officer was in danger to have lost his place, but his wife made his peace; whereupon a pleasant fellow said, that he had been crush'd, but that he saved himself upon his horns. Bacon.

FEL

Fell fifteen thousand lusty fellows
With fire and sword the fort maintain;
Each was a Hercules, you tell us;
Yet out they march'd like common men. Prior.

8. A word of contempt; the foolish mortal; the mean wretch; the sorry rascal.
Those great fellows scornfully receiving them, as foolish birds fallen into their net, it pleas'd the eternal Justice to make them suffer death by their hands. Sidney.
Cassio hath here been set on the dark
By Rodrigo, and fellows that are 'scap'd. Shakesp.
I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks he hath no drowning mark about him; his complexion is perfect gallows. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Opinion that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;
And left me in reputation's banishment,
A fellow of no mark or likelihood. Shakesp.
How oft the sight of means, to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done? For had't thou not been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted and sign'd to do a deed of shame,
This murder had hor come into my mind. Shakesp.
The Moor's abus'd by some most villainous knave,
Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow! Shakespeare's Othello.
The fellow had taken more fish than he could spend while they were sweet. L'Estrange.
As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingraft a foreign name
Upon our stock; and the Sisyphian seed
By fraud and theft affests his father's breed. Dryden.
You will wonder how such an ordinary fellow, as this Mr. Wood, could have got his Majesty's broad seal. Swift.
You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,
Or, cober-like, the parson will be drunk,
Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
The rest is all but leather and prunella. Pope.

9. Sometimes it implies a mixture of pity with contempt.
The provost commanded his men to hang him up on the nearest tree: then the fellow cried out that he was not the miller, but the miller's man. Hayward.

10. A member of a college that shares its revenues; or of any incorporated society.
There should be a million of three of the fellows or brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the affairs and state of those countries to which they were design'd. Bacon.

To FELLOW. v. a. To suit with; to pair with; to match. Fellow is often used in composition to mark community of nature, station, or employment.
Imagination,
With what's unreal, thou co-active art,
And fellow'st nothing. Shakespeare.

FELLOW-COMMONER. n. f.

1. One who has the same right of common.
He cannot appropriate, he cannot inclose, without the consent of all his fellow-commoners, all mankind. Locke.

2. A commoner at Cambridge of the higher order, who dines with the fellows.

FELLOW-CREATURE. n. f. One that has the same creator.
Reason is the glory of human nature, and one of the chief eminencies whereby we are raised above our fellow-creatures, the brutes, in this lower world. Watts's Logic, Introduction.

FELLOW-HEIR. n. f. Coheir; partner of the same inheritance.
The Gentiles should be fellow-heirs. Eph. iii. 6.

FELLOW-HELPER. n. f. Coadjutor; one who concurs in the same business.
We ought to receive such, that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth. 3 John. 8.

FELLOW-LABOURER. n. f. One who labours in the same design.

F E L

My fellow-labourers have commissioned me to perform in their behalf this office of dedication.
Dryden's Jew. Ded.

FELLOW-SERVANT. n. s. One that has the same master.

Nor less think we in heav'n of thee on earth,
Than of our fellow-servant; and inquire Gladly into the ways of God with man. Milton.

Fair fellow-servant! may your gentle ear
Prove more propitious to my slighted care
Than the bright dames we serve. Waller.

Their fathers and yours were fellow-servants to the same heavenly master while they lived; nor is that relation dissolved by their death, but ought still to operate among their surviving children. Astell.

FELLOW-SOLDIER. n. s. One who fights under the same commander. An endearing appellation used by officers to their men.

Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation.

Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier. Phil. ii. 25.

FELLOW-STUDENT. n. s. One who studies in company with another, in the same class, under the same master.

I pry'thee do not mock me, fellow-student.
Shakespeare's Hamlet.
If you have no fellow-student at hand, tell it over with your acquaintance. Watts's Logick.

FELLOW-SUBJECT. n. s. One who lives under the same government.

The bleeding condition of their fellow-subjects was a feather in the balance with their private ends. Swift.

FELLOW-SUFFERER. n. s. One who shares in the same evils; one who partakes the same sufferings with another.

How happy was it for those poor creatures, that your grace was made their fellow-sufferer? And how glorious for you, that you chose to want rather than not relieve? Dryden.

We in some measure share the necessities of the poor at the same time that we relieve them, and make ourselves not only their patrons but fellow-sufferers. Addison's Spectator.

FELLOW-WRITER. n. s. One who writes at the same time, or on the same subject.

Since they cannot raise themselves to the reputation of their fellow-writers, they must sink it to their own pitch, if they would keep themselves upon a level with them. Addison.

FELLOW-FEELING. n. s. [fellow and feeling.]

1. Sympathy.
It is a high degree of inhumanity not to have a fellow-feeling of the misfortune of my brother. L'Estrange.

2. Combination; joint interest: commonly in an ill sense.

Even your milkwoman and your nurserymaid have a fellow-feeling. Arbutnot.

FELLOWLIKE. } adj. [fellow and like.]

FELLOWLY. } Like a companion; on equal terms; companionable.

All which good parts he graceth with a good fellowly, kind, and respectful carriage. Carew.

With fellowly neighbourhood seemeth not strange. Tupper.

FELLOWSHIP. n. s. [from fellow.]

1. Companionship; consort; society.

This boy cannot tell what he would have
But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship. Shakespeare.

From blissful bow'rs
Of amaranthine shade, fountain, or spring,
By th' waters of life, where'er they lat
In fellowships of joy, the fons of light Malted. Milton's Paradise Lost.

F E L

There is no man but God puts excellent things into his possession, to be used for the common good; for men are made for society and mutual fellowship. Calamy's Sermons.

God having designed man for a sociable creature, made him not only with an inclination, and under the necessity to have fellowship with those of his own kind, but furnished him also with language, which was to be the great instrument and cement of society. Locke.

2. Association; confederacy; combination.

We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us. Shakespeare.
Those laws do bind men absolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any settled fellowship, never any solemn agreement amongst themselves. Hooker.

Most of the other Christian princes were drawn into the fellowship of that war. Knolles.

3. Equality.

4. Partnership; joint interest.

Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lighten's aught each man's peculiar load. Paradise Regained.

O love! thou sternly dost thy power maintain,
And will not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain. Dryden.

5. Company; state of being together.

The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship. But hark, a fall! Shakespeare.

6. Frequency of intercourse; social pleasure.

In a great town friends are scattered, so that there is not that fellowship which is in less neighbourhoods. Bacon's Essays.

7. Fitness and fondness for festal entertainments, with good prefixed.

He had by his excessive good fellowship, which was grateful to all the company, made himself popular with all the officers of the army. Clarendon.

Corusodes, having, by extreme parsimony, saved thirty pounds out of a beggarly fellowship, went to London. Swift.

9. [In arithmetick.] That rule of plural proportion whereby we balance accounts, depending between divers persons, having put together a general stock, so that they may every man have his proportional gain, or sustain his proportional part of loss. Cocker.

FELLY. adv. [from fell.] Cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fair ye be sure, but cruel and unkind;
As is a tiger, that with greediness
Hunts after blood, when he by chance doth find
A feeble beast doth felly him oppress. Spenser.

FELO-DE-SE. n. s. [In law.] He that committeth felony by murdering himself.

FELON. n. s. [felon, French; felo, low Latin; pel, Saxon.]

1. One who has committed a capital crime.

I apprehend thee for a felon here. Shakespeare.
The wily fox,
Chas'd even amid' the loids; and made to bleed,
Like felons, where they did the murderous deed. Dryden.

2. A whitlow; a tumour formed between the bone and its investing membrane, very painful.

The malign paronychia is that which is commonly called a felon. Wifeman's Surgery.

FELON. adj. Cruel; traitorous; inhuman.

Ay me! what thing on earth, that all things breeds,
Might be the cause of so impatient plight!
What fury, or what fiend with felon deeds,
Hath stirr'd up to 'mischievous despoight!
Then bids prepare th' hospitable treat,
Vain shews of love to veil his felon hate. Pope.

F E M

FELONIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; traitorous; villainous; malignant; perfidious; destructive.

This man conceived the duke's death; but what was the motive of that felonious conception is in the clouds. Waller.

O thievish night!
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd the lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the miled and lonely traveller? Milton.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies. Dryden.

FELONIOUSLY. adv. [from felonious.] In a felonious way.

FELONIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked. Not used.

I am like for desperate dole to die,
Through felonious force of mine enemy. Spenser.

FELONY. n. s. [felonie, French; felmia, low Latin; from felon.] A crime denounced capital by the law; an enormous crime.

A small open boat with six oars. Dict.

FEMALE. n. s. [femelle, French; femella, Latin.] A she; one of the sex which brings young; not male.

God created man in his own image, male and female created he them. Gen. i. 27.

It he offer it of the herd, whether it be male or female, he shall offer it without blemish. Lev.

Men, more divine,
Indu'd with intellectual sense and soul,
Are masters to their females, and their lords. Shakespeare.

FEMALE. adj.

1. Not male.

Female of sex it seems. Milton.
Swarming next appear'd
The female bee, that feeds her husband drone. Milton.

2. Not masculine; belonging to a she.

Other suns, perhaps,
With their attendant moons thou wilt descry,
Communicating male and female light;
Which two great sexes animate the world. Milton.

Add what wants
In female sex, the more to draw his love. Milton.

He scrupled not to eat
Against his better knowledge, not deceiv'd,
But fondly overcome with female charm. Milton.

If by a female hand he had foreseen
He was to die, his wish had rather been
The lance and double ax of the fair warrior queen. Dryden.

3. FEMALE Rhymes. Double rhymes so called because in French, from which the term is taken, they end in a weak or feminine. These rhymes are female:

FEN

Th' excess of heat is but a fable;
We know the torrid zone is now found habitable.

Cowley.
The female rhymes are in use with the Italian in every line, with the Spaniard promiscuously, and with the French alternately, as appears from the Alarique, the Pucelle, or any of their later poems.

Dryden's Pref. to Ann. Mirab.

or hurricanes. L'Estrange.

To put them out of their parents view, at a great d'istance, is to expose them to the greatest dangers of their whole life, when they have the least fence and guard against them. Locke.

Let us bear this awful corps to Cæsar,

And lay it in his sight, that it may stand

A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath. Addison.

2. Inclosure; mound; hedge; fortified boundary.

In vain did nature's wise command

Divide the waters from the land,

If daring ships and men prophane,

Inva'de th' inviolable main;

Th' eternal fences overlap,

And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.

Shall I mention make

Of the vast mound that binds the Lucrine lake?

Or the disdainful sea, that shut from thence,

Rears round the structure, and invades the fence? Dryden.

FEN

Employ their wiles and unavailing care,
To pass the fences and surprize the fair. Pope.

He having got some iron, should have it beaten into swords, and put into his servants hands to fence with, and bang one another. Locke.

2. To guard against; to act on the defensive.

Vice is the more stubborn as well as the more dangerous evil, and therefore in the first place to be fenced again. Locke.

3. To fight according to art, by obviating blows as well as giving.

If a thrille sing, he falls straight a capering:

He will fence with his own shadow. Shakespeare.

A beauteous heifer in the wood is bred;

The stooping warriors aiming head to head,

Engage their clashing horns; with dreadful sound

The forest rattles, and the rocks rebound;

The fence and push, and pushing, loudly roar,

Their dewlaps and their sides are bath'd in gore. Dryden.

A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullies and gamesters company. Locke.

These, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgelplaying. Arbutnot and Pope.

FENCELESS. adj. [from fence.] Without inclosure; open.

Each motion of the heart rises to fury,

And love in their weak bosoms is a rage

As terrible as hate, and as destructive:

So the wind roars o'er the wide fenceless ocean,

And heaves the billows of the boiling deep,

Alike from North, from South. Rowe's Jure Shore.

FENCER. n. f. [from fence.] One who teaches or practises the use of weapons, or science of defence.

Calmness is great advantage; he that lets

Another chafe, may warm him at his fire;

Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets;

As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbers.

A nimble fencer will put in a thrust so quick, that the foil will be in your bosom when you thought it a yard off. Digby.

FENCIBLE. adj. [from fence.] Capable

Mean time flew our ships, and straight we fetch'd
The syrens isle; a spleenless wind fo stretch
Her wings to wait us, and fo urg'd our keel. Chapm.

If earth, industrious of herself, fetch day
Travelling East; and with her part averse
From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part Still luminous by his ray. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The hare laid himself down, and took a nap; for, says he, I can fetch up the tortoise when I please. L'Estrange.

10. To obtain as its price.

During such a state, silver in the coin will never fetch as much as the silver in bullion. Locke.

TO FETCH. v. n. To move with a quick return.

Like a shifted wind unto a sail,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about. Shakespeare.

FETCH. n. s. [from the verb.] A stratagem by which any thing is indirectly performed; by which one thing seems intended and another is done; a trick; an artifice.

An envious neighbour is easy to find,
His cumbersome fetches are seldom behind;
His fetch is to flatter, to get what he can;
His purpose once gotten, a pin for thee then. Tusser.

You laying these slight follies on my son,
As 'twere a thing a little soil'd i' th' working. Shak. Hamlet.

But Sidrophel, as full of tricks
As rota men of politicks,
Stright cast about to over-reach
Th' unwary conqueror with a fetch. Hudibras.

With this fetch he laughs at the trick he hath plaid me. Still.

The fox had a fetch in't. L'Estrange.

From these instances and fetches
Thou mak'st of horses, clocks, and watches;
Quoth Mat, thou seem'st i' to mean
That Alma is a mere machine. Prior.

FETCHER. n. s. [from fetch.] One that fetches any thing.

FETID. adj. [fetidus, Latin; fetid, Fr.] Stinking; rancid; having a smell strong and offensive.

FEUD. n. s. [feahd, enmity, Saxon.] Quarrel; contention; opposition; war.

Though men would find such mortal feuds
In sharing of their public goods. Hudibras.

In former ages it was a policy of France to raise, and cherish intestine feuds and discords in Great Britain. Addison.

Scythia mourns
Our guilty wars, and earth's remotest regions
Lie half unpeopled by the feuds of Rome. Addison.

FEUDAL. adj. [feudalis, low Latin.] Pertaining to fees, feus, or tenures, by which lands are held of a superior lord.

FEUDAL. n. s. A dependence; something held by tenure; a fee; a feu.

Wales, that was not always the feudal territory of England, having been governed by a prince of their own, had laws utterly strange to the laws of England. Hale.

FEUDATORY. n. s. [from feudal.] One who holds not in chief, but by some conditional tenure from a superior.

The duke of Parma was tempted to be true to that enterprise, by no less promise than to be made a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the signiory in chief of the pope, and the protection of Spain. Bacon.

FEVER. n. s. [fièvre, French; febris, Lat.] A disease in which the body is violently heated, and the pulse quickened, or in which heat and cold prevail by turns. It is sometimes continual, sometimes intermittent.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out With

With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to flexure and low bending?
Stakef. Henry V.
Duncan is in 'his grave;
After life's fitful fever he sleeps well. Shakef.
Should not a lingering fever be remov'd,
Because it long has rag'd within my blood? Dryden.
He had never dream'd in his life, 'till he had the fever he was then newly recovered of. Locke.

TO FEVER, v. a. [from the noun.] To put in a fever.

The white hand of a lady fever thee!
Shake to look on't. Shakef. Ant. and Cleop.
Her blood all fever'd, and with a furious leap,
She sprung from bed distracted in her mind. Dryd.

FEVERET, n. f. [from fever.] A slight fever; febricala.

A light feveret, or an old quartan ague, is not a sufficient excuse for non appearance. Ayliffe.

FEVERFEW, n. f. [febris and fugo, Latin.] A plant.

Common feverfew is the sort used in medicine, and is found wild in many parts of England. Miller.

FEVERISH, adj. [from fever.]

1. Diseased with a fever.
To other climates beasts and birds retire,
And feverish nature burns in her own fire. Creech.
When an animal that gives suck turns feverish, that is, its juices more alkaline, the milk turns from its native genuine whiteness to yellow. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Tending to fever.
A feverish disorder disabled me. Swift to Pope.

3. Uncertain; inconstant; now hot, now cold.
We tofs and turn about our feverish will,
When all our ease must come by lying still;
For all the happiness mankind can gain,
Is not in pleasure, but in rest from pain. Dryden.

4. Hot; burning.
And now four days the sun had seen our woes,
Four nights th' moon beheld th' incessant fire;
It seem'd as if the stars more sickly rose,
And farther from the stars th' North retire. Dryd.

FEVERISHNESS, n. f. [from feverish.] A slight disorder of the feverish kind.

FEVEROUS, adj. [fevreux-fe, French; from fever.]

1. Troubled with a fever or ague.
Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world
Were feverous, and did tremble. Shakef. Coriol.

2. Having the nature of a fever.
All feverous kinds,
Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs. Milton.

3. Having a tendency to produce fevers.
It hath been noted by the ancients, that southern winds, blowing much, without rain, do cause a feverous disposition of the year; but with rain not. Bacon's Natural Hist.

FEVERY, adj. [from fever.] Diseased with a fever.

O Rome, thy head
Is down'd in sleep, and all thy body fev'ry.
Ben Jonf. Catil.

FEUILLAGE, n. f. [French.] A bunch or row of leaves.

Of Homer's head I inclose the outline, that you may determine whether you would have it so large, or reduced to make room for feuillage or laurel round the oval. Jervas to Pope.

FEUILLEMORT, n. f. [French.] The colour of a faded leaf, corrupted commonly to philemet.

FE'UTERER, n. f. A dogkeeper; perhaps the cleaner of the kennel.

FEW, adj. [feo, peopa, Saxon; sua, Danish.]

1. Not many; not in a great number.
We are left but few of many.
So much the think of honour fires the blood;
So many would be great, so few be good;

For who would virtue for herself regard,
Or wed without the portion of reward? Dryden.

On Winter seas we fewer storms behold,
Than foul diseases that infect the fold. Dryden.

Men have fewer or more simple ideas from without, according as the objects they converse with afford greater or less variety. Locke.

The fever still you name, you wound the more;
Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score. Pope.

Party is the madness of many, for the gain of a few. Swift.

The imagination of a poet is a thing so nice and delicate, that it is no easy matter to find out images capable of giving pleasure to one of the few, who, in any age have come up to that character. Berkley to Pope.

2. Sometimes elliptically; not many words.
To answer both allegations at once, the very substance of that they contain is in few but this. Hooker.

So having said, he thus to Eve in few:
Say, woman, what is this which thou hast done? Milton.

Thus Jopiter in few unfold's the charge. Dryden.
The firm resolve I here in few disclose. Pope.

FEWEL, n. f. [feu, French.] Combustible matter; materials for keeping fire: as firewood, coal.

If a spark of error have thus far prevailed, falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts, must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are as dry fewel, apt beforehand unto tumults, seditions, and broils? Hooker, Dedication.

Others may give the fewel or the fire!
But they the breath, that makes the flame, inspire. Denham.

A known quantity of fewel, all kindled at once, will cause water to boil, which being lighted gradually will never be able to do it. Bentley Sermon.

TO FEWEL, v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with fewel.

Never, alas! the dreadful name;
That fewels the infernal flame. Cowley.

FEWNESS, n. f. [from few.]

1. Paucity; smallness of number.
These, by reason of their fewness, I could not distinguish from the numbers with whom they are embodied. Dryd.

2. Paucity of words; brevity; conciseness Fewness and truth, 'tis thus. Shakef.

TO FEY, v. a. [veghen, Dutch.] To cleanse a ditch of mud.

Such muddy deep ditches and pits in the field,
That all a dry Summer no water will yield,
By feyng and casting that mud upon heaps,
Commodities many the husbandman reaps. Tupper.

FIB, n. f. [A cant word among children.] A lie; a falsehood.

Destroy his fib or sophistry in vain,
The creature's at his dirty work again. Pope.

Scarce Harvey's self has told more fibs than I. Poet.

TO FIB, v. n. [from the noun.] To lie; to tell lies; to speak falsely.

If you have any mark, whereby one may know when you fib, and when you speak truth, you had best tell it me. Arbutn.

FIBBER, n. f. [from fib.] A teller of fibs.

FIBRE, n. f. [fibre, Fr. fibra, Latin.]

1. A small thread or string; the first constituent parts of bodies.
Now sliding streams the thirsty plant; renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.

2. A fibre in physick, is an animal thread, of which some are soft, flexible, and a little elastic; and these are either hollow, like small pipes, or spongy and full of little cells, as the nervous and fleshy fibres: others are more solid, flexible, and with a strong elasticity or spring, as the membranous and cartilaginous fibres: and a third sort are hard and flexible, as the fibres of the bones. Some so very small as not to be easily perceived; and others so big as to be plainly seen; and most of them appear to be composed of still smaller fibres: these fibres first constitute the substance of the bones, cartilages, ligaments, membranes, nerves, veins, arteries, and muscles. Quincy.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the springs of life:
The name of father awes me still. Dryden.

FIBRIL, n. f. [fibrille, French.] A small fibre or string.

The muscles consist of a number of fibres, and each fibre of an incredible number of little fibrils bound together, and divided into little cells. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

FIBROUS, adj. [fibreux, French; from fibre.] Composed of fibres or stamina.

The difference between bodies fibrous and bodies viscous is plain, for all wool and tow, and cotton and silk, have a greediness of moisture. Bacon.

I saw Petreus' arms employ'd around
A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground;
This way and that he wrench'd the fibrous bands,
The trunk was like a sapling in his hands. Dryd.

The fibrous and solid parts of plants pass unaltered through the intestines. Arbutnot on Alim.

FIBULA, n. f. [Latin.] The outer and lesser bone of the leg, much smaller than the tibia: it lies on the outside of the leg; and its upper end, which is not so high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a small sinus, which it has in its inner side. Its lower end is received into the small sinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large process, which forms the outer ankle. Quincy.

FICKLE, adj. [ficol, Saxon.]

1. Changeable; inconstant; irresolute; wavering; unsteady; mutable; changeful; without steady adherence.
Remember where we are,
In France amongst a fickle wavering nation. Shak.

A slave, whose easy borrow'd pride
Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows. Shak.

Or likest hovering dreams,
The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train. Milt.

They know how fickle common lovers are;
Their oaths and vows how cautiously believ'd;
For few there are but have been once deceiv'd. Dryden.

We in vain the fickle sex pursue,
Who change the constant lover for the new. Prim.

2. Not fixed; subject to vicissitude.
He would be loth
Us to abolish, lest the adversary
Triumph, and say, fickle their state, whom God Nott favours! Milton's Par. Lost.

FICKLENESS, n. f. [from fickle.] Inconstancy; uncertainty; unsteadiness.

Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fether his fickleness; but, before his marriage-day, he had taken to wife that Baccha of whom she complained. Sidney.

Beware of fraud, beware of fickleness,
In choice and change of thy dear loved dame. Fairy Queen.

I am a soldier, and unapt to weep,
Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness. Shakef.

Instability of tempor ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another, since such a fickleness cannot but be attended with fatal consequences. Addison.

Whether out of fickleness or design I can't tell,
I found that what she liked one day she disliked another. Addison.

FICKLY,

5 D 2

F I D

FICKLY. adv. [from fickle.] Without certainty or stability.

Do not now,
Like a young wasteful heir, mortgage the hopes
Of godlike majesty on bankrupt terms,
To raise a present pow'r that's fickly held
By the frail tenure of the people's will. Southey.

FICO. n. f. [Italian.] An act of contempt done with the fingers, expressing a fig for you.

Having once recovered his mistress, he then gives the fig to his adversaries. Carew.

FICTILE. adj. [fictilis, Latin.] Moulded into form; manufactured by the potter.

The cause of fragility is an impotency to be extended; and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and so fictile earth is more fragil than crude earth. Bacon's Natural History.

FICTION. n. f. [fictio, Latin; fictio, Fr.]

1. The act of feigning or inventing.
If the presence of God in the image, by a mere fictio of the mind, be a sufficient ground to worship that image, is not God's real presence in every creature a far better ground to worship it? Stillingfleet

Fictio is of the essence of poetry, as well as of painting: there is a resemblance in one of human bodies, things, and actions, which are not real; and in the other of a true story by a fictio. Dryden.

2. The thing feigned or invented.

If through mine ears pierce any consolations,
By wild discourse, sweet tunes, or poet's fictions;
If ought I cease these hideous exclamations,
While that my soul the lives in afflictions. Sidney.

So also was the fictio of those golden apples kept by a dragon, taken from the serpent, which tempted Erah. Raleigh.

3. A falsehood; a lye.

FICTITIOUS. adj. [fictivus, Latin.] Fictitious; imaginary; invented. A word coined by Prior.

With fancy'd rules and arbitrary laws
Matter and motion man restrains,
And studied lines and fictitious circles draw. Prior.

FICTITIOUS. adj. [fictivus, Latin.]

1. Counterfeit; false; not genuine.
Draw him strictly to,
That all who view the piece may know
He needs no trappings of fictitious fame. Dryden.

2. Feigned; imaginary.

The human persons are as fictitious as the airy ones; and Belinda resembles you in nothing but in beauty. Pope.

3. Not real; not true; allegorical; made by prospopoeia.

Milton, sensible of this defect in the subject of his poem, brought into it two characters of a shadowy and fictitious nature in the persons of sin and death, by which means he has interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory. Add. Spect.

FICTITIOUSLY. adv. [from fictitious.]

Falsely; counterfeiterly.
These pieces are fictitious let down, and have no copy in nature. Newton's Vulgar Errors.

FID. n. f. [fida, Italian.] A pointed iron with which seamen untwist their cords. Skinner.

In trials of musical skill the judges did not crown the fiddle but the performer. Stillingfleet.

The adventure of the bear and fiddle,
Is sung; but breaks off in the middle. Hudibras.

She tried the fiddle all over, by drawing the bow ever every part of the strings; but could not, for her bear, find whereabouts the tune lay. Add. Jan.

TO FIDDLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To play upon a fiddle.

Themistocles being desired at a feast to touch a lute, he said he could not fiddle, but he could make a small town a great city. Bacon's Essays.

F I D

Others import yet nobler arts from France,
Teach kings to fiddle, and make senators dance. Pope.

2. To trifle; to shift the hands often, and do nothing, like a fellow that plays upon a fiddle.

A cunning fellow observed, that old Lewis had stole away part of the map, and saw him fiddling and turning the map, trying to join the two pieces together. Arbutnot.

Good cooks cannot abide what they justly call fiddling work, where abundance of time is spent, and little done. Swift.

FIDDLEFADDLE. n. f. [A cant word.]

Trifles.
She said that her grandfather had a horse shot at Edgehill, and their uncle was at the siege of Buda; with abundance of fiddlefaddle of the same nature. Spectator.

FIDDLEFADDLE. adj. Trifling; giving trouble, or making a bustle about nothing.

She was a troublesome fiddlefaddle old woman, and so ceremonious that there was no bearing of her. Arbutnot.

FIDDLER. n. f. [from fiddle.] A musician; one that plays upon the fiddle.

Let no sawcy fiddler presume to intrude,
Unless he is sent for to vary our bluffs. Ben Jonson.

Nero put the fiddlers to death, for being more skilful in the trade than he was.

These will appear such chits in story,
'Twill turn all politics to jests,
To be repeated like John Dory,
When fiddlers sing at teals. Dryden.

When miss delights in her spinner,
A fiddler may a fortune get. Swift.

FIDDLESTICK. n. f. [fiddle and stick.] The bow and hair which a fiddler draws over the strings of a fiddle.

His grisly beard was long and thick,
With which he twang his fiddlestick. Hudibras.

FIDDLESTRING. n. f. [fiddle and string.] The string of a fiddle; that which makes the noise.

A fiddlestring, moistened with water, will sink a note in a little time, and consequently must be relaxed or lengthened one sixteenth. Arbutnot.

FIDELITY. n. f. [fideltas, Latin; fidelté, French.]

1. Honesty; veracity.
The church, by her publick reading of the book of God, preached only as a witness; now the principal thing required in a witness is fidelté. Hooker.

2. Faithful adherence.
They mistake credulity for fidelté. Clarke.

TO FIDGE. } v. n. [A cant word.] To

TO FIDGET. } move nimble and irregularly. It implies in Scotland agitation.

Tim, thou'rt the Peach to stir up trouble;
You wriggle fidge, and make a rout,
Put all your brotner puppets out. Swift.

FIDUCIAL. adj. [fiducia, Latin.] Confident; undoubting.

Faith is cordial, and such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obediential submission to the commands. Harmond's Pract. Catech.

FIDUCIARY. n. f. [fiduciarus, Latin.]

1. One who holds any thing in trust.

2. One who depends on faith without works.

The second obstructive is that of the fiduciary, that faith is the only instrument of his justification; and excludes good works from contributing any thing toward it. Harmond.

FIDUCIARY. adj.

1. Confident; steady; undoubting; untouch'd with doubt.

That faith, which is required of us, is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiduciarus assent to whatever the Gospel has revealed. Wale.

F I E

2. Not to be doubted.
Eliziana can rely no where upon mere love and fiduciarus obedience, unless at her own home, where she is exemplarily loyal to herself in a high exact obedience. Howell.

FIEF. n. f. [fief, French.] A fee; a manor; a possession held by some tenure of a superior.

To the next realm she stretch'd her sway,
For painture near adjoining lay.
A plenteous province and alluring prey;
Archambe of dependencies was fram'd,
And the whole fief in right of poetry the claim'd. Dryden.

As they were honoured by great privileges, so their lands were in the nature of fiefs, for which the possessors were obliged to do personal service at sea. Arbutnot on Coins.

FIELD. n. f. [feld, Saxon; feld, German; weld, Dutch.]

1. Ground not inhabited; not built on.
Live with me and be my love,
And we will all the pleasure prove,
That hills and vallies, dale and field,
And all the craggy mountains yield. Raleigh.

By the civil law the corpse of persons deceased were buried out of the city in the fields. Ayliffe.

2. Ground not enclosed.
Field lands are not exempted from mildews, nor yet from smut, where it is more than in inclosed lands. Mortimer.

3. Cultivated tract of ground.
Or great Osiris, who first taught the swain
In Pharian fields to sow the golden grain. Pope.

The custom of the apostle is figuratively to transfer to himself, in the first person, what belongs to others. Hammond.

The words are different, but the sense is still the same; for therein are figuratively intended Uzziah and Ezechias. Brown.

Satyr is a kind of poetry in which human vices are reprehended, partly dramatically, partly simply; but, for the most part, figuratively and occultly. Dryden's Juv. Dedice.

1. The form of any thing as terminated by the outline.

Flowers have all exquisite figures, and the flower numbers are chiefly five and four; as in primroses, briar-roses, single muskroses, single pinks and gilliflowers, which have five leaves; lilies, flower-de-luces, borage, buglafs, which have four leaves. Bacon.

Men find green clay that is soft as long as it is in the water, so that one may print on it all kind of figures, and give it what shape one pleases. Boyle.

Figures are properly modifications of bodies; for pure space is not any where terminated, nor can be whether there be or be not body in it, it is uniformly continued. Locke.

2. Shape; form; semblance.

He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion. Shakspere.

3. Person; external form; appearance graceful or inelegant, mean, or grand.

The blue German shall the Tigris drink,
Ere I, forsaking gratitude and truth,
Forget the figure of that godlike youth. Dryden.

I was charmed with the gratefulness of his figure and delivery, as well as with his discourses. Addison.
A good figure, or person, in man or woman, gives credit at first sight to the choice of either. Clarissa.

4. Distinguished appearance; eminence; remarkable character.

While fortune favour'd, while his arms support
The cause, and rul'd the counsels of the court,
I made some figure there; nor was my name
Obscure, nor I without my share of fame. Dryden.

The speech, I believe, was not so much delign'd by the knight to inform the court, as to give him a figure in my eye, and keep up his credit in the country. Addison's Spectator.

Not a woman shall be uncelebrated that makes a figure either as a maid, a wife, or a widow. Addison's Guardian.

Whether or no they have done well to set you up for making another kind of figure, time will witness. Addison.

Many princes made very ill figures upon the throne, who before were the favourites of the people. Addison's Freeholder.

5. Magnificence; splendour.

If it be his chief end in it to grow rich, that he may live in figure and indulgence, and be able to retire from business to idleness and hurry, his trade, as to him, loses all its innocency. Law.

6. A statue; an image; something formed in resemblance of somewhat else.

Several statues, which seem'd at a distance of the whitest whitest marble, were nothing else but so many figures in snow. Addison.

7. Representations in painting; persons exhibited in colours.
 In the principal figures of a picture the painter is to employ the fineness of his art; for in them consists the principal beauty of his work. Dryden.
 My favourite books and pictures sell;
 Kindly throw in a little figure,
 And let the price upon the bigger. Prior.

8. Arrangement; disposition; modification.
 The figure of a syllogism is the proper disposition of the middle term with the parts of the question. Watts's Logick.

9. A character denoting a number.
 Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number
 His love to Anthony. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.
 He that seeketh to be eminent amongst able men, hath a great task; but that is ever good for the publick: but he that plots to be the only figure among cyphers, is the decay of a whole age. Bacon.
 As in accounts cyphers and figures pass for real sums, so in human affairs words pass for things themselves. Scarb's Sermons.

10. The horoscope; the diagram of the aspects of the astrological houses.
 We do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling: she works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and daubry beyond our element. Shakespeare.
 He set a figure to discover
 If you were tied to Rye or Dover. Hudibras.
 Figure-singers and star-gazers pretend to foretell the fortunes of kingdoms, and have no foresight in what concerns themselves. L'Esrange.

11. [In theology.] Type; representative.
 Who was the figure of him that is to come. Romans.

12. [In rhetorick] Any mode of speaking in which words are detorted from their literal and primitive sense. In strict acceptation, the change of a word is a trope, and any affection of a sentence a figure; but they are confounded even by the exactest writers.
 Silken terms precise,
 Three pill'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
 Figures pedantical, these Summer flies
 Have blow'd me full of maggot ostentation. Shak.
 Here is a strange figure invented against the plain and natural sense of the words; for by praying to bestow, must be understood only praying to pray. Stillingfleet.
 They have been taught rhetorick, but never taught language; as if the names of the figures that embellish the discourse of those, who understood the art of speaking, were the very art and skill of speaking well. Locke.

13. [In grammar.] Any deviation from the rules of analogy or syntax.
 To FIGURE. v. a. [from figuro, Latin.]
 1. To form into any determinate shape.
 Trees and herbs, in the growing forth of their boughs and branches, are not figured, and keep no order. Bacon.
 Accept this goblet, rough with figur'd gold. Dryd. Virg.

2. To show by a corporeal resemblance: as in picture or statuary.
 Arachne figur'd how Jove did abuse
 Europa like a bull, and on his back
 Her through the sea did bear; so lively seen,
 That it true sea, and true bull ye would ween. Spenser.
 Now marks the course of rolling orbs on light,
 O'er figur'd world now travels with his eye. Pope.

3. To cover or adorn with figures, or images.
 I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
 My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
 My gay apparel for an almshouse's gown,
 My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shakesp.

4. To diversify; to variegate with adventitious forms or matter.
 But this effusion of such manly drops,
 Startle mine eyes, and make me more amaz'd
 Than had I seen the vaulty top of heav'n Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors. Shakesp.

5. To represent by a typical or figurative resemblance.
 When sacraments are said to be visible signs of invisible grace, we thereby conceive how grace is indeed the very end for which these heavenly mysteries were instituted; and the matter whereof they consist in such as signifieth, figureth, and representeth their end. Hooker.
 There is a history in all men's lives,
 Figuring the nature of the times deceased. Shak.
 Marriage rings are not of this stuff:
 Oh! why should ought less precious or less tough
 An heroic poem should be more fitted to the common actions and passions of human life, and more like a glass of nature, figuring a more practicable virtue to us than was done by the ancients. Dryd.
 The emperor appears as a rising sun, and holds a globe in his hand to figure out the earth that is enlightened and actuated by his beams. Addison.

6. To imagine in the mind.
 None that feels sensibly the decays of age, and his life wearing off, can figure to himself those imaginary charms in riches and praise, that men are apt to do in the warmth of their blood. Temple.
 If love, alas! be pain, the pain I bear
 No thought can figure, and no tongue declare. Prior.

7. To prefigure; to foreshow.
 Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun;
 In this the heaven figures some event. Shakesp.

8. To form figuratively; to use in a sense not literal.
 Figured and metaphorical expressions do well to illustrate more abstruse and unfamiliar ideas, which the mind is not yet thoroughly accustomed to. Locke.

9. To note by characters.
 Each thought was visible that roll'd within,
 As thro' a crystal glass the figur'd hours are seen. Dryden.

FILACER. n. f. [filazarius, low Latin. filum.] An officer in the common Pleas, so called because he files those writs whereon he makes process. There are fourteen of them in their several divisions and counties: they make out all original process, as well real as personal and mixt. Harris.

FILAMENT. n. f. [filament, French; filamenta, Latin.] A slender thread; a body slender and long like a thread.
 The effluvium passing out in a smaller thread, and more enlightened filament, it stirreth not the bodies interposed. Brown.
 The lungs of consumptives have been consumed, nothing remaining but the ambient membrane, and a number of withered veins and filaments. Harvey.
 The ever-rolling orb's impulsive ray
 On the next threads and filaments does bear,
 Which form the springy texture of the air;
 And those still strike the next; 'till the light
 The quick vibration propagate the light. Blackm.
 The dung of horses is nothing but the filaments of the hay, and as such combustible. Arbuthnot.

FILBERT. n. f. [This is derived by Junius and Skinner from the long beards or husks, as corrupted from the full beard or full of beard. It probably had its name, like many other fruits, from some one that introduced or cultivated it; and is therefore corrupted from Filbert or Filibert, the name of him who brought it hither.] A fine hazel nut with a thin shell.
 In August comes fruit of all sorts; as plumbs, pears, apricots, barberries, filberts, muskmelons, monkshoods of all colours. Bacon's Essays.
 Thou hast a brain, such as it is indeed!
 On what else should thy worm of fancy feed?
 Yet in a filbert I have often known Maggots survive, when all the kernel's gone. Dorset.
 There is also another kind, called the filbert of Constantinople; the leaves and fruit of which are bigger than either of the former: the best are those of a thin shell. Mortimer.

To FILCH. v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology. The French word filer, from which some derive it, is of very late production, and therefore cannot be its original.] To steal; to take by theft; to pilfer; to pillage; to rob; to take by robbery. It is usually spoken of petty thefts.
 He shall find his wealth wonderfully enlarged by keeping his cattle in inclosures, where they shall always have safe being, that none are continually filched and stolen. Spenser.
 The champion robbeth by night,
 And prowleth and filcheth by daie. Tusser's Husw.
 Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, 'tis nothing;
 'T was mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
 But he that filches from me my good name,
 Robs me of that which not enriches him,
 And makes me poor indeed. Shakespeare's Othello.
 He could discern cities like hives of bees, wherein every beedid nought else but sting; some like hornets, some like filching wasps, others as dronies. Burton on Melancholy.
 What made thee venture to betray,
 And filch the lady's heart away. Hudibras.
 The pifmire was formerly a husbandman, that secretly filed away his neighbour's goods. L'Es.
 Fain would they filch that little food away,
 While unrestrain'd those happy gluttons prey. Dryd.

 2. A line on which papers are strung to keep them in order.
 All records, wherein there was any memory of the king's attainder, should be cancelled and taken off the file. Bacon.
 The petitions being thus prepared, do you continually set apart an hour in a day to peruse those, and then rank them into several files, according to the subject matters. Bacon.
 Th' apothecary-train is wholly blind;
 From files a random recipe they take,
 And many deaths of one prescription make. Dryden.

3. A catalogue; roll; series.
 Our present masters grow upon the file
 To five and twenty thousand men of choice. Shak.
 The valu'd file
 Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle. Shak.

4. A line of soldiers ranged one behind another.
 Those goodly eyes,
 That o'er the files and musters of the war
 Have

Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn Upon a tawny front. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.
So saying, on he led his radiant files,
Dazzling the moon. Milton's Paradise Lost.

5. [Æol, Saxon; wije, Dutch.] An instrument to rub down prominences.

The rough or coarse-toothed file, if it be large, is called a rubber, and is to take off the unevenness of your work which the hammer made in the forging: the bastard-toothed file is to take out of your work the deep-cuts, or file-strokes, the rough file made: the fine-toothed file is to take out the cuts, or file-strokes, the bastard file made; and, the smooth file is to take out those cuts, or file-strokes, that the fine file made. Mexon.

A file for the mattocks and for the coulters.

1 Sam. xiii. 21.

The smiths and armourers on palfreys ride,
Files in their hands, and hammers at their side.

Dryden.

FILICUTTER. n. f. [file and cutter.] A maker of files.

Good-steel is a tough sort of steel: filicutters use it to make their chisells, with which they cut their files. Moxon.

TO FILE. v. a. [from filum, a thread.]

1. To string upon a thread or wire. Whence to file a bill is to offer it, in its order, to the notice of the judge.

From imposition of strict laws, to free Acceptance of large grace; from servile fear To filial; works of law, to works of faith. Milton.

He griev'd, he wept, the sight an image brought
Of his own filial love, a sadly pleasing thought.

Dryden.

2. Bearing the character or relation of a son.

And thus the filial godhead answ'ring spoke.

Milton.

Where the old myrtle her good influence sheds,
Sprigs of like leaf erect their filial heads;

And when the parent rose decays and dies,
With a resembling face the daughter buds arise.

Prior.

FILIA'TION. n. f. [from filius, Latin.] The relation of a son to a father; correlative to paternity.

The relation of paternity and filiation, between the first and second person, and the relation between the sacred persons of the Trinity, and the denomination thereof, must needs be eternal, because the terms of relation between whom that relation ariseth were eternal.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FILINGS. n. f. [without a singular; from file.] Fragments rubbed off by the action of the file.

The filings of iron infused in vinegar, will, with a decoction of galls, make good ink, without any copperose. Brown.

I only speak of him

Whom pomp and greatness fits for loose about,
That he wants majesty to fill them out. Dryden.

7. To FILL up. [Up is often used without much addition to the force of the verb.] To make full.

Hope leads from goal to goal,
And opens still, and opens on his soul;
Till lengthen'd on to faith, and unconfin'd,
It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind. Pope.

8. To FILL up. To supply.

When the several trades and professions are supplied, you will find most of those that are proper for war absolutely necessary for filling up the laborious part of life, and carrying on the underwork of the nation. Addison on the War.

9. To FILL up. To occupy by bulk.

There would not be altogether so much water required for the land as for the sea, to raise them to an equal height; because mountains and hills would fill up part of that space upon the land, and so make less water requisite. Burnet.

10. To FILL up. To engage; to employ.

Is it tar you ride?
—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

TO FILL. v. n.

1. Any thing that fills up room without use.

'Tis a meer filler, to stop a vacancy in the hexameter, and connect the preface to the work of Virgil. Dryd. Æn. Dedic.

A mixture of tender gentle thoughts and suitable expressions, of forced and inextricable conceits, and of needless fillers up to the rest. Pope.

2. One whose employment is to fill vessels of carriage.

They have six diggers to four fillers, so as to keep the fillers always at work. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FILLET. n. f. [filet, French; filum, Lat.]

1. A band tied round the head or other part.

His baleful breath inspiring, as he glides,
Now like a chain around her neck he rides;
Now like a fillet to her head repairs,
And with his circling volumes folds her hairs. Dryden's Æn.

She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care;
A belt her waist, a fillet binds her hair. Pope.

2. The fleshy part of the thigh: applied commonly to veal.

The youth approach'd the fire, and as it burn'd,
On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd:
These morsels stay'd their stomach; then the rest
They cut in legs and fillets for the feast. Dryden.

3. Meat rolled together and tied round.

Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake.
The mixture thus, by chymick art
United close in every part,
In fillets roll'd, or cut in pieces,
Appear'd like one continu'd species. Swift.

4. [In architecture.] A little member which appears in the ornaments and mouldings, and is otherwise called listel. Harris.

Pillars and their fillets of silver. Exodus.

To FILIP. v. a. [A word, says Skinner, formed from the sound. This resemblance I am not able to discover, and therefore am inclin'd to imagine it corrupted from fill up, by some combination of ideas which cannot be recovered.] To strike with the nail of the finger by a sudden spring or motion.

If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle. Shak.
Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Fillip the stars: then let the mutinous winds Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun. Shakef.
We see, that if you fillip a lutestring, it sheweth double or treble. Bacon's Natural History.

FILLIP. n. s. [from the verb.] A jerk of the finger let go from the thumb.

FILLY. n. s. [filoy, Welsh; filie, French.]

1. A young horse or mare. Not now used.
Geld fillies, but titts, yet a nine days of age,
They die esse of gelding, and gelders do rage:
Young fillies so likely of bulk and of bone,
Keep such to be breeders, let gelding alone. Tusser.
A well-wayed horse will convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall. Suckling.

2. A young mare; opposed to a colt or young horse.

I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile, Neighing in likeness of a filly foal. Shakespeare.
I am joined in wedlock, for my sins, to one of those fillies who are described in the old poet.

FILM. n. s. [fylmleþa, Saxon.] A thin pellicle or skin.

While the silver needle did work upon the sight of his eye, to remove the film of the cataract, he never saw any thing more clear or perfect than that white needle. Bacon.

Michael from Adam's eyes the film remov'd,
Which that false fruit that promis'd clearer sight
Had bred. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A stone is held up by the films of the bladder, and so kept from grating or offending it. Craunt.

There is not one infidel so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phenomena of sight, fancy, or cogitation, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies. Beaule's Sermons.

He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
And on the sightless eyeballs pour the day. Pope.

To FILM. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a pellicle or thin skin.

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
Whilst rank corruption, mingling all within,
Infects unseen. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

FILMY. adj. [from film.] Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.

So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie;
And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,
Whose filmy cord should bind the struggling fly. Dryden.

The wasps with fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions oft, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound, 'till death
Eeave them of their worthless souls; such doom
Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain. Philips.

Loose to the winds their airy garments flew,
Thin glittering textures of the filmy dew;
Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,
When light disports in ever-mingling dyes. Pope.

To FILTER. v. a. [filtru, low Latin; per flum trahere.]

1. To defecate by drawing off liquor by depending threads.

2. To strain; to percolate.
Dilute this liquor with fair water, filtru it through a paper, and so evaporate it. Crew's Museum.

FILTRER. n. s. [filtrum, Latin.]

1. A twist of thread, of which one end is dipped in the liquor to be defecated, and the other hangs below the bottom of the vessel so that the liquor drips from it.

2. A strainer; a searce.

That the water passing through the veins of the earth, should be rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter.
Ray on the Creation.

FILTH. n. s. [fild, Saxon.]

1. Dirt; nastiness; any thing that soils or fouls.

Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;
Filth favour but themselves. Shakef. King Lear.

Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet; for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which mult needs take in a great deal of filth. Bacon's Natural History.

How perfect then is man? from head to foot
Defil'd with filth, and rotten at the root. Sandy.

Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about;
He still has gratitude and sap'ence,
To spare the folks that give him ha'pence. Swift.

2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.

Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson.

FILTHLY. adv. [from filthy.] Nastily; foully; grossly.

It stuck filthily in camel's stomach that bulls, bears, and the like, should be arm'd, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Esrange.

FILTHINESS. n. s. [from filthy.]

1. Nastiness; foulness; dirtiness.
Men of virtue suppressed it, lest their shining should discover the others filthiness. Sidney.

2. Corruption; pollution.

They held this land, and with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime, Spenser.

They never duly improved the utmost of such a power, but gave themselves up to all the filthiness and licentiousness of life imaginable. South's Sermons.

FILTHY. adj. [from filth.]

1. Nasty; foul; dirty.
Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shak. Macbeth.

2. Gross; polluted.

As all stories are not proper subjects for an epick poem or a tragedy, so neither are they for a noble picture: the subjects both of the one and of the other, ought to have nothing of immoral, low, or filthy in them. Dryden's Discrepancy.

To FILTRATE. v. a. [from filtru.] To strain; to percolate; to filter.

The extract obtained by the former operation, burnt to ashes, and those ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a fiery salt. Arbutnot on Aliments.

FILTRATION. n. s. [from filtrate.] A method by which liquors are procured fine and clear. The filtration in use is straining a liquor through paper, which, by the smallness of its pores, admits only the finer parts through, and keeps the rest behind. Quincy.

We took then common nitre, and having, by the usual way of solution, filtration, and coagulation, reduced it into crystals, we put four ounces of this purified nitre into a strong new crucible. Boyle.

FIMBLE Hemp. n. s. [Corrupted from female.]

The light Summer hemp, that bears no seed, which is called fimble hemp. Morimer.

Good flax and good hemp, for to have of her own,
In May a good housewife will see it be sown;
And afterwards trim it, and serve at a need,
The fimble to spin, and the carle for her seed. Tusser.

FIN. n. s. [fin, Saxon; win, Dutch.] The wing of a fish; the limb by which he balances his body, and moves in the water.

He that depends

Upon your favours, swims with fin of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakef. Orsello.

Their fins consist of a number of grittly bones, long and slender, like pins and needles. Morre.

Thus at half-ebb a rolling sea,
Returns, and wins upon the shore;
The watry herd, asfrighted at the roar,
Rest on their fins awhile, and stay,
Then backward take their wind'ring way. Dryden.

Still at his oar th' industrious Libys plies;
But as he plees, each busy arm shrinks in,
And by degrees is fashion'd in a fin. Addison's Ovid.

FIN-FOOTED. adj. [fin and foot.] Palmipedous; having feet with membranes between the toes.

It is described like fissipedes, or birds which have their feet or claws divided; whereas it is palmipedous or fin-footed, like Iwas and geese, according to the method of nature in latrostrous or flat-billed birds; which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with fins or oars upon their feet. Brown.

FINABLE. adj. [from fine.] That admits a fine; that which deserves a fine.

This is the order for writs of covenant that be finable. Bacon.

He sent letters to the council, wherein he acknowledged himself favoured in bringing his cause finable. Hayward.

FINAL. adj. [final, French; finalis, Lat.]

1. Ultimate; last.

To FIND. v. a. [findan, Saxon; vinden, Dutch.]

1. To obtain by searching or seeking.
Ask, and it shall be given to you; seek, and ye shall find. Mat. vii. 7.
Whereas thou hast searched all my stuff, what hast thou found of all the household stuff? Gen. xxxi. 37.
She disappeared, and left me dark; I wak'd
To find her, or for ever to deplore
Her loss. Milton.
A bird that flies about,
And beats itself against the cage,
Finding at last no passage out,
It fits and sings. Cowley.
2. To obtain something lost.
When he hath found his sheep, he layeth it on his shoulders rejoicing. Luke, xv. 5.
In my school days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth; by vent'ring both,
I oft found both. Shakespeare-Merebant of Venice.
3. To obtain something desired.
Thus I embolden'd spake, and freedom used Permissive, and acceptance found. Milton.
Our voluntary service he requires,
Not our necessitated; such with him
Finds no acceptance, nor can find. Milton.
4. To meet with; to fall upon.
There watchful at the gate they find Suspicion with her eyes behind. Doddsley's Miscell.
In woods and forests thou art found. Cowley.

They build on sands, which if unmov'd they find,
'Tis but because there was no wind. Cowley.
10. To gain by any mental endeavour.
I by conversing cannot these erect
From prone, nor in their ways complacence find. Milton.
If we for happiness could leisure find,
And wand'ring time into a method bind,
We should not then the great mens' favour need. Cowley.
We oft review, each finding like a friend
Something to blame, and something to commend. Pope.
11. To remark; to observe; to perceive.
Thus far to try thee, Adam, I was pleas'd,
And find thee knowing not of beast alone,
Which thou had rightly nam'd, but of thyself. Milt.
Beauty or wit in all I find. Cowley.

12. To detect; to deprehend; to catch.
When first found in a lie, talk to him of it as a strange monstrous matter, and so shame him out of it. Locke.
13. To reach; to attain.
They are glad when they can find the grave. Job. iii.
They also know,
And reason not contemptibly with these;
Find pastime, and bear rule. Milton.
In solitude
What happiness, who can enjoy alone,
Or all enjoying, what contentment find? Milton.
He did the utmost bounds of knowledge find,
Yet found them not so large as was his mind. Cowley.
14. To meet.
A clear conscience and heroick mind,
In illis their business and their glory find. Cowley.
15. To settle; to fix any thing in one's own opinion.
Some men
The marks of old and catholick would find. Cowley.
16. To determine by judicial verdict.
They would enforce them to find as they would direct; and if they did not, convent, imprison, and fine them. Bacon.
His peers, upon this evidence,
Have found him guilty of high treason. Shakespeare.
17. To supply; to furnish: as he finds me in money and in vicuals.
A war with Spain is like to be lucrative, if we go roundly on at first; the war in continuance will find itself. Bacon.
Still govern thou my song,
Urania, and hit audience find, though few. Milton.

gitate.
A man of Tyre, skillful to work in gold, and to find out every device which shall be put to him. 2 Chron. ii, 14.
25. The particle out is added often without any other use than that it adds some force or emphasis to the verb.
While she proudly march'd about,
Greater conquests to find out,
She beat out Susan by the by. Cowley.
It is agreeable to compare the face of a great man with the character, and to try if we can find out in his looks and features either the haughty, cruel, or merciful temper. Addison.
He was afraid of being insulted with Greek; for which reason he desired a friend to find him out a clergyman rather of plain sense than much learning. Addison's Spectator.
26. To FIND, is a word of very licentious and capricious use, not easily limited or explained; its first idea is the consequence of search; the second, equally frequent, is mere occurrence.

FINDER. n. s. [from find.]

1. One that meets or falls upon any thing.
We will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of madmen. Sbak. Twelfth Night.

houses of those whom they esteem'd not to be their friends; but the rage of the fire was at first hindered, and then appeas'd by the fall of a sudden shower of rain. Hayward.
The breathless body, thus bewail'd, they lay,
And fire the pile. Dryden.
A second Paris, diff'ring but in name,
Shall fire his country with a second flame. Dryden.
- To inflame the passions; to animate.
Yet, if desire of fame, and thirst of pow'r,
A beauteous princelss with a crown in dow'r,
So fire your mind, in arms assist your right. Dryd.

by cutting the spritsail tackle. Wifeman.

Fi'RESHOVEL. n. f. [fire and shovel.] The instrument with which the hot coals are thrown-up in kitchens.
Culinary utensils and irons often feel the force of fire; as tongs, fireshovels, prongs, and irons. Brown.
The neighbours are coming out with forks and fireshovels, and spits, and other domestick weapons. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Fi'RESTONE. n. f. [fire and stone.]
The firestone, or pyrites, is a compound metallick fossil, composed of vitriol, sulphur, and an unmetallick earth, but in very different proportions to the several masses. The most common sort, which is used in medicine, is a greenish shapeless kind found in our clay-pits, out of which the green vitriol or coppers is procured. It has its name of pyrites, or firestone, from its giving fire on being struck against a steel much more freely than a flint will do; and all the sparks burn a longer time, and grow larger as they fall, the inflammable matter struck from off the stone burning itself out before the spark becomes extinguish'd. Hill's Math. Med.
Firestone, if broke small, and laid on cold lands, must be of advantage. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Fi'REWOOD. n. f. [fire and wood.] Wood to burn; fewel.

that it will cost us many a firkin of strong beer to bring them back again. Arbutnot.
- A small vessel.
You heard of that wonder of the lightning and thunder.
Which made the lye so much the louder;
Now list to another, that miracle's brother,
Which was done with a firkin of powder. Denham.

FIRM. adj. [firmus, Latin.]

- Strong; not easily pierced or shaken;
hard, opposed to soft.
The flakes of his flesh are joined together: they are firm in themselves and they cannot be moved. Job. xli. 23.
Love's artillery then checks
The breastworks of the firmest sex. Cleveland.
There is nothing to be left void in a firm building; even the cavities ought to be filled with rubbish. Dryden.
That body, whose parts are most firm in themselves, and are by their peculiar shapes capable of the greatest contacts, is the most firm; and that which has parts very small, and capable of the least contact, will be most soft. Woodward.
- Constant; steady; resolute; fixed; unshaken.
We hold firm to the works of God, and to the sense which is God's lamp. Bacon's Natural Hist.

ture reward, the firm persuasion whereof is enough to raise us above any thing in this world. Fillostoph.
The man that's resolute and just,
Firm to his principles and trust,
Nor hopes nor fears can blind. Halsb.
- Solid; nor giving way; not fluid.
God caused the wind to blow to dry up the abundant slime and mud of the earth, and make the land more firm. Raleigh.
The muddy and limous matter brought down by the Nilus, settled by degrees into a firm land. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

It on firm land
Thaws not, but rather heap and ruin seems
Of ancient pile: all esse deep snow and ice. Milton.
Sinking waters, the firm land to drain,
Fill'd the capacious deep, and form'd the main. Roscommon.

To FIRM. v. a. [firmo, Latin,]

- To settle; to confirm; to establish; to fix.
Of the death of the emperor they advertised So-lyman, firming those letters with all their hands and feals. Knolles.
'Tis ratify'd above by every god.
And Jove has firm'd it with an awful nod. Dryden.
The pow'rs, said he,
To you, and yours and mine, propitious be,
And firm our purpose with their augury. Dryden.
O thou, who free'st me from my doubtful state,
Long lost and wilder'd in the maze of fate!
Be present still: oh goddess, in our aid
Proceed, and firm those omens thou hast made! Pope.
- To fix without wandering.
He on his card and compass firm: his eye,
The masters of his long experiment. Fairy Queen.

FIRMA'MENT. n. f. [firmamentum, Lat.]
The sky; the heavens.

Doth reach, and all the firmament doth fill. Spenser.
I am constant as the northern star,
Of whose true, fixt, and resting quality,
There is no fellow in the firmament. Shakespeare.
The Almighty, whose hieroglyphical characters are the unnumbered stars, sun and moon, written on these large volumes of the firmament. Raleigh.
The firmament expands of liquid, pure,
Transparent, elemental air, diffus'd
In circuit to the uttermost convex
Of this great round. Milton's Paradise L. st.
The steeds climb up the first ascent with pain;
And when the middle firmament they gain,
If downward from the heavens my head I bow,
And see the earth and ocean hang below,
E'en I am seiz'd with horror. Addison's Ovid.
What an immensurable space is the firmament, wherein a great number of stars are seen with our naked eye, and many more discovered with our glasses! Dryden's Astron. Theology.

FIRMA'MENTAL. adj. [from firmament]
Celestial; of the upper regions.
An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,
In firmamental waters dipt above. Dryden.

FIRMLY. adv. [from firm.]

- Strongly;

1. Strongly; impenetrably; immoveably.

Even so most fitly
As you malign our senators. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Where a man cannot fitly play his own part, if he have not a friend, he may quit the stage. Bacon.

I cannot fitlier compare marriage than to a lottery, for, in both, he that ventures may succeed, and may miss; and if he draw a prize, he hath a rich return of his venture: but in both lotteries there lie pretty store of blanks for every prize. Boyle.

The whole of our duty may be expressed most fitly by departing from evil.

2. Commodiously; meetly.

To take a latitude,
Sun or stars are fitliest view'd
At their brightest; but to conclude
Of longitudes, what other way have we
But to mark when, and where the dark eclipses be. Donne.

An animal, in order to be moveable must be flexible; and therefore is fitly made of separate and small solid parts, replete with proper fluids. Arbutnot.

FITNESS. n. f. [from fit.]

1. Propriety; meetness; justness; reasonableness.

In things the finest whereof is not of itself apparent, nor easy to be made sufficiently manifest unto all, yet the judgment of antiquity, concurring with that which is received, may induce them to think it not unfit. Hosker.

The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fitness
That we adjourn this court. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
Wer't my fitness

To let these hands obey my boiling blood,
They're apt enough to dislocate and tear
Thy flesh and bones. Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. Convenience; commodity; the state of being fit.

Nor time nor place
Did then cohere, and yet you would make both:
They've made themselves, and that their fitness now
Does unmake you. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

FITMENT. n. f. [from fit.] Something adapted to a particular purpose. Not used.

Poor beseeching: 'twas a fitment for
The purpose I then follow'd. Shakefp. Cymbeline.

FITTER. n. f. [from fit.]

To FIX. v. a. fixer, French; fixus, Latin.]

1. To make fast, firm, or stable.

Hell heard th' unflattering noise, hell saw Heav'n running from heav'n, and would have fled Affrighted, but that fate had fix'd too deep
Her dark foundations, and too fast had bound. Milt.

2. To settle; to establish invariably.

Brightest seraph! tell
In which of all these orbs hath man
His fixed seat, or fixed seat hath none,
But all these shining orbs his choice to dwell! Milt.
One loves fixed laws, and the other arbitrary power. Temple.

When custom hath fixed his eating to certain stated periods, his stomach will expect victuals at the usual hour. Locke.

3. To direct without variation.

Why are thine eyes fixt to the fullen earth,
Gazing at that which seems to dim thy sight! Shak.
Thus while the Trojan prince employs his eyes,
Fix'd on the walls with wonder and surprize. Dryd.

4. To deprive of volatility.

We pronounce concerning gold, that it is fixed. Locke.

5. To pierce; to transfix. A sense purely Latin.

While from the raging sword he vainly flies,
A bow of steel shall fix his trembling thighs. Sandys.

6. To withhold from motion.

To FIX. v. n.

1. To settle the opinion; to determine the resolution.

If we would be happy, we must fix upon some foundation that can never deceive us. L'Esrange.
He made himself their prey,
T' impose on their belief, and Troy betray;
Fix'd on his aim, and obstinately bent
To die undaunted, or to circumvent. Dryden's Aen.

Here hope began to dawn; resolv'd to try,
She fix'd on this her utmost remedy,
Death was behind; but hard it was to die. Dryden.

In most bodies not propagated by seed, it is the colour we must fix on, and are most led by. Locke.

2. To rest; to cease; to wander.

Your kindness banishes your fear,
Resolv'd to fix for ever here. Waller.

3. To lose volatility, so as to be malleable.

In the midst of molten lead, when it beginneth to congeal, make a little dent, and put quicksilver, wrapped in a piece of linen, in that hole, and the quicksilver will fix and run no more, and endure the hammer. Bacon's Natural History.

FIXATION. n. f. [French.]

1. Stability; firmness; steadiness.

Your fixation in matters of religion will not be more necessary for your soul's than your kingdom's peace. King Charles.

2. Residence in a certain place.

'To light, created in the first day, God gave no proper place or fixation. Raleigh's History.

3. Confinement; forbearance of excursion.

They are subject to errors from a narrowness of soul, a fixation and confinement of thought to a few objects. Watts.

4. Want of volatility; destruction of volatility.

Upon the compound body three things are chiefly to be observed; the colour, the fragility or pliantness, and the volatility or fixation, compared with the simple bodies. Bacon.

It is more difficult to make gold of other metals less ponderous and less materiate, than to make silver of lead or quicksilver, both of which are more ponderous than silver; so that they need rather a degree of fixation than any condensation. Bacon.

5. Reduction from fluidity to firmness.

Salt dissolved upon a fixation returns to its affected cubes. Glarv.

FIXEDLY. adv. [from fixed.]

1. Certainly; firmly; in a manner settled and established.

2. Want or loss of volatility.

Fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire unconsumed, is an idea that always accompanies our complex idea signified by the word gold. Locke.

3. Solidity; coherence of parts.

Fluid or solid comprehend all the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion of the particles of bodies. Bentley.

4. Steadiness; settled opinion or resolution.

A fixedness in religion will not give my conscience leave to consent to innovations. King Charles.

FIXIDITY. n. f. [from fixed.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility. A word of Boyle.

Bodies mingled by the fire are differing as to the fixidity and volatility, and yet are so combined by the first operation of the fire, that itself does scarce afterwards separate them. Boyle.

FIXITY. n. f. [fixitè, French.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility.

And are not the sun and fixed stars great earths vehemently hot, whose heat is conveyed by the greatness of the bodies, and the mutual action and reaction between them, and the light which they emit, and whose parts are kept from fuming away, not only by their fixity, but also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them? Newton's Opticks.

FIXTURE. n. f. [from fix.]

1. Position.

The fixture of her eye hath motion in't,
As we were mock'd with art. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

about by the wind; subject to be blown. DiCt.

FLA'CCID. adj. [flaccidus, Latin.] Weak;

limber; not stiff; lax; not tense.

The bowing and inclining the head is found in the great flower of the sun: the cause I take to be is, that the part against which the sun beareth waxeth more faint and flaccid in the stalk, and thereby less able to support the flower. Bacon.

They whose muscles are weak or flaccid, are unapt to pronounce the letter r. Holder.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet as he finds the fibres are too flaccid and produce funguses, or as they harden and produce callosities. Arbutnot.

FLACCIDITY. n. f. [from flaccid.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension; want of stiffness.

There is neither fluxion nor pain, but flaccidity joined with insensibility. Wifeman's Surgery.

To FLAG. v. n. [flaggeren, Dutch; pleoigan, Saxon, to fly.

1. To hang loose without stiffness or tension.

Beds of cotton wool hung up between two trees, not far from the ground; in which, flagging down in the middle, men, wives and children lie together. Abbot.

The jades

That drag the tragick melancholy night,
Who with their drowly, slow, and flagging wings
Clip dead men's graves. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

It keeps those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibility and weight, would flag or curl.

Boyle's Spring of the Air.

Like a fiery meteor sunk the sun,
The promise of a storm; the shifting gales
Forsake by fits, and fill the flagging sails. Dryden.

2. To grow spiritless or dejected.

My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
Like fowl in air too damp, and lags along
As if she were a body in a body;

My senses too are dull and stupify'd,
Their edge rebated: sure some ill approaches.

Dryden's Don Sebastian.

3. To grow feeble; to lose vigour.

Juice in language is somewhat less than blood: for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that waateth, the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved, scarce covering the bone, and shews like stones in a sack: some men, to avoid redundancy, run into that; and while they strive to hinder ill blood or juice, they lose their good. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

His stomach will want victuals at the usual hour, either fretting itself into a troublesome excess, or flagging into a downright want of appetite. Locke.

Fame, when it is once at a stand, naturally flags and languishes. Addison's Spectator.

If on sublimer wings of love and praise,
My love above the starry vault I raise,
Lur'd by some vain conceit of pride or lust,
I flag, I drop, and flutter in the dust. Arbutnot.

He sees a spirit hath been raised against him, and he only watches till it begins to flag: he goes about watching when to devour us. Swift.

The pleasures of the town begin to flag and grow languid, giving way daily to cruel inroads from the spleen. Swift.

To FLAG. v. a.

1. To let fall into feebleness; to suffer to droop.

Take heed, my dear, youth flies apace;
As well as Cupid, Time is blind:
Soon must those glories of thy race

The fate of vulgar beauty find:
The thousand loves, that arm thy potent eye,
Must drop their quivers, flag their wings, and die. Prior.

2. [From flag, a species of stone.] To lay with broad stone.

The sides and floor were all flagged with excellent marble. Sandys.

A white stone used for flagging floors. Woodward.

FLAG, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A water plant with a bladed leaf and yellow flower, so called from its motion in the wind.

She took an ark of bulrushes, and laid it in the flag; by the river's brink. Ex. ii. 3.

Can bulrushes but by the river grow?

Can flags there flourish where no waters flow? Sandys.

There be divers fishes that cast their spawn on flags or stones. Walton's Angler.

Cut flag roots, and the roots of other weeds. Morimer's Husb.

2. The colours or ensign of a ship or land-forces, by which signals are made at sea, or regiments are distinguished in the field.

These flags of France that are advanced here,
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have hither march'd to your endamage. Shaksp.

VOL. I.

He hangs out as many flags as he deserveth vessels; square, if ships; if gallees, pendants. Sandys.

Democracies are less subject to sedition than where there are stripes or nobles: for if men's eyes are upon the persons, it is for the business sake as fittest, and not for flags of pedigree. Bacon.

Let him be girt
With all the grisly legion that troop
Under the footy flag of Acheron, Harpies and hydras, or all the monstrous forms -
'Twixt Africa and Inde, I'll find him out,
And force him to restore his purchase back,
Or drag him by the curls to a foul death. Milton.

The French and Spaniards, when your flags appear,
Forget their hatred, and consent to fear. Waller.

The interpretation of that article about the flag, is a ground at pleasure for opening a war. Temple.

In either's flag the golden serpents bear,
Erecting crests alike, like volumes rear,
And mingle friendly hissing in the air. Dryden.

Then they, whose mothers, frantick with their fear,
In woods and wilds the flags of Bacchus bear,
And lead his dances with dishevell'd hair. Dryden.

3. A species of stone used for smooth pavements, [flache, old French.]

Part of two flags striated, but deeper on one side than the other. Woodward on Fossils.

The use of the scourge.

By Bridewell all descend,

As morning pray'r and flagellation end. Garth.

FLA'GGINESS. n. f. [from flaggy.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension.

FLA'GGY. adj. [from flag.]

1. Weak; lax; limber not stiff; not tense.

His flaggy wings, when forth he did display,
Were like two sails, in which the hollow wind
Is gather'd full, and worketh speedy way. Fairy Q.

That basking in the sun thy bees may lye,
And resting there, their flaggy pinions dry. Dryd.

2. Weak in taste; insipid.

Graft an apple-cion upon the stock of a colewort, and it will bear a great flaggy apple. Bacon.

FLAGITIOUS. adj. [from flagitius, Lat.]

1. Wicked; villainous; atrocious.

No villainy or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but, upon a due enquiry into the causes of it, it will be found, that a lye was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.

There is no working upon a flagitious and perverse nature by kindness and discipline. L'Esrange.

First, those flagitious times.

Pregnant with unknown crimes,

Conspire to violate the nuptial bed: Roscommon.

Perjury is a crime of so flagitious a nature, we cannot be too careful in avoiding every approach towards it. Addison.

But if in noble minds some dregs remain,
Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and sour disdain,
Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
Nor fear a death in these flagitious times. Pope.

2. Guilty of crimes.

He dies, sad outcast of each church and state,
And, harder still, flagitious yet not great. Pope.

FLAGITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from flagitius.] Wickedness; villainy.

More had sent him by a sutor in Chancery two silver flagons. Bacon's Apophth.

Did they coin pisspots, bowls, and flagons Int' officers of horse and dragoons? Hudibras.

His trusty flagon, full of potent juice,
Was hanging by, worn thin with age and use. Roscommon.

One flagon walks the round, that none should think
They either change, or stint him in his drink. Dryd.

FLA'GRANCY, n. f. [flagrantia, Latin.] Burning; heat; fire.

Lust causeth a flagrancy in the eyes, as the sight and the touch are the things desired, and therefore the spirits resort to those parts. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

FLA'GRANT. adj. [flagrans, Latin.]]

1. Ardent; burning; eager. It is always used figuratively.

A thing which filleth the mind with comfort and heavenly delight, stirreth up flagrant desires and affections, correspondent unto that which the words contain. Hooker.

2. Glowing; flushed.

See Sappho, at her toilet's greasy task,
Then issuing flagrant to an evening mask:
So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buz, and fly-blow in the setting sun. Pope.

3. Red; imprinted red.

Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back. Prior.

4. Notorious; flaming into notice.

When fraud is great, it furnishes weapons to defend itself; and at worst, if the crimes be so flagrant that a man is laid aside out of perfect shame, he retires loaded with the spoils of the nation. Swift.

With equal poise let steady justice sway,
And flagrant crimes with certain vengeance pay;
But, 'till the proofs are clear, the stroke delay. Smith.

To FLAKE. v. a. [from the noun.] To form in flakes or bodies loosely connected.

From the bleak pole no winds inclement blow,
Mold the round hail, or flake the fleecy snow. Pope's Odyf.

To FLAKE. v. n. To break into laminae; to part in loose bodies.

FLAKY, adj. [from flake.]

1. Loosely hanging together.

The silent hour steals on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the East. Shakespeare.
The trumpet roars, long flaky flames expire,
With sparks that seem to set the world on fire. Pope.

Hence, when the snows in Winter cease to weep,
And undissolv'd their flaky texture keep,
The banks with ease their humble streams contain,
Which swell in Summer, and those banks disdain. Blackm.

2. Lying in layers or strata; broken into laminae.

Flam. n. f. [A cant word of no certain etymology.] A falsehood; a lye; an illusory pretext.

A flam more senseless than the rog'ry
Of old astrology and aug'ry. Hudibras.

Till these men can prove the things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, all pretences or pleas of conscience to the contrary are nothing but cant and cheat, flam and delusion. South.

What are most of the histories of the world but lies? Lies immortalized and consign'd over as a perpetual abuse and flam upon posterity. South.

To FLAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To deceive with a lye. Merely cant.

For so our ignorance was flam'd,
To damn ourselves t' avoid being damn'd. Hudibras.
God is not to be flam'd off with lies, who knows exactly what thou canst do, and what not. South.

FLAMBEAU, n. f. [French.] A lighted torch.

The king seized a flambeau with zeal to destroy. Dryden.

As the attendants carried each of them a flambeau in their hands, the sultan, after having ordered all the lights to be put out, gave the word to enter the house, find out the criminal, and put him to death. Addison's Guardian.

FLAME. n. f. [flamma, Latin; flamme, French.]

1. Light emitted from fire.

Is not flame a vapour, fume, or exhalation heated red hot, that is, so hot as to shine? For bodies do not flame without emitting a copious fume, and this fume burns in the flame. Newton's Opt.

What flame, what lightning e'er
So quick an active force did bear! Cowley.

2. Fire.

Jove, Prometheus' theft allow;
The flames he once stole from thee, grant him now. Cowley.

3. Ardour of temper or imagination; brightness of fancy; vigour of thought.

Of all our elder plays,
This and Philaster have the loudest fame;
Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame:
To both our English genius is express'd,
Lofty and bold but negligently dress'd. Waller.

4. Ardour of inclination.

Smit with the love of kindred arts we came,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame. Pope.

5. Passion of love.

My heart's on flame, and does like fire
To her aspire. Cowley.

Come arm'd in flames; for I would prove
All the extremities of love. Cowley.

No warning of th' approaching flame;
Swiftly like sudden death it came:
I lov'd the moment I beheld. Granville.

To FLAME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine as fire; to burn with emission of light.

Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? Shakespeare.

He fell flaming through th' ethereal sky
To bottomless perdition. Milton.

Hell all around
As one great furnace flam'd. Milton.

2. To shine like flame.

Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red;
Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chusing fable for the peaceful night. Prior.

3. To break out in violence of passion.

FLAMECOLOURED. adj. [flame and colour.]

My thoughts imprison'd in my secret woes,
With flamy breaths do issue oft in sound. Sidney.

2. Having the nature of flame.

The vital spirits of living creatures are a substance compounded of an airy and flamy matter; and though air and flame, being free, will not well mingle, yet bound in by a body they will. Bacon.

FLANK. n. f. [flanc, French, according to Menage, from λαγυν; more probably from latus, Latin.]

1. That part of the side of a quadruped near the hinder thigh.

The belly shall be eminent by shadowing the flank. Peacbam.

2. [In men.] The lateral part of the lower belly.

He said, and pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent;
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
His corset pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downward near his flank descends. Pope.

3. The side of any army or fleet.

Great ordnance and small shot thundered and showered upon our men from the rampier in front, and from the galleys that lay at sea in flank. Bacon's War with Spain.

Gray was appointed to stand on the left side, in such fort as he might take the flank of the enemy. Hayward.

To right and left the front Divided, and to either flank retir'd. Milton.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the bastion which reaches from the curtain to the face, and defends the opposite face, the flank and the curtain. Harris.

To FLANK. v. a.

1. To attack the side of a battalion or fleet.

2. To be posted so as to overlook or command any pass on the side.

With fates averse against their king's command,
Arm'd on the right, and on the left they stand,
And flank the passage. Dryden's Æn.

3. To secure on the side.

By the rich scent we found our perfum'd prey,
Which, flank'd with rocks, did close in covert lay. Dryden.

FLA'NKER. n. f. [from flank.] A fortification jutting out so as to command the side of a body marching to the assault.

The Turks, discouraged with the loss of their fellows, and fore beaten by the Spaniards out of their flankers, were enforced to retire. Knolles.

Like storms of hail the stones fell down from high,
Cast from the bulwarks, flankers, ports, and towers. Fairf.

To FLA'NKER. v. a. [flanquer, French.] To defend by lateral fortifications.

FLA'NNEL. n. f. [gwolan, Welsh; from gwlan, wool, Davies.] A soft nappy stuff of wool.

I cannot answer the Welch flannel. Shakespeare.

FLAP. n. f. [lœppe. Saxon.]

1. Any thing that hangs broad and loose, fastened only by one side.

There is a peculiar provision for the windpipe, that is, a cartilaginous flap upon the opening of the larynx, which hath an open cavity for the admission of the air. Brown.

Some surgeons make crucial incision upon the supposition that the wound will more easily heal by turning down the flaps. Sharp.

2. The motion of any thing broad and loose.

3. [A disease in horses.]
When a horse has the flaps, you may perceive his lips swelled on both sides of his mouth; and that which is in the blisters is like the white of an egg: cut some flashes with a knife, and rub it once with salt, and it will cure. Farrier's Dict.

To FLAP. v. a. [From the noun.]

1. To beat with a flap, as flies are beaten.

A hare, hard put to it by an eagle, took sanctuary in a ditch with a beetle: the eagle flap'd off the former, and devoured the other. L'Esrange.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, that tinkles and stings. Pope.

2. To move with a flap or noise made by the stroke of any thing broad.

With fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions oft, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound. Phillips.

Three times, all in the dead of night,
A bell was heard to ring;

And shrieking at her window thrice
The raven flap'd his wing. Tickel.

To FLAP. v. n.

1. To ply the wings with noise.

'Tis common for a duck to run flapping and fluttering away, as if maimed, to carry people from her young.

The dire flapping on the shield of Turnus, and fluttering about his head, disheartened him in the duel. Dryden's Æn.

2. To fall with flaps or broad parts depending.

When suffocating mists obscure the morn,
Let thy worst wig, long us'd to storms, be worn;
This knows the powder'd footman, and with care
Beneath his flapping hat secures his hair. Gay.

FLA'PDRAGON. n. f. [from a dragon supposed to breathe fire.]

1. A play in which they catch raisins out of burning brandy, and, extinguishing them by closing the mouth, eat them.

2. The thing eaten at flapdragon.
He plays at quits well, and eats conger and fennel, and drinks candles ends for flapdragons, and rides the wild mare with the boys. Shakespeare's Fairy Queen.

To FLA'PDRAGON. v. a. [from the noun.]
To swallow; to devour. Low cant.

But to make an end of the ship, to see how the sea flapdragoned it. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

She shall be loose enrob'd,
With ribbands pendant flaring 'bout her head. Shakespeare's

FLASH. n. f. [φλάξ, Minsterw.]

1. A sudden, quick, transitory blaze.
When the cross blue lightning seem'd to open
The breast of heav'n, I did present myself
Ev'n in the aim and very flash of it. Shakespeare's

We see a flash of a piece is seen sooner than the noise is heard. Bacon's Natural History.

One with a flash begins, and ends in smook;
The other out of smook brings glorious light. Roscommon.

And as Ægeon, when with heaven he strove,
Defy'd the fork lightning from afar,
At fifty mouths his flaming breath expires,
And flash for flash returns, and fires for fires. Dryd.

2. Sudden burst of wit or merriment.
Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs?
Your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table in a roar? Shakespeare's

Wicked men prefer the light flashes of a wanton mirth, which for a while suspend reflection, and hide the sinner from himself, to such discourses as awaken conscience. Rogers.

3. A short transient state.
The Persians and Macedonians had it for a flash. Bacon.

4. A body of water driven by violence.

To FLASH. v. n.

1. To glitter with a quick and transient flame.
This salt powdered, and put into a crucible, was, by the injection of well kindled charcoal, made to flash divers times, almost like melted nitre. Boyle.

2. To burst out into any kind of violence.
By day and night he wrongs me; ev'ry hour

He flashes into one gross crime or other,
That fits us all at odds. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. To break out into wit, merriment, or bright thought.

They flash out sometimes into an irregular greatness of thought. Felton on the Chifficks.

To FLASH. v. a. To strike up large bodies of water from the surface.

With his raging arms he rudely flash'd
The waves about, and all his armour swept,
That all the blood and filth away was wash'd. Fairy Queen.

If the sea-water be flash'd with a stick or oar, the same casteth a shining colour, and the drops resemble sparkles of fire. Carew.

FLA'SHER. n. f. [from flash.] A man of more appearance of wit than reality. Dist.

FLA'SHILY. adv. [from flashy.] With empty show; without real power of wit, or solidity of thought.

FLA'SHY. adj. [from flash.]

1. Empty; not solid; showy without substance.

Flashy wits cannot fathom the whole extent of a large discourse. Digby on the Soul, Dedication.

When they list, their lean and flashy songs
Grate on their serannel pipes of wretched straw. Milton.

This mean conceit, this darling mystery,
Which thou think'st nothing, friend! thou shalt not buy;

Nor will I change for all the flashy wit. Dryden.

2. [From flaccidus, Skinner.] Insipid; without force or spirit.

Distilled books are, like common distilled waters, flashy things. Bacon's Essays.

The tastes that most offend in suits, herbs, and roots, are bitter, harsh, four, waterish or flashy. Bacon's Natural History.

FLASK. n. f. [flasque, French.]

The silver stands with golden flaskets grac'd. Pope.

FLAT. adj. [plat, French.]

1. Horizontally level without inclination.
Thou, all-shaking thunder,
Strike flat the thick rotundity o' th' world. Shakespeare's

Virtue could see to do what virtue would
By her own radiant light, though sun and moon
Were in the flat sea funk. Milton.

The houses are flat roofed to walk upon, so that every bomb that fell on them would take effect. Addison on Italy.

2. Smooth; without protuberances.
In the dawning of the next day we might plainly discern it was a land flat to our sight, and full of baggage. Bacon.

3. Not elevated; fallen; not erect.
Cease t' admire, and beauty's plumes
Fall flat, and shrink into a trivial toy,
At every sudden sighting quite abahit. Milton.

4. Level with the ground.
In them is plainest taught, and easiest learnt,
What makes a nation happy, and keeps it so.
What ruins kingdoms, and lays cities flat. Milton.

That Christ-church stands above ground, and that the church of Westminster lies not flat upon it, is your lordship's commendation. South.

5. Lying prostrate; lying along.
The wood-bro people fall before her flat,
And worship her as goddess of the wood. Fairy Q.

That lamentable wound,
Which laid that wretched prince flat on the ground. Daniel.

6. [In painting.] Wanting relief; wanting prominence of the figures.

7. Tasteless; insipid; dead.
He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece. Shakespeare's

Taste so divine! that what of sweet before Hath touch'd my sense, flat seems to this and harsh. Milton.

The miry fields,
Rejoicing in rich mold, most ample fruit
Of beauteous form produce; pleasing to sight,
But to the tongue inelegant and flat. Philips.

8. Dull; unanimated; frigid.
Short speeches fly abroad like darts, and are thought to be shot out of secret intentions; but as for large discourses, they are flat things, and not so much noted. Bacon.

Some short excursions of a broken vow
He made indeed, but flat insipid stuff. Dryden.

9. Depressed; spiritless; dejected.
I feel my genial spirits droop;
My hopes all flat, nature within me seems
In all her functions weary of herself. Milton.

10. Unpleasing; tasteless.
How weary, itale, flat and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world! Shakespeare's

To one firmly persuaded of the reality of heavenly happiness, and earnestly desirous of obtaining it, all earthly satisfactions must needs look little, and grow flat and unfavoury. Atterbury's Sermons.

11. Peremptory; absolute; downright.
His horse with flat tiring taught him, that discreet stays make speedy journeys. Sidney.

It is a flat wrong to punish the thought or purpose of any before it be enacted; for true justice punisheth nothing but the evil act or wicked word. Spenser.

As it is in the nature of all men to love liberty, so they become flat libertines, and fall to all licentiousness. Spenser.

You start away,
And lend no ear unto my purposes;
Those prisoners you shall keep:
—I will, that's flat. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Thus repuls'd, our final hope
Is flat despair: we must exasperate
Th' Almighty Victor to spend all his rage,
And that must end us. Milton's Paradise Lost.

If thou sin in wine or wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
Fraught gets pardon by submission, but
But he that boasts, shuts that out of his story,
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
With his meer clod of earth, the spacious sky. Herbert.

You had broke and robb'd his house,
And stole his talismanique louse;
And all his new-found odd inventions,
With flat selenious intentions. Hudibras.

12. Not shrill; not acute; not sharp in found.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell, it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle. Bacon.

The upper end of the windpipe is endued with several cartilages and muscles to contract or dilate it, as we would have our voice flat or sharp. Ray.

FLAT. n. f.

1. A level; an extended plane.
The strings of a lute, viol, or virginals, give a far greater found, by reason of the knot, board and concave underneath, than if there were nothing but only the flat of a board to let in the upper air into the lower. Bacon.

Because the air receiveth great tincture from the earth, expose flesh or fish, both upon a stake of wood some height above the earth, and upon the flat of the earth. Bacon.

It comes near an artificial miracle to make divers distinct eminences appear a flat by force of shadows, and yet the shadows themselves not to appear. Wotton's Architecture.

He has cut the side of the rock into a flat for a garden; and by laying on it the waste earth, that he has found in several of the neighbouring parts, furnished out a kind of luxury for a hermit. Addison.

2. Even ground; not mountainous.

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead,
'Till of this flat a mountain you have made,
T' o'ertop old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

The

5 F 2

- The way is ready and not long,
Beyond a row of myrtles, on a flat,
Fatt by a mountain. Milton's Paradise Lost.
3. A smooth low ground exposed to inundations.
The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'erhears your officers. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
All the infections, that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prospero fall. Shakespeare.
Half my pow'rs this night,
Passing these flats, are taken by the tide;
These Lincoln washes have devoured them. Shakespeare.
4. Shallow; strand; place in the sea where the water is not deep enough for ships.
I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats. Shakespeare.
The difficulty is very great to bring them in or out through so many flats and sands, if wind and weather be not very favourable. Raleigh's Essays.
Having newly left these grammatical flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, they are now turmoiled with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy. Milton.
Full in the prince's passage hills of sand,
And dang'rous flats, in secret ambush lay,
Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,
And seamen with dissembled depths betray. Dryden.
Must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.
5. The broad side of a blade.
A darted mandate came
From that great will which moves this mighty frame,
Bid me to thee, my royal charge, repair,
To guard thee from the dæmons of the air;
My flaming sword above 'em to display,
All keen and ground upon the edge of day,
'Tis flat to sweep the visions from thy mind,
The edge to cut 'em through that stay behind. Dryden.
6. Depression of thought or language.
Milton's Paradise Lost is admirable; but am I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongst his elevations, when 'tis evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together? Dryden.
7. A surface without relief, or prominences.
Are there then such ravishing charms in a dull unvaried flat, to make a sufficient compensation for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills? Bentley.
- To FLAT. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To level; to depress; to make broad and smooth.
The ancients say, if you take two twigs of several fruit-trees, and flat them on the sides, and hind them close, and set them in the ground, they will come up in one stock. Bacon.
With horrid shapes she does her sons expose,
Distends their swelling lips, and flats their nose. Creech.
2. To make vapid.
An orange, lemon and apple, wrapt in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight four feet deep within the earth, though in a moist place and rainy time, were become a little harder than they were; otherwise fresh in their colour, but their juice somewhat flatted. Bacon's Natural History.
- To FLAT. v. n.
1. To grow flat; opposed to swell.
I burnt it the second time, and observed the skin shrink, and the swelling to star yet more than at first. Temple.
2. To render unanimated or evanid.
Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.
- FLATLONG. adv. [flat and long.] With the flat downwards; not edgewise.
What a blow was there given?
—An it had fallen flatlong. Shakespeare. Tempest.
- FLATLY. adv. [from flat.]

Thereupon they flatly disavouch
To yield him more obedience, or support. Daniel.
Unjust, thou say'st,
Flatly unjust, to bind with laws the free. Milton.
Not any interpreters allow it to be spoken of such as flatly deny the being of God; but of them that believing his existence, exclude him from directing the world. Bentley.
- FLATNESS. n. f. [from flat.]
1. Evenness; level extension.
2. Want of relief or prominence.
It appears so very plain and uniform, that one would think the coiner looked on the flatness of a figure, as one of the greatest beauties in sculpture. Addison on Medals.
3. Deadness; insipidity; vapidness.
Deadness or flatness in cyder is often occasioned by the too free admission of air into the vessel. Mortimer's Husbandry.
4. Dejection of fortune.
The emperor of Russia was my father:
Oh, that he were alive, and here beholding
His daughter's trial! that he did but see
The flatness of my misery! Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
5. Dejection of mind; want of life; want of spirit.
How fast does obscurity, flatness, and impertinency flow in upon our meditations? 'Tis a difficult task to talk to the purpose, and to put life and perspicuity into our discourses. Collier.
6. Dulness; insipidity; frigidity.
Some of Homer's translators have swelled into sustian, and others sunk into flatness. Pope.
7. The contrary to shrillness or acuteness of sound.
Take two saucers, and strike the edge of the one against the bottom of the other within a pail of water, and you shall find the sound groweth more flat, even while part of the saucer is above the water; but that flatness of sound is joined with a harshness. Bacon.
- To FLATTEN. v. a. [flattir, French; from flat.]
1. To make even or level, without prominence or elevation.
2. To beat down to the ground.
If they should lie in it, and beat it down, or flatten it, it will rise again. Mortimer's Husbandry.
3. To make vapid.
4. To deject; to depress; to dispirit.
- To FLATTEN. v. n.
1. To grow even or level.
2. To grow dull and insipid.

- FLATTER. n. f. [from flat.] The workman or instrument by which bodies are flattened.
- To FLATTER. v. a. [flatter, French.]
1. To sooth with praises; to please with blandishments; to gratify with servile obsequiousness; to gain by false compliments.
When I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does; being then most flattered. Shakespeare.
His nature is too noble for the world;
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Or Jove for's power to thunder: his heart's his mouth;
What his breast forges that his tongue must vent. Shakespeare.
He that flattereth his neighbour, spreadeth a net for his feet. Prov. xxix. 5.
He flattereth himself in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found hateful. Pf. xxxvi. 2.
After this way of flattering their willing bene-

- factors out of part, they contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions. Dreay of Piety.
- Averse alike to flatter or offend. Pope.
I scorn to flatter you or any man. Newton.
2. To praise falsely.
Flatter'd crimes of a licentious age,
Provoke our censure. Young.
3. To please; to sooth. This sense is purely Gallick.
A consort of voices supporting themselves by their different parts makes a harmony, pleasingly fills the ears and flatters them. Dryden's Dunciad.
4. To raise false hopes.
He, always vacant, always amiable,
Hopes thee, of flatt'ring gales Unmindful. Milton.
- FLATTERER. n. f. [from flatter,] One who flatters; a fawner; a wheedler; one who endeavours to gain favour by pleasing falsties.
When I tell him he is a flatterer,
He says he does; being then most flattered. Shakespeare.
Some praises proceed merely of flattery; and if he be an ordinary flatterer, he will have certain common attributes, which may serve every man: if he be a cunning flatterer, he will follow the arch flatterer, which is a man's self. But if he be an impudent flatterer, look wherein a man is conscious to himself that he is most defective, and is most out of countenance in himself, that will the flatterer entitle him to perforce. Bacon.
If we from wealth to poverty descend,
Want gives to know the flatterer from the friend. Dryden.
After treating her like a goddess, the husband uses her like a woman: what is still worse, the most abject flatterers degenerate into the greatest tyrants. Addison's Guardian.
The publick should know this: yet whoever goes about to inform them, shall be censured for a flatterer. Swift.
- FLATTERY. n. f. [from flatter; flatterie, French.] False praise; artful obsequiousness; adulation.
Minds, by nature great, are conscious of their greatness,
And hold it mean to borrow ought from flattery. Rowe.
Simple pride for flatt'ry makes demands. Pope.
See how they beg an alms of flattery!
They languish, O! support them with a lie. Young.
- FLATTISH. adj. [from flat.] Somewhat flat; approaching to flatness.
These are from three inches over to six or seven, and of a flattish shape. Woodward on Fossils.
- FLATULENCY. n. f. [from flatulent.]
1. Windiness; fulness of wind; turgescence by wind confined.
Vegetable substances contain a great deal of air, which expands itself, producing all the disorders of flatulency. Arbutnot.
2. Emptiness; vanity; levity; airiness.
Whether most of them are not the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to, may be determined by any that considers the natural flatulency of that airy scheme of notions. Glanville.
- FLATULENT. adj. [flatulentus, flatus, Lat.]
1. Turgid with air; windy.
Pease are mild and demulcent; but being full of aerial particles are flatulent, when dissolved by digestion. Arbutnot.
Flatulent tumours are such as easily yield to the pressure of the finger; but readily return, by their elasticity, to a tumid state again. Quincy.
2. Empty; vain; big without substance or reality; puffy.
To talk of knowledge, from those few indistinct representations which are made to our grosser faculties, is a flatulent vanity. Glanville's Sceptic.
How many of these flatulent writers have sunk in their reputation, after seven or eight editions of their works. Dryden.
- FLATUOSITY.

FLATUOSITY. n. f. [flatuosité, French; from flatus, Latin.] Windiness; fulness of air.

The cause is flatuosity; for wind stirred, moveth to expel; and all purgers have in them a raw spirit of wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach and belly. Bacon.

FLATUOUS. adj. [from flatus, Latin.] Windy; full of wind.

Rhubarb in the stomach, in a small quantity, doth digest and overcome, being not flatuous nor loathsome; and so seducth it to the metallic veins, and, being opening, it helpeth down urine. Bacon.

FLATUS. n. f. [Latin.] Wind gathered in any cavities of the body, caused by indigestion and a gross internal perspiration; which is therefore discussed by warm aromatics. Quincy.

FLATWISE. adj. [flat and wise: so it should be written, not flatways.] With the flat downwards; not the edge.

Its posture in the earth was flatwise, and parallel to the site of the stratum in which it was reposit. Woodward on Fossils.

TO FLAUNT. v. n.

1. To make a fluttering shew in apparel.

With ivy canopy'd, and interwove
With flaunting honey-suckle. Milton.
These courtiers of applause deny themselves things convenient to flaunt it out, being frequently enough fain to immolate their own desires to their vanity. Boyle.

Here, attir'd beyond our purse, we go,
For useless ornament and flaunting show:
We take on trust, in purple robes to shine,
And poor, are yet ambitious to be fine. Dryden.

You for, you loiter about alehouses, or flaunt about the streets in your new-guilt chariot, never minding me nor your numerous family. Arbutnot.

2. To be being with something loose and flying. This seems not to be proper: the words flaunt and flutter might with more propriety have changed their places
Fortune in men has some small difference made;
One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade. Pepe.

FLAUNT. n. f. Any thing loose and airy.

How would he look to see his work so noble,
Willily bound up, what would he say! or how Should I in these my borrow'd flaunts behold
The sternness of his presence! Shakespeare.

FLAVOUR. n. f.

1. Power of pleasing the taste.

They have a certain flavour, at their first appearance, from several accidental circumstances, which they may lose, if not taken early. Addison's Spect.

2. Sweetness to the smell; odour; fragrance.

Myrtle, orange, and the blushing rose,
With bending heaps, so nigh their bloom disclose,
Each seems to smell the flavour which the other blows. Dryden.

FLAVOROUS. adj. [from flavour.]

1. Delightful to the palate.

Sweet grapes degen'rate there, and fruits declin'd
From their first flav'rous taste, renounce their kind. Dryden.

2. Fragrant; odorous.

FLAW. n. f. [Flaw to break; flah, Saxon, a garment.]

1. A crack or breach in any thing.

This heart shall break into a thousand flaws
Or ere I weep. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Wool, new-thorn, being laid casually upon a vessel of verjuice, after some time had drunk up a great part of the verjuice, though the vessel were whole, without any flaw and had not the bung-hole open. Bacon's Natural History.

We found it exceeding difficult to keep out the air from getting in at any imperceptible hole or flaw. Boyle.

A flaw is in thy ill-bak'd vessel found:
'Tis hollow, and returns a jarring sound. Dryden.

As if great Atlas, from his height,

Should sink beneath his heavenly weight;
And with a mighty flaw the flaming wall, as once it shall,

Should gape immense, and rushing down, o'erwhelm this nether ball. Dryden.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,
Or some frail China-jar receive a flaw. Pope.

He that would keep his house in repair, must attend every little breach or flaw, and supply it immediately, else time alone will bring all to ruin. Swift.

2. A fault; defect; something that weakens or invalidates.

Yet certain though it be, it hath flaws; for that the scrivers and brokers do value unfound men to serve their own turn. Bacon's Essays.

Traditions were a proof alone,
Could we be certain such they were, so known:
But since some flaws in long descents may be,
They make not truth, but probability. Dryden.

And laid her dowry out in law,
To null her jointure with a flaw. Hudibras.

So many flaws had this vow in its first conception. Auerbury.

3. A sudden gust; a violent blast. [from flō, Latin.] Obsolete.

Being incens'd, he's flint;
As humorous as Winter, and as sudden

As flaws congeal'd the spring of day. Shak. Hen. IV.
Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,
Should patch a wall, 't'expel the Winter's flaw. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

As a huge fish, laid

Near to the cold weed-gathering shore, is with a north flaw fraid,

Shoots back; so, sent against the ground,
Was soil'd Eriulus. Chapman's Iliad.

Bursting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, and stormy gust, and flaw,
Boreas, and Cæcias, and Argeteis loud,
And Thraecias rend the woods, and seas upturn. Milton.

I heard the ruck,

As earth and sky would mingle; but myself

Was distant; and these flaws, though mortals fear them,

As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
Or to the earth's dark basis underneath,

Are to the main inconsiderable. Milton's Par. Lost.

4. A tumult; a tempestuous uproar.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage,
Until the golden circuit on my head

Do calm the fury of this madbrain'd flaw. Shakespeare.

The fort's revolted to the emperor,
The gates are open'd, the portculis drawn,
And deluges of armies from the town

Came pouring in, I heard the mighty flaw;
When first it broke, the crowding engines saw

Which choak'd the passage. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

5. A sudden commotion of mind.

Oh these flaws and starts,
Impostors to true fear, would become

A woman's story at a Winter's fire. Shak. Macbeth.

TO FLAW. v. a. [from the noun.]

Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition;
By that sin fell the angels. Shakespeare.

9. To FLING down. To demolish; to ruin.

These are so far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some of those which were before standing. Woodward.

10. To FLING off. To baffle in the chase; to defeat of a prey.

These men are too well acquainted with the chase to be flung off by any false steps or doubles.
Addison's Spectator.

To FLING. v. n.

1. To flounce; to wince; to fly into violent and irregular motions.

The angry beast
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if h' had been beside his sense. Hudibras.
Their consciences are galled by it, and this makes them wince and fling as if they had some nettles.
Tilloson.

2. To FLING out. To grow unruly or outrageous: from the act of any angry horse that throws out his legs.

Duncan's horses,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience. Shakespeare.

FLING. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A throw; a cast.

2. A gibe; a sneer, a contemptuous remark.

No little scribbler is of wit so bare,
But has his fling at the poor wedded pair. Addison.

I, who love to have a fling
Both at senate-house and king,
Thought no method more commodious
Than to shew their vices odious. Swift.

FLINGER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. He who throws.
2. He who jeers.

FLINT. n. f. [flint, Saxon.]

1. A semi-pellucid stone, composed of crystal debased, of a blackish grey, of one similar and equal substance, free from veins, and naturally invested with a whitish crust. It is sometimes rough: its size is various. It is well known to strike fire with steel. It is useful in glass-making.

Searching the window for a flint, I found This paper. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Love melts the rigour which the rocks have bred;
A flint will break upon a featherbed. Cleveland.

There's the same force and the same refreshing virtue in fire kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled by a beam from the sun.

Take this, and lay your flint edg'd weapon by.
South's Sermons.

I'll fetch quick fuel from the neighbour'ing wood,
And strike the sparkling flint, and dress the food.
Dryden.

2. Any thing eminently or proverbially hard.

Your tears, a heart of flint
Might tender make. Spenser.

Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault. Shak.

sprightly motion. A cant word among women.

A muslin flounce, made very full, would give a very agreeable flirtation air. Pope.

To FLIT. v. n. [from To fleet; or from flitter, Danish, to remove.]

1. To fly away.

Likest it seemeth, in my simple wit,
Unto the fair sunshine in Summer's day,
That when a dreadful storm away is flit,
Through the broad world doth spread his goodly ray.
Spenser.

2. To remove; to migrate. In Scotland it is still used for removing from one place to another at quarterday, or the usual term.

His grudging ghost did strive
With the frail flesh; at last it flitted is,
Whither the souls do die of men that live amidst.
Fairy Queen.

So hardly he the flitted life does win,
Unto her native prison to return. Fairy Queen.

It became a received opinion, that the souls of men, departing this life, did flit out of one body into some other. Hooker.

3. To flutter; to rove on the wing.

He made a glancing shot, and miss'd the dove;
Yet miss'd so narrow, that he cut the cord
Which fasten'd, by the foot, the sitting bird.
Dryden's Æn.

4. To be flux or unstable.

Fear the just gods, and think of Scylla's fate!
Chang'd to a bird, and sent to flit in air. Pope.

Himself uphigh he lifted from the ground,
And with strong flight did forcibly divide
The yielding air, which nigh too feeble found
Her sitting parts, and element unbound.
Fairy Queen.

He stoop at once the passage of his wind,
And the free soul to sitting air resign'd. Dryden.

FLIT. adj. [from fleet.] Swift; nimble;
quick. Not in use.

And in his hand two darts exceeding flit,
And deadly sharp, he held; whose heads were dight,
In poison and in blood, of malice and despite.
Fairy Queen.

FLITCH. n. f. [flitche, Saxon; flycke,
Danish; fleche, floche, French, Skinner.]

The side of a hog salted and cured.

But heretofore 'twas thought a sumptuous feast,
On birthdays, festivals, or days of state,
A salt dry flitch of bacon to prepare;
If they had fresh meat, 'twas delicious fare.
Dryden's Juv.

While he from out the chimney took
A flitch of bacon off the hook,
Cut out large slices to be fry'd.

He sometimes accompanies the present with a flitch of bacon. Swift.

Thou tellest my flittings, put my tears into thy bottle. Psal.

FLIX. n. f. [corrupted from flax.]
Down; fur; soft hair.

With his loll'd tongue he faintly licks his prey;
His warm breath blows her flix up as she lies:
She trembling creeps upon the ground away,
And looks back to him with beleeching eyes.
Dryden.

FLIXWOOD. n. f. A plant.

To FLOAT. v. n. [flotter, French.]

1. To swim on the surface of the water.

When the sea was calm, all boats alike
Shew'd masteerhip in floating. Shaksp.

The ark no more now floats, but seems on ground,
Fast on the top of some high mountain fix'd.
Milton.

That men, being drowned and sunk, do float the ninth day, when their gall breaketh, are popular affirmations. Brown.

Three blust'ring nights, borne by the southern blast,
I floated; and discover'd land at last. Dryden.

His rosy wreath was dropt not long before,
Borne by the tide of wine, and floating on the floor.
Dryden.

On frothy billows thousands float the stream,
In cumbrous mail. Philips.

2. To move without labour in a fluid.

What divine monsters, O ye gods, were these
That float in air, and fly upon the seas! Dryden.

Swift they descend, with wing to wing conjoin'd,
Stretch their broad plumes, and float upon the wind.
Pope.

3. To pass with a light irregular course:
perhaps mistaken for fleet or flit.

Floating visions make not deep impressions enough to leave in the mind clear, distinct, lasting ideas.
Locke.

To FLOAT. v. a. To cover with water.

Proud Pactolus floats the fruitful lands,
And leaves a rich manure of golden sands.

Dryden's Æn.

Voice looks, at a distance, like a great town half floated by a deluge.

Addison on Italy.

Now smokes with show'rs the misty mountain-ground,

And floated fields lie undistinguish'd round.

Pope.

The vast parterres a thousand hands shall make:

Lo! Cobham comes, and floats them with a lake.

Pope.

FLOAT. n. s. [from the verb.]

FLOW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The rise of water; not the ebb. Some, from the diurnal and annual motion of the earth, endeavour to solve the flow and motions of these seas, illustrating the same by water in a bowl, that rises or falls according to the motion of the vessel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The ebb of tides, and their mysterious flow, We as arts elements shall understand. Dryden.

2. A sudden plenty or abundance. The noble power of suffering bravely is as far above that of enterprising greatly, as an unblemished conscience and inflexible resolution are above an accidental flow of spirits, or a sudden tide of blood. Pope.

3. A stream of diction; volubility of tongue. Teaching is not a flow of words, nor the draining of an hour-glass; but an effectual procuring that a man know something which he knew not before, or to know it better. South.

FLOW'ER. n. f. [fleur, French; flor, flores, Latin.]

1. The part of a plant which contains the seeds. Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have a petala, a stamen, apex and style; and whatever flower wants either of these is reckoned imperfect. Perfect flowers are divided into simple ones, which are not composed of other smaller, and which usually have but one single stile; and compounded, which consist of many stamens, all making but one flower. Simple flowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the flower all of one entire leaf, though sometimes cut or divided a little way into many seeming petala, or leaves; as in borage, buglos; or polypetalous, which have distinct petala, and those falling off singly, and not altogether, as the seeming petala of monopetalous flowers always do; but those are further divided into uniform and disform flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike; but the disform have no such regularity, as in the flowers of sage and deadnettle. A monopetalous disform flower is likewise further divided into, first, semi-fistular, whose upper part resembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the aristochia; 2d, labiate; and this either with one lip only, as in the acanthum and scordium, or with two lips, as in the far greater part of the labiate flowers: and here the upper lip is sometimes turned upwards, and so turns the convex part downwards, as in the chamacissus; but most commonly the upper lip is convex above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and represents a kind of helmet, or monkhood; and from thence these are frequently called galeate, cucullate, and gale-riculate flowers; and in this form are the flowers of the lamium, and most verticillate plants. Sometimes the lamium is intire, and sometimes jagged or divided. 3d, Corniculate; that is, such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn, as the linaria, delphinium, &c. and the carniculum, or calcar, is always impervious at the tip or point. Compounded flowers are, first, discous, or discoidal; that is, whose flosculi are set so close, thick, and even, as to make the surface of the flower plain and flat, which, because of its round form, will be like a discus; which disk is sometimes radiated, when there is a row of petala standing round in the disk, like the points of a star, as in the matricaria, chamæmelum, &c. and sometimes naked, having no such radiating leaves round the limb of its disk, as in the tanacetum: 2d, planifolius, which is composed of plain flowers, set together in circular rows round the centre, and whose face is usually indented, notched, and jagged, as the hieracia. 3d, Fistular, which is compounded of long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into large jags at the ends. Imperfect flowers, because they want the petala, are called stamineous, apetalous, and capillaceous; and those which hang pendulous by fine threads, like the juli, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call them cats-tail. The term campaniformis is used for such as are in the shape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for such as are in the form of a funnel. Miller.

Good men's lives Expire before the flowers in their caps, Dying ere they sicken. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

With flow'r interwoven tresses torn, The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn. Milton.

Beauteous flow'rs why do we spread Upon the monuments of the dead. Cowley.

'Trough the same sun with all diffusive rays Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze, We praise the stronger effort of his power, And always set the gem above the flower. Pope.

If the blossom of the plant be of most importance, we call it a flower; such are daisies, tulips, and carnations. Watts.

2. An ornament; an embellishment. The nomination of persons to those places being so prime and inseparable a flower of his crown, he would reserve to himself. Clarendon.

This discourse of Cyprian, and the excellent flowers of rhetoric in it, shew him to have been a sweet and powerful orator. Hakewill.

Truth needs no flow'rs of speech. Pope.

3. The prime; the flourishing part. Alas! young man, your days can ne'er be long: In flow'r of age you perish for a song. Pope.

4. The edible part of corn; the meal. The bread I would have in flower, so as it might be baked still to serve their necessary want. Spenser.

I can make my audit up, that all From me back receive the flow'r of all, And leave me but the bran. Shakespeare.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbutnot on Aliments.

But by thy care twelve urns of wine be fill'd, Next these in worth, and firm those urns be seal'd; Be twice ten measures of the choicest flow'r. Pope's Odyssey.

5. The most excellent or valuable part of any thing; quintessence. The choice and flower of all things profitable the Psalms do more briefly contain, and more movingly express, by reason of their poetical form. Hooker.

Thou hast slain The flower of Europe for his chivalry. Shakespeare.

The French monarchy is exhausted of its bravest subjects: the flower of the nation is consumed in its wars. Addison.

6. That which is most distinguished for any thing valuable. He is not the flower of courtesy, but, I warrant him, as gentle as a lamb. Shakespeare.

FLOW'ER de Luce. n. f. A bulbous iris. Miller specifies thirty-four species of this plant; and among them the Persian flower de luce is greatly esteemed for the sweetness and beauty of its variegated flowers, which are in perfection in February, or the beginning of March.

Crop'd are the flower de luce in your arms; Of England's coat one half is cut away. Shakespeare.

The iris is the flower de luce. Peacocks.

And when night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine. Milton.
Is this a bridal or a friendly feast?
Or from your deeds I rightly may divine,
Unseemly flown with insolence or wine. Pope.

FLUCTUANT. adj. [fluctuans, Latin.]
Wavering; uncertain.

To be longing for this thing to-day, and for that thing to-morrow; to change likings for loathings, and to stand wishing and hankering at a venture, how is it possible for any man to be at rest in this fluctuant wandering humour and opinion?
L'Estrange.

To FLUCTUATE. v. n. [fluatuo, Latin.]

1. To roll to and again, as water in agitation.

The fluctuating fields of liquid air,
With all the curious meteors hov'ring there,
And the wide regions of the land, proclaim
The Pow'r Divine, that rais'd the mighty frame.
Blackmore.

2. To float backward and forward, as with the motion of water.

3. To move with uncertain and hasty motion.

The tempter
New parts puts on; and, as to passion mov'd, Fluctuates disturb'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. To be in an uncertain state; to feel sudden vicissitudes.

As the greatest part of my estate has hitherto been of an uneasy and volatile nature, either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in lands, it is now fixed and settled in substantial acres and tenements. Addison.

5. To be irresolute; to be undetermined.

FLUCTUATION. n. f. [fluctuatio, Latin;
fluctuation, French; from fluctuate.]

1. The alternate motion of the water.

Fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, storms, shores, shelves, and every interjacency irregulates. Brown.

They were caused by the impulses and fluctuation of water in the bowels of the earth. Woodward.

2. Uncertainty; indetermination.

It will not hinder it from making a profelyte of a person, that loves fluctuation of judgment little enough to be willing to be eased of it by any thing but error. Boyle.

FLUE. n. f. [A word of which I know not the etymology, unless it be derived from flow of fly.]

1. A small pipe or chimney to convey air, heat, or smoke.

2. Soft down or fur, such as may fly in the wind.

FLU

FLUELLIN. n. f. The herb SPEEDWELL.
FLUENCY. n. f. [from fluent.]

1. The quality of flowing; smoothness; freedom from harshness or asperity.

Fluency of numbers, and most expressive figures for the poet, morals for the serious, and pleasantries for admirers of points of wit. Gartb.

2. Readiness; copiousness; volubility.

Our publick liturgy must be cashiered, the better to please those men who gloried in their extemporary vein and fluency. King Charles.

We reason with such fluency and fire,
The beaux we baffle, and the learned tire. Tickel.

The common fluency of speech in many men,
and most women, is owing to a scarcity of matter, and a scarcity of words; for whoever is master of language, and hath a mind full of ideas, will be apt, in speaking, to hesitate upon the choice of both.
Swift.

3. Affluence; abundance. This sense is obsolete.

Those who grow old in fluency and ease,
Behold him tost on seas. Sandys.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Even all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave. Sandys.

FLUENT. adj. [fluens, Latin.]

1. Liquid.

It is not malleable; but yet it is not fluent, but stupified. Bacon.

2. Flowing; in motion; in flux.

Motion being a fluent thing, and one part of its duration being independent upon another, it doth not follow that because anything moves this moment, it must do so the next. Ray on the Creation.

3. Ready; copious; voluble.

Those have some natural dispositions, which have better grace in youth than in age, such as is a fluent and luxurious speech. Bacon.

I shall lay before you all that's within me,
And with most fluent utterance. Denham's Sophy.

FLUENT. n. f. Stream; running water.

Confiding in their hands, that sed'ulous strive
To cut th' outrageous fluents; in this distress,
Ev'n in the sight of death. Philips.

FLUENTLY. adv. [from fluent.] With ready flow; volubly; readily; without obstruction or difficulty.

FLUID. adj. [fluidus, Latin; fluide, French.] Having parts easily separable;
not solid.

Or serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud,
Left it again dissolve, and show'r the earth? Milton.

If particles slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton.

FLUID. n. f.

1. Any thing not solid.

2. [In physick.] Any animal juice: as the blood.

Consider how luxury hath introduced new diseases, and with them, not improbably, altered the whole course of the fluids. Arbutnot.

FLUIDITY. n. f. [fluidité, Fr. from fluid.] The quality in bodies opposite to stability; want of coherence between the parts.

Heat promotes fluidity very much, by diminishing the tenacity of bodies: it makes many bodies fluid, which are not fluid in cold, and increases the fluidity of tenacious liquids; as of oil, balsam, and honey;
and thereby decreases their resistance. Newton.
A disease opposite to this spissitude is too great fluidity. Arbutnot.

FLUIDNESS. n. f. [from fluid.] That quality in bodies opposite to stability.

What if we should say that fluidness and stability depends so much upon the texture of the parts, that, by the change of that texture, the same parts may be made to constitute either a fluid or a dry body, and that permanently too? Boyle.

FLU

FLUMMERY. n. f. A kind of food made by coagulation of wheatflower or oatmeal.

Milk and flummery are very fit for children.
Locke.

FLUNG. participle and preterite of fling.
Thrown; cast.

Several statues the Romans themselves flung into the river, when they would revenge themselves.
Addison on Italy.

FLUOR. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A fluid state.

The particles of fluids, which do not cohere too strongly, and are of such a smallness as renders them most susceptible of those agitations which keep liquors in a fluor, are most easily separated and rarefied into vapours. Newton's Opt.

2. Catamenia.

FLURRY. n. f.

1. A gust or storm of wind; a hasty blast.
The boat was overfet by a sudden flurry from the north. Swift.

2. Hurry; a violent commotion.

To FLUSH. v. n. [fluyzen, Dutch, to flow; flus, or flux, French.]

1. To flow with violence.

The pulse of the heart he attributes to an ebullition and sudden expansion of the blood in the ventricles, after the manner of the milk, which, being heated to such a degree, doth suddenly, and all at once, flush up and run over the vessel. Ray.

It flushes violently out of the cock for about a quart, and then stops. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. To come in haste.

If the place but affords
Any store of lucky birds,
As I make 'em to flush,
Each owl out of his bush. Ben Jonson's Owls.

3. To glow in the skin; to produce a colour in the face by a sudden afflux of blood. It is properly used of a sudden or transient heat of countenance; not of a settled complexion.

Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her gauled eyes,
She married. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Thus Eve with count'nance blithe her story told,
But in her cheek distemper flushing glow'd.
Milton.

What can be more significant than the sudden flushing and confusion of a blush? Collier.

What means that lovely fruit? What means, alas!
That blood, which flushes guilty in your face?
Dryden.

At once, array'd
In all the colours of the flushing year,
The garden glows. Thomson's Spring.

4. To shine suddenly; obsolete.

A flake of fire that flushing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd. Spenser.

To FLUSH. v. a.

1. To colour; to reddén: properly to reddén suddenly.

The glowing dames of Zama's royal court,
Have faces flush'd with more exalted charms.
Addison's Cato.

Some court, or secret corner seek,
Nor flush with shame the passing virgin's cheek.
Gay's Trivia.

2. To elate; to elevate; to give the appearance of sudden joy.

As prosperous people, flushed with great victories and successes, are rarely known to confine their joys within the bounds of moderation and innocence.
Atterbury's Sermons.

FLUSH. adj.

1. Fresh; full of vigour.

He took my father grossly, full of bread,
With all his crimes broad blown, and flush as May;
And how his audit stands, who knows, save Heaven?
Shakespeare.

FLU

- I love to wear cloths that are flusb,
Not prefacing old rags with pluth. Cleveland.
2. Afflux; abounding. A cant word.
Lord Strut was not very flusb in ready, either to go to law or clear old debts; neither could he find good bail. Arbutnot.

FLUSH. n. f.

1. Afflux; sudden impulse; violent flow.
This is commonly corrupted to flash: as,
a flash of water.
Never had any man such a loss, cries a widower,
in the flusb of his extravagancies for a dead wife.
L'Estrange.
The pulse of the arteries is not only caused by the pulsation of the heart, driving the blood through them in manner of a wave or flusb, but by the coats of the arteries themselves. Ray.
Success may give him a present flusb of joy; but when the short transport is over, the apprehension of losing succeeds to the care of acquiring.
Rogers's Sermons.

2. Cards all of a sort.

To FLUSTER. v. a. [from To flusb.] To make hot and rosy with drinking; to make half drunk.

Three lads of Cyprus, noble swelling spirits,
Have I to-night fluster'd with flowing cups,
And they waster too. Shakespeare. Otello.

FLUTE. n. f. [flute, flute, French; fluyte, Dutch.]

1. A musical pipe; a pipe with stops for the fingers.
Th' oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke. Shak.
The soft complaining flute
In dying notes discovers
The woes of hopeless lovers
Whose dirge is whisper'd by the warbling lute.
Dryden.

2. A channel or furrow in a pillar, like the concave of a flute split.

To FLUTE. v. a. To cut columns into hollows.

To FLUTTER. v. n. [floteman, Saxon, flotter, French.]

1. To take short flights with great agitation of the wings.
As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, and spreadeth abroad her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him. Deut.

Think you've an angel by the wings;
One that gladly will be nigh,
To wait upon each morning-fight;
To flutter in the balmy air
Of your well-perfumed pray'r. Craslow.
They fed, and flutt'ring, by degrees withdrew.
Dryden.

2. To move about with great show and bustle without consequence.
Excess muddles the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high. Grew.
No rag, no scrap of all the beau or wit,
That once so flutter'd, and that once so writ.
Pope's Dunciad.

3. To be moved with quick vibrations of undulations.
Ye spirits! to your charge repair;
The flutt'ring fan be Zephyretta's care. Pope.
They the tall mast above the vessel rear,
Or teach the flutt'ring fail to float in air.
Pope's Odyssey.

4. To be in agitation; to move irregularly; to be in a state of uncertainty.

The relation being brought him that a glorious victory was got, and how long he fluttered upon the wings of doubtful success, he was not surpris'd.
Hewel's Vocal Forest.
It is impossible that men should certainly discover the agreement or discernment of ideas, whilst their thoughts flutter about, or stick only in sounds of doubtful signification. Locke.

FLU

Esteem we these, my friends! event and chance,
Produc'd by atoms from their flutt'ring dance!

Prior.
His thoughts are very fluttering and wandering, and cannot be fixed attentively to a few ideas successively. Watts.

To FLUTTER. v. a.

1. To drive in disorder; like a flock of birds suddenly roused.

Like an eagle in a dovecoat, I flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli. Shakespeare.

2. To hurry the mind.

3. To disorder the position of any thing.

FLUTTER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Vibration; undulation; quick and irregular motion.
An infinite variety of motions are to be made use of in the flutter of a fan: there is the angry flutter, the modest flutter, and the timorous flutter.
Addison's Spectator.

2. Hurry; tumult; disorder of mind.

3. Confusion; irregular position.

FLUVIATICK. adj. [fluvaticus, Latin.]
Belonging to rivers.

FLUX. n. f. [fluxus, Latin; flux, French.]

1. The act of flowing; passage.
The simple and primary motion of fire is flux, in a direct line from the centre of the fuel to its circumference. Digby.

2. The state of passing away and giving place to others.
Whether the heat of the sun in animals whose parts are successive, and in a continual flux, can produce a deep and perfect gloss of blacknets.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

What the stated rate of interest should be, in the constant change of affairs, and flux of money, is hard to determine. Locke.

In the constituent matter of one body, turning naturally to another like body, the stock or fund can never be exhausted, nor the flux and alteration sensible. Woodward.

Languages, like our bodies, are in a perpetual flux, and stand in need of recruits to supply those words that are continually falling. Felton.

3. Any flow or issue of matter.
Quinces stop fluxes of blood. Arbutnot.

4. Dysentery; disease in which the bowels are excoriated and bleed; bloody flux.

Eat eastern spice, secure
From burning fluxes and hot calenture. Hallifax.

5. Excrement; that which falls from bodies.
Civet is the very uncleanly flux of a cat. Shak.

6. Concourse; confluence.
Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends;
'Tis right, quoth he; thus misery doth part
The flux of company. Shakespeare. As you like it.

7. The state of being melted.

8. That which mingled with the body makes it melt.

FLUX. adj. [fluxus, Latin.] Unconstant; not durable; maintained by a constant succession of parts.

To FLUX. v. a.

1. To melt.

2. To salivate; to evacuate by spitting.
He might fashionably and genteelly have been duelled or fluxed into another world. South.

FLUXILITY. n. f. [fluxus, Latin.] Easiness of separation of parts; possibility of liquefaction.

Experiments seem to teach, that the supposed averfaction of nature to vacuum is but accidental, or in consequence, partly of the weight and fluidity, or at least fluxility of the bodies here below. Boyle.

FLUXION. n. f. [fluxio, Latin.]

1. The act of flowing.

2. The matter that flows.

FLY

The fluxion increased, and abscesses were raised.
Wifeman.

3. [In mathematics.] The arithmetick or analysis of infinitely small variable quantities; or it is the method of finding an infinite small or infinitely small quantity, which, being taken an infinite number of times, becomes equal to a quantity given. Harris.

A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, are not worth the labour of those who design the learned professions as the business of life. Watts.

To FLY. pret. flew or fled; part. fled or flown. v. n. [pleogan, Saxon. To fly is properly to use wings, and gives flew and flown. To flee is to escape, or to go away, plain, Saxon, and makes fled.
They are now confounded.]

1. To move through the air with wings.
Ere the bat hath flown Shakespeare. Macbeth.
His cloister'd flight
Fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven. Gen. i. 20.

These men's hastiness the warier sort of you do not commend: ye with they had held themselves longer in, and not flown so dangerously abroad before the feathers of the cause had been grown. Hooker.

2. To pass through the air.
Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward.
Job. v.

3. To pass away, with the idea of swiftness or escape.
Ev'n a romance, a tune, a rhyme,
Help thee to pass the tedious time,
Which else would on thy hand remain;
Though flown, it ne'er looks back again. Prior.

4. To pass swiftly.
The scouts with flying speed
Return, and through the city spread the news.
Dryden.

Earth rolls back beneath the flying steed. Pope.

5. To move with rapidity.
As striplings whip the top for sport,
On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
The wooden engine flies and whirls about. Dryden.

6. To part with violence.
Glad to catch this good occasion,
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly asunder. Shakespeare.
He busses heads to save his own, made fly;
And now, the sultan to preserve, must die. Waller.

7. To break; to shiver; to burst asunder with a sudden explosion.
Behold, a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, off your bottle flies. Swift.

8. [plain, Saxon; flichen, German.] To run away; to attempt escape. [In this sense the verb is properly to flee, when fled is formed; but the following examples shew that they are confounded:
they are confounded oftener in the present than in the preter tense.]

Which when the valiant elf perceiv'd, he leapt,
As lion fierce, upon the flying prey. Spenser.
Ye shall flee, as ye fled from before the earthquake. Zech. xiv. 5.

Abiather escaped and fled after David. 1 Sa. xxii.
What wonder if the kindly beams he shed,
Reviv'd the drooping arts again;
If science rais'd her head,
And soft humanity, that from rebellion fled.
Dryden.

He oft desir'd to fly from Israel's throne,
And live in shades with her and love alone. Prior.

I'll fly from shepherds, flocks, and flow'ry plains;
From shepherds, flocks, and plains I may remove,
For sake mankind, and all the world but love. Pope.

9. To FLY at. To spring with violence upon; to fall on suddenly.

A servant

FLY.

FOA

FOC

A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master; who, heret' enrag'd,
Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead.

Though the dogs have never seen the dog-killer, yet they will come forth and fly at him.

No honour, no fortune, can keep a man from being miserable, when an enraged conscience shall fly at him, and take him by the throat.

10. To FLY in the face. To insult.

This would discourage any man from doing you good, when you will either neglect him, or fly in his face; and he must expect only danger to himself.

11. To FLY in the face. To act in defiance.

—But how, if nature fly in my face first?
—Then nature's the aggressor.

12. To FLY off. To revolt.

They have travelled all the night! mean fetches,
The images of revolt and flying off.

13. To FLY out. To burst into passion.

How easy is a noble spirit discern'd,
From harsh and sulphurous matter that flies out
In contumelies, makes a noise, and stinks.

14. To FLY out. To break out into licence.

Passion is apt to ruffle, and pride will fly out into contumely and neglect.

15. To FLY out. To start violently from any direction.

All bodies, mov'd circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not restrained.

16. To let FLY. To discharge.

The noisy culverin, o'ercharg'd, lets fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the rooked sky.

17. To be light and unencumbered: as a flying camp.

1. To shun; to avoid; to decline.

Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues;
Pursuing that which flies, and flying what pursues.

2. To refuse association with.

Sleep flies the wretch; or when with cares oppress,
And his tofs'd limbs are weary'd into rest,
Then dreams invade.

3. To quit by flight.

Dedalus, to fly the Cretan shore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore,
The first who fail'd in air.

4. To attack by a bird of prey.

If a man can tame this monster, and with her fly other rav'ning lowls, and kill them, it is somewhat worth.

5. It is probable that flew was originally the preterite of fly, when it signified volation, and fled when it signified escape: flown should be confined likewise to volation; but these distinctions are now confounded. I know not any book except the Scriptures in which fly and flee are carefully kept separate.

FLY. n. s. [pleoge, Saxon.]

1. A small winged insect of many species.

As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They kill us for their sport.

2. That part of a machine which, being put into a quick motion, regulates and equalises the motion of the rest.

If we suppose a man tied in place of the weight, it were easy, by a single hair fastened unto the fly or balance of the jack, to draw him up from the ground.

3. That part of a vane which points how the wind blows.

To FLY'BLow. v. a. [fly and blow.] To taint with flies; to fill with maggots.

I am unwilling to believe that he delights to play tricks, and to flyblow my words, to make others distaste them.

FLY'BOAT. n. s. [fly and boat.] A kind of vessel nimble and light for sailing.

FLYCA'TCHER. n. s. [fly and catch.] One that hunts flies.

There was more need of Brutus in Domitian's days, to mend, than of Horace, to laugh at a flycatcher.

FLY'ER. n. s. [from fly.]

1. One that flies or runs away. This is written more frequently flier.

They hit one another with darts, as the others do with their hands, which they never throw counter, but at the back of the flier.

2. One that uses wings.

3. The fly of a Jack.

4. [In architecture.] Stairs made of an oblong square figure, whose fore and back sides are parallel to each other, and so are their ends: the second of these fliers stands parallel behind the first, the third behind the second, and so are said to fly off from one another.

To FLY'FISH. v. n. [fly and fish.] To angle with a hook baited with a fly, either natural or artificial.

I shall give you some directions for fly-fishing.

FOAL. n. s. [foala, Saxon.] The offspring of a mare, or other beast of burthen. The custom now is to use colt for a young horse, and foal for a young mare; but there was not originally any such distinction.

Alfa flew his steed,
And with his winged heels did tread the wind.
As he had been a foal of Pegasus's kind.

To FOAL. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth. Used of mares.

Give my horse to Timon: it foals me straight
Ten able horses.

Of generous race, straight, when they first are foal'd,
Walk proudly.

To FOAL. v. n. To be disburthened of the foetus. Used of beasts of burthen.

About September take your mares into the house, where keep them 'till they foal.

FO'ALBIT. } n. s. Plants.

FOAM. n. s. [fæm; Saxon.] The white substance which agitation or fermentation gathers on the top of liquours; froth; spume.

The foam upon the water.
Whitening down their mossy tinctur'd stream
Defends the billowy foam.

To FOAM. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To froth; to gather foam.

What a beard of the general's cut will do among foaming bottles and ale-wash'd wits, is wonderful.

2. To be in rage; to be violently agitated.

He foameth, and gnatheth with his teeth.

FO'AMY. adj. [from foam.] Covered with foam; frothy.

More white than Neptune's foamy face,
When struggling rocks he would embrace.

FOB. n. s. [suppe, supsacke, German.] A small pocket.

Who picked a job at holding forth.
When were the dice with more profusion thrown?
The well-fill'd fob, not empty'd now alone.

FOBB. v. a. [suppen, German.] To cheat; to trick; to defraud.

I think it is scurvy, and begin to find myself fobb'd in it.

2. To FOB off. To shift off; to put aside with an artifice; to delude by a trick.

You must not think
To fob off your disgraces with a tale.
For they, poor knaves, were glad to cheat,
To get their wives and children meat;
But these will not be fobb'd off so.

FO'CAL. adj. [from focus.] Belonging to the focus. See Focus.

Schellhammer demandeth whether the convexity or concavity of the drum collects rays into a focal point or scatters them.

FO'CIL. n. f. [facile, French.] The greater or less bone between the knee and ankle, or elbow and wrist.

The fracture was of both the foeils of the left leg. Wifeman.

FOCILLA'TION. n. f. [foeillo, Lat.] Confort; support. Diſt.

FOCUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. [In opticks.] The focus of a glaſs is the point of convergence or concurrence, where the rays meet and croſs the axis after their refraction by the glaſs. The point from which rays diverge, or to which they converge, may be called their focus. Newton's Opticks.

2. Focus of a Parabola. A point in the axis within the figure, and diſtant from the vertex by a fourth part of the parameter, or latus reſtum. Harris.

3. Focus of an Ellipſis. A point towards each end of the longer axis; from whence two right lines being drawn to any point in the circumference, ſhall be together equal to that longer axis. Harris.

4. Focus of the Hyperbola. A point in the principal axis, within the oppoſite hyperbolas; from which if any two right lines are drawn, meeting in either of the oppoſite hyperbolas, the difference will be equal to the principal axis. Diſt.

FODDER. n. f. [родне, роден, Saxon.] Dry food ſtored up for cattle againſt winter.

Their cattle, ſtarving for want of fodder, corrupted the air. Kneller's Hiſtory of the Turks.

Being not to be raiſed without wintering, they will help to force men into improvement of land by a neceſſity of fodder. Temple.

Of graſs and fodder thou defraud'ſt the dams, And of their mothers dug the ſtarving lambs. Dryd. Virgil.

To FODDER. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with dry food.

Natural earth is taken from juſt under the turf of the beſt pasture ground, in a place that has been well foddered on. Evelyn.

From Winter keep, Well fodder'd in the ſtalls, thy tender ſheep. Dryd. Virgil.

A farm of fifty pound hath commonly three barns, with as many cowyards to fodder cattle in. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Straw will do well enough to fodder with. Mortimer.

FODDERER. n. f. [from fodder.] He who fodders cattle.

FOE. n. f. [fah, Saxon; fae, Scottiſh.]

FOLIATION. n. f. [foliatio, folium, Latin.]
 1. The act of beating into thin leaves.
 2. Foliation is one of the parts of the flower, being the collection of those fu-gacious coloured leaves called petals, which constitute the compass of the flower; and sometimes guard the fruit which succeeds the foliation, as in apples and pears, and sometimes stand within it, as in cherries and apricots; for these, being tender and pulposus, and coming forth in the Spring, would be injured by the weather, if they were not lodged up within their flowers. Quincy.

FO'LIATURE. n. f. [from folium, Latin.]
 The state of being hammered into leaves.
Diff.
FO'LIO. n. f. [in folio, Latin.] A large book

FOLK. n. f. [fole, Saxon; wolk, Dutch;
 it is properly a noun collective, and has no plural but by modern corruption.]
 1. People, in familiar language.
 Never troubling him, either with asking questions;
 or finding fault with his melancholy, but rather fitting to his dolor dolorous discourses of their own and other folks misfortune. Sidney.
 Dorilus having married his sister, had his marriage in short time blest, for so are folk wont to say, how unhappy soever the children after grow, with a son. Sidney.
 When with greatest art he spoke,
 You'd think he talk'd like other folk;
 For all a rhetorician's rules
 Teach nothing but to name his tools. Hudibras.
 2. Nations; mankind.
 Thou shalt judge the folk righteously, and govern
 the nations upon earth. Psal. lvii. 4.
 3. Any kind of people as discriminated from others.
 The river thrice hath flow'd, no ebb between?
 And the old folk, time's doting chronicles,
 Say it did to a little time before. Shakesp.

 and built by two several nations; the one is that which you call folknotes, built by the Saxons, and signifies in the Saxon a meeting of folk. Spenser.
FO'LLICLE. n. f. [folliculus, Latin.]
 1. A cavity in any body with strong coats.
 Although there be no eminent and circular follicle, no round bag or vesicle, which long containeth this humour; yet is there a manifest receptacle of choler from the liver into the guts. Brown.
 2. Follicle is a term in botany, signifying seed-vessels, capsula seminalis, or case, which some fruits and seeds have over them; as that of the alkengi, pedicu-laris, &c. Quincy.
TO FO'LLOW. v. a. [folgian, Saxon; wolgen, Dutch.]
 1. To go after; not before, or side by side.
 I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf. Shakespeare.
 5 It

Him and all his train
Follow'd in bright procession, to behold
 Creation, and the wonders of his might. Milton.
 What could I do,
 But follow strait, invisibly thus led?

2. To pursue as an enemy; to chase.
 Where ranks fell thickest was indeed the place
 To seek Sebastian, through a track of death
 I follow'd him by groans of dying foes. Dryden.

3. To accompany; not to forsake.
 Yet doubt not but in valley and in plain
 God is as here, and will be found alike
 Present, and of his presence many a sign
 Still following thee, still compassing thee round
 With goodness and paternal love, his face
 Express, and of his steps the track divine. Milton.
 Up he rode,
Follow'd with acclamation and the sound
 Symphonious of ten thousand harps that tun'd Angelic harmonica. Milton.

4. To attend as a dependant.
 And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and fol- lowed Saul to the battle. 1 Sam. xvii. 13.
 Let not the muse then flatter lawless sway,
 Nor follow fortune where she leads the way. Pope.

5. To go after, as a teacher.
 Not yielding over to old age his country delights,
 he was at that time following a merlin. Sidney.
 Some pious tears the pitying hero paid,
 And follow'd with his eyes the fleeting shade. Dryden's Æn.
 We follow fate, which does too fast pursue. Dryden.

6. To succeed in order of time.
 Such follow him as shall be register'd,
 Part good, part bad, of bad the longer scroll. Milt.
 Signs following signs, lead on the mighty year. Pope.

7. To be consequential in argument, as effects to causes.
 I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold
 And vent'rous, if that fail them, shrink and fear
 What yet they know must follow, to endure
 Exile, or ignominy, or bonds, or pain. Milton.

8. To imitate; to copy, as a pupil; or to be of an opinion or party.
 Where Rome keepeth that which is ancients and better, others, whom we much more affect, leaving it for newer, and changing it for worse, we had rather follow the perfections of them whom we like not, than in defects resemble them whom we love. Locke.
 All patterns are sure to be followed more than good rules. Locke.

9. To obey; to observe, as a guide or direction.
 If all who do not follow oral tradition as their only rule of faith are out of the church, then all who follow the council of Trent are no Christians. Tillotson.
 Most men admire
 Virtue, who follow not her lore. Paradise Reg.
 Fair virtue should I follow thee,
 I should be naked and alone,
 For thou art not in company,
 And scarce art to be found in one. Evelyn.

10. To pursue as an object of desire.
Follow peace with all men. Hebrews.
Follow not that which is evil. John.

11. To confirm by new endeavours; to keep up indefatigably.
 They bound themselves to his laws and obedience;
 and in case it had been followed upon them, as it should have been, they should have been reduced to perpetual civility. Spenser.

12. To attend to; to be busied with.
 He that undertaketh and followeth other men's business for gain, shall fall into suits. Eccles.

To FOLLOW. v. n.

 Welcome to all that lead or follow
 To the oracle of Apollo. Ben. Jonson.

2. To attend fervently.
 Such smiling rogues as these sooth every passion,

That in the nature of their lords rebels:
 As knowing nought, like dogs, but following. Shak.

3. To be posterior in time.

4. To be consequential, as effect to cause.
 If the neglect or abuse of liberty to examine what would really and truly make for his happiness mislead him, the miscarriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke.
 To tempt them to do what is neither for their own nor the good of those under their care, great mischiefs cannot but follow. Locke.

5. To be consequential, as inference to premises.
 Though there are or have been sometimes dwarfs, and sometimes giants in the world; yet it does not follow that there must be such in every age, nor in every country. Temple.
 Dangerous doctrine must necessarily follow, from making all political power to be nothing else but Adam's paternal power. Locke.

6. To continue endeavours; to persevere.
 Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord. Hof.

FOLLOWER. n. f. [from follow.]

1. One who comes after another; not before him, or side by side.
 Little gallant, you were wont to be a follower;
 but now you are a leader; whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels? Shak.
 No stop, no stay, but clouds of sand arise,
 Spurr'd and cast backward on the follower's eyes. Dryden.

2. One who observes a guide or leader.
 The understanding that should be eyes to the blind faculty of the will, is blind itself; and so brings all the inconveniences that attend a blind follower, under the conduct of a blind guide. South's Sermon.

3. An attendant or dependant.
 No follower but a friend. Pope.

4. An associate; a companion.
 How accompanied, can't thou tell that?
 —With Poins, and other his continual followers. Shak. H. IV.

5. One under the command of another.
 I hold it no wisdom to leave unto the Irish chiefs too much command over their kindred, but rather withdraw their followers from them as much as may be, and gather them under the command of law. Spenser's State of Ireland.
 And fore'd Æneas, when his ships were lott,
 To leave his followers on a foreign coast. Dryden.

6. A scholar; an imitator; a copyer.

 gages all its followers to do good to all men. Spratt's Sermons.
 Every one's idea of identity will not be the same that Pythagoras and thousands of his followers have. Locke.
 The church of Smyrna professed they worthily loved the martyrs, as the disciples and followers of our Lord; and because of their exceeding great affection to their king and their master. Nelson.
 The studious head or gen'rous mind,
Follower of God, or friend of human kind,
 Poet or patriot, rest but to restore
 The faith and moral nature gave before. Pope.

7. One of the same faction or party.

FOLLY. n. f. [folie, French.]

1. Want of understanding; weakness of intellect.
 This is folly childhood's guide.
 This is childhood at her side. Hawkefworth.

2. Criminal weakness; depravity of mind.
 Think't thou, that duty should have dread to speak,
 When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour
 Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakesp.

3. Act of negligence or passion unbecoming gravity or deep wisdom. In this sense it has a plural.
 Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
 The pretty follies that themselves commit;

For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
 To see me thus transformed to a boy. Shaksp. care.
 Thy hum'rous vein, thy pleasing folly,
 Lies all neglected, all forgot. Prior.
 Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease,
 Whom folly pleases, or whose follies please. Pope.

To FOMENT. v. a. [fomentor, Latin; fomenter, French.]

1. To cherish with heat.
 Every kind that lives,
Fomented by his virtual power, and warm'd. Milton.

2. To bathe with warm lotions.
 He fomented the head with opiates to procure sleep, and a solution of opium in water to foment the forehead. Arbutnot.

3. To encourage; to support; to cherish.
 They love their givings, and foment their deeds no less than parents do their children. Wotton.
 Blame then thyself, as reason's law requires,
 Since nature gave, and thou foment'st my fires. Dryd.
 They are troubled with those ill humours, which they themselves infused and fomented in them. Locke.

FOMENTATION. n. f. [fomentation, French, from foment.]

1. A fomentation is partial bathing, called also stuning, which is applying hot flanel-nels to any part, dipped in medicated decoctions, whereby the steams breathe into the parts, and disengages obstructed humours.
Quincy.
Fomentation calleth forth the humour by vapours;
 but yet, in regard of the way made by the poultice, draweth gently the humours out: for it is a gentle fomentation, and hath withal a mixture of some stu-pefactive. Bacon's Natural History.

2. The lotion prepared to foment the parts.
 The medicines were prepared by the physicians,
 and the lotions or fomentations by the nurses. Arbutnot.

FOMENTER. n. f. [from foment.] One that foments; an encourager; a supporter.
 These fatal distempers, as they did much hurt to the body politick at home, being like humours stirred in the natural without evacuation, so did they produce disadvantageous effects abroad; and better had it been, that the raisers and fomenters of them had never sprung up. Howel.

FON. n. f. [Scott. A word now obsolete.]
 A fool; an idiot.
 Sicker I hold him for a greater fon,
 That love's the thing he cannot purchase. Spenser.

FOND, n. f. [fon, Scottish. A word of which I have found no satisfactory etymology. To fonne is in Chaucer to doat, to be foolish.]

1. Foolish; silly; indiscreet; imprudent; injudicious.
 That the Grecians or Gentiles ever did think it a fond or unlikely way to seek men's conversion by sermons, we have not heard. Hooker.
 He was beaten out of all love of learning by a fond school-master. Ayebam.
 Tell these sad women.
 'Tis fond to wait inevitable strokes,
 As 'tis to laugh at them. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 Grant I may never prove so fond
 To trust man on his oath or bond. Shakesp. Timon.
 I am weaker than a woman's tear,
 Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance. Shakesp.
Fond thoughts may fall into some idle brain;
 But on: belief of all, is ever wise. Davies.
 Thou see'st
 How subtly to detain thee I devise,
 Inviting thee to hear while I relate;
Fond! were it not in hope of thy reply. Milton.
 So fond are mortal men.
 Fall'n into wrath divine,
 As their own ruin on themselves 't invite. Milton.
 'Twas not revenge for griev'd Apollo's wrong
 Those fon's ears on Midas' temples hung;
 But fond repentance of his happy wish. Waller.
 But reason with your fond religion fights;
 For many gods are many infinities. Dryden.
 This

This is fond, because it is the way to cheat thyself.

Tillofon.

My pictures, medals, books complete. Prior.
Some are so fond to know a great deal at once, and love to talk of things with freedom and boldness before they thoroughly understand them. Watts.

To FOND. } v. a. [from the noun.] To
To FONDLE } treat with great indulgence; to caress; to cocker.

Howe'er unjust your jealousy appear,
It does my pity, not my anger move:
I'll fond it as the froward child of love.

When midst the fervour of the feast,
The Tyrian hugs, and fonds thee on her breast,
And with sweet kisses in her arms constrains,
Thou may'st infuse the venom in her veins. Dryden.

They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting; but a professor, who always stands by, will not suffer them to use any fondling expressions. Swift.

To FOND. v. n. To be fond of; to be in love with; to dote on.

How will this fadge? My master loves her dearly;
And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me. Shakesp.

FONDLER. n. f. [from fond.] One who fondles.

FONDLING. n. f. [from fondle.] A person or thing much fondled or caressed; something regarded with great affection.

Partiality in a parent is commonly unlucky; for fondlings are in danger to be made fools, and the children that are least cockered make the best and wisest men. L'Estrange.

The bent of our own minds may favour any opinion or action, that may shew it to be a fondling of our own. Locke.

Any body would have guessed miss to have been bred up under a cruel stepdame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbutnot's John Bull.

Bred a fondling and an heiress,
Dress'd like any lady may'st refs?
Cocker'd by the servants round,
Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

A person plethorick, subject to hot defuxions, was advised to a fontanel in her arm. Wifeman of Infl.

FONTANGE. n. f. [from the name of the first wearer.] A knot of ribbands on the top of the head-dress. Out of use.

Those old-fashioned fontanges rose an ell above the head: they were pointed like steeples, and had long loose pieces of grapes, which were fringed, and hung down their backs. Addifon.

FOOD. n. f. [frædan, Saxon; weeden, Dutch,
to feed; feed, Scott.].

1. Victuals; provision for the mouth.
On my knees I beg,
That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food. Shakesp.

Much food is in the tillage of the poor,
Under my lowly roof thou hast vouchsaf'd
To enter, and these earthly fruits to taste;
Food not of angels, yet accepted so,
As that more willingly thou could'st not seem
At heav'n's high seats to have fed. Milton.

They give us food, which may with nectar vie,
And wax that does the absent sun supply. Waller.

2. Any thing that nourishes.
Give me some musick: musick, moody food
Of us that trade in love. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

O dear son Edgar,
The food of thy abused father's wrath,
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say, I had eyes again. Shakesp. King Lear.

FOODFUL. adj. [food and full.] Fruitful;
full of food; plenteous.

There Tityus was to see, who took his birth
From heav'n, his nursing from the foodful earth. Dryden.

a jester.
Where's my knave, my fool! Go you, and call my fool hither. Shakespeare's King Lear.

I scorn, although their drudge, to be their fool
or jester. Milton.

If this disguise fit not naturally on so grave a person, yet it may become him better than that fool's coat. Denham.

5. To play the Fool. To play pranks like a hired jester; to jest; to make sport.

I returning where I left his armour, found another instead thereof, and armed myself therein to play the fool. Stacey.

6. To play the Fool. To act like one void of common understanding.

Well, thus we play the fools with the time, and the spirits of the wife sit in the clouds and mock us.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Is it worth the name of freedom to be at liberty to play the fool, and draw shame and misery upon a man's self? Locke.

7. To make a Fool of. To disappoint; to defeat.

'Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's a-hungry, to challenge him to the field, and then to break promise with him, and make a fool of him.
Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

To FOOL. v. n. [from the noun.] To trifle;
to toy; to play; to idle; to sport.

I, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing to you; so you may continue and laugh at nothing still.
Shakespeare's Tempest.

Fool not; for all may have.
If they dare try, a glorious life, a grave. Herbert.

If you have the luck to be court-fools, those that have either wit or honesty, you may fool withal, and spare not. Denham.

It must be an industrious youth that provides against age; and he that fools away the one, must either beg or starve in the other. L'Estrange.

He must be happy that knows the true measures of fooling. L'Estrange.

Is this a time for fooling? Dryden.

- To FOOL. v. a.

1. To treat with contempt; to disappoint;
to frustrate; to defeat.

And shall it in more shame be further spoken,
That you are fool'd, discarded, and stook off? Shak.

I'm over-wearing
To over-reach; but with the serpent meeting, Fool'd and beguil'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

If men loved to be deceived and fooled about their spiritual estate, they cannot take a surer course than by taking their neighbour's word for that, which can be known only from their own heart. South.

When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;
Nor fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit. Dryden.

I'm tir'd with waiting for this chemick gold;
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.

I would advise this blinded set of men not to give credit to those, by whom they have been so often fool'd and imposed upon. Addifon's Freeholder.

2. To infatuate; to make foolish.
If it be you that stir these daughters hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much
To hear it tamely. Shakespeare's King Lear.

When I am read, thou seign'st a weak applause,
As if thou wert my friend, but lack'st a cause.

This but thy judgment fools; the other way
Would both thy folly and thy spite betray. Ben Jonson.
It were an handsome plot,
But full of difficulties, and uncertain;
And he's so fool'd with downright honesty,
He'll ne'er believe it. Denham's Sophy.
A long and eternal adieu to all unlawful pleasures:
I will no longer be fooled or imposed upon by them.
Culamy's Sermon.
A boor of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer and richer, perhaps fool him so far as to make him enjoy less in his riches than others in poverty.
Temple.

3. To cheat: as, to fool one of his money.
FOOL'BORN. adj. [fool and born.] Foolish from the birth.

Reply not to me with a foolborn jest. Sbak. H. IV.
FOOL'BERY. n. s. [from fool.]

1. Habitual folly,
Foolery, Sir, does walk about the orb like the sun; it shines every where; I would be sorry, Sir, but the fool should be as oft with your master as with my mistress. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.

2. An act of folly; trifling practise.
It is meer foolery to multiply distinct particulars in treating of things, where the difference lies only in words. Watts.

3. Object of folly.
That Pythagoras, Plato, or Orpheus believed in any of these fooleries, it cannot be suspected.
Raleigh's History.
We are transported with fooleries, which, if we understood, we should despise. L'Estrange.

FOOL-HAPPY. adj. [fool and happy] Lucky without contrivance or judgment.
As when a ship, that flies fair under sail,
An hidden rock escaped unawares,
That lay in wait her wreck for to bewail:
The mariner, yet half amazed, stares
At perils past, and yet in doubt ne dares
To joy at his fool-happy oversight. Fairy Queen.

FOOLHARDINESS. n. s. [from foolhardy.]
Mad rashness; courage without sense.
There is a difference betwixt daring and fool- hardiness: Lucan and Statius often ventured them too far, our Virgil never. Dryden.
A false glosing parasite would call his foolhard- iness valour, and then he may go on boldly because blindly. South.

FOOLHARDISE. n. s. [fool and hardisse,
French.] Foolhardiness; adventurousness without judgment. Obsolete.
More huge in strength than wife in works he was,
And reason with foolhardise over-ran;
Stern melancholy did his courage pass,
And was, for terror more, all-arm'd in shining brass.
Fairy Queen.

FOOLHARDY. adj. [fool and hardy.] Daring without judgment; madly adventurous;
foolishly bold.
One mother, when as her foolhardy child
Did come too near, and with his talons play,
Half dead through fear, her little babe revild.
Fairy Queen.
Some would be so foolhardy as to presume to be more of the cabinet council of God Almighty than the angels.
If any yet be so foolhardy,
T' expose themselves to vain jeopardy;
If they come wounded off, and lame,
No honour's got by such a main. Hudibras.

FOOLTRAP. n. s. [fool and trap.] A snare to catch fools in: as a flytrap.
Betts at the first, were fooltraps, where the wife
Like spiders lay in ambush for the flies. Dryden.

We are come off
Like Romans: neither foolish in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Ridiculous; contemptible.
It is a foolish thing to make a long prologue, and to be short in the story itself. 2 Mac. ii. 32.
What could the head perform alone,
If all their friendly aids were gone?
A foolish figure he must make;
Do nothing else but sleep and ake. Prior.
He allows himself in foolish hatreds and resentments against particular persons, without considering that he is to love every body as himself. Law.

4. [In Scripture.] Wicked; sinful.
FOOLISHLY. adv. [from foolish.] Weakly; without understanding. In Scripture, wickedly.
Although we boast our Winter sun looks bright,
And foolishly are glad to see it in its height;
Yet so much sooner comes the long and gloomy night.
Swift.

FOOLISHNESS. n. s. [from foolish.]
1. Folly; want of understanding.
2. Foolish practice; actual deviation from the right.
Foolishness being properly a man's deviation from right reason, in point of practice, must needs consist in his pitching upon such an end as is unsuitable to his condition, or pitching upon means unsuitable to the compassing of his end. South.
Charm'd by their eyes, their manners I acquite,
And thape my foolishness to their desire. Prior.

FOOLSTONES. n. s. A plant. Miller.
FOOT; n. s. plural feet. [Foot, Saxon; woel, Dutch; fat, Scottish.]

1. The part upon which we stand.
The queen that bore thee,
Oft'ner upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day the liv'd. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
His affection to the church was so notorious, that he never deserr'd it, till both it and he were over-run and trod under foot. Clarendon.

2. That by which any thing is supported in the nature of a foot: as, the foot of a table.
3. The lower part; the base.
Yond' towers, whose wanton tops do bufs the clouds,
Must kiss their own feet. Shak. Troilus and Cressida.
Fretting, by little and little, washes away and eats out both the tops and sides and feet of mountains.
Hakewill.

4. The end; the lower part.
What dismal cries are those?
—Nothing; a trifling sum of misery,
New added to the foot of thy account:
Thy wife is seiz'd by force, and born away. Dryden.

5. The act of walking,
Antiochus departed, weening in his pride to make the land navigable, and the sea passable by foot.
2 Mac. v. 21.

of foot, and five thousand horsemen. 1 Mac. iv. 28.
Himself with all his foot entered the town, his horse being quartered about it. Clarendon.
Thrice horse and foot about the fires are led,
And thrice with loud laments they wail the dead.
Dryden.

9. State; character; condition.
See on what foot we stand; a scanty shore,
The sea behind, our enemies before. Dryden's En.
In specifying the word Ireland, it would seem to insinuate that we are not upon the same foot with our fellow-subjects in England. Swift's Drapier's Letters.

What colour of excuse can be for the contempt with which we treat this part of our species, the negroes, that we should not put them upon the common foot of humanity, that we should only set an insignificant fine upon the man who murders them?
Addison.

10. Scheme; plan; settlement.
There is no wellwisher to this country without a little hope that in time the kingdom may be on a better foot. Swift.
I ask whether upon the foot of our constitution, as it stood in the reign of the late King James, a king of England may be deposed? Swift.

11. A state of incipient existence; first motion. Little used but in the following phrase.
If such a tradition were at any time set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entainment; but much more difficult how it should come to be universally propagated. Tillotson.

12. It seems to have been once proverbially used for the level, the square, par.
Were it not for this easy borrowing upon interest, men's necessities would draw upon them a most sudden undoing, in that they would be forced to sell their means, be it lands or goods, far under foot.
Bacon's Essays.

13. A certain number of syllables constituting a distinct part of a verse.
Feet, in our English versifying, without quantity and joints, be sure signs that the verse is either born deformed, unnatural, or lame. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
Didst thou hear these verses?
—O yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some of them had in them more feet than the verses would bear. Shakespeare.
And Sidney's verse halts ill on Roman feet. Pope.

14. Motion; action.
While other jests are something rank on foot.
Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender to marry. Shakespeare.
In the government of the world the number and variety of the ends on foot, with the secret nature of most things to which they relate, must make a distinct remark of their congruity, in some cases very difficult, and in some unattainable. Grew.

15. Step.
This man's son would, every foot and anon, be taking some of his companions into the orchard.
L'Estrange.

16. A measure containing twelve inches:
supposed to be the length of a man's foot.
When it signifies measure, it has often, but vitiously foot in the plural.
An orange, lemon, and apple, wrapt in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight's space four foot deep within the earth, came forth no ways mouldy or rotten. Bacon.

To FOOT. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To dance; to tread wantonly; to trip.
Lonely the vale and full of horror stood,
Brown with the shade of a religious wood;
The moon was up, and shot a gleamy light;
He saw a quire of ladies in a round,
That scally footing seem'd to skim the ground. Dryden.

2. To walk; not ride; not fly.
By this the dreadful beast drew nigh to land,
Half flying, and half footing in his hate. Fairy Queen.
Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night. Shakespeare.
The man set the boy upon the ass, and footed it himself. L'Estrange.
If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try, for once, who can foot it farthest. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
With them a man sometimes cannot be a penitent, unless he also turns vagabond, and foots it to Jerusalem; or wanders over this or that part of the world, to visit the shrine of such or such a pretended saint. South.

To FOOT. v. a.
1. To spurn; to kick.
You, that did void your rheum upon my beard, and foot me as you spurn a stranger cur over your threshold. Shakespeare.

What confed'rac'ry have you with the traitors Late footed in the kingdom? Shakesp. King Lear.

3. To read.
Saint Withold footed the ice the wold:
He met the night-mare, and her name told;
Bid her alight, and her troth plight,
And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee right. Shakesp.
There haply by the ruddy damsel seen,
Or shepherd boy, they featly foot the green. Tickel.

4. To hold with the foot. Not in use.
We are the earth, and they,
Like moles within us, heave and cast about;
And till they foot and clutch their prey,
They never cool, much less give out. Herbert.

FOOTBALL. n. f. [foot and ball.]
1. A ball commonly made of a blown bladder, cased with leather, driven by the foot.
Am I so round with you as you with me,
That like a football you do spurn me thus? Shakesp.
Such a Winter-piece should be beautified with all manner of works and exercises of Winter; as footballs, felling of wood, and sliding upon the ice. Peacbam.

2. The sport or practice of kicking the football.
He was sensible the common football was a very imperfect imitation of that exercise. Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scribl.
FOOTBOY. n. f. [foot and boy.] A low menial; an attendant in livery.
Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,
This honest man, wait like a lowly footboy
At chamber-door? Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Though I had nobody to assist but a footboy, yet
I made thift to try a pretty number of things. Boyle.
Whenever he imagines advaantages will rebound to one of his footboys by oppression of me, he never disputes it. Swift.

FOOTBRIDGE. n. f. [foot and bridge.] A bridge on which passengers walk; a narrow bridge.
Palemon's shepherd, fearing the footbridge was not strong enough, loaded it so long, 'till he broke that which would have born a bigger burden. Sidney.

FOOTCLOATH. n. f. [foot and cloath.] A sumpter cloth.
Three times a-day my footcloath horse did stumble,
And started when he look'd upon the Tower,
As loth to bear me to the slaughter-house. Shakesp.

FOOTED. adj. [from foot.] Shaped in the foot.
Snouted and tailed like a boar, and footed like a goat. Greul.

FOOTFIGHT. n. f. [foot and fight.] A fight made on foot, in opposition to that on horseback.
So began our footfight in such sort, that we were well entered to blood of both sides. Sidney.

FOOTHOLD. n. f. [foot and hold.] Space to hold the foot; space on which one may tread surely.
All fell to work at the roots of the tree, and left it so little foothold, that the first blast laid it flat on the ground. L'Estrange.
He's at the top: he has nothing above him to aspire to, nor any foothold left him to come down
by. L'Estrange.

FOOTING. n. f. [from foot.]
1. Ground for the foot.
I'll read you matter deep and dangerous;
As full of peril and advent'rous spirit
As to o'erwalk a current roaring loud,
On the unsteadfast footing of a spear. Shak. Hen. VI.
As Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did shew the footing sound, for all the flood. Davies.
In ascents, every step gained is a footing and help to the next. Holder's Elements of Speech.

2. Support; root.
Set cloven stakes; and wond'rous to behold,
Their sharpen'd ends in earth their footing place,
And the dry poles produce a living race. Dryd. Virg.

3. Basis; foundation.
All those sublime thoughts take their rise and footing here: the mind stirs not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered. Locke.

4. Place; possession.
Whether the unctuous exhalations are Fir'd by the sun, or seeming-so alone;
Or each some more remote and slippery star,
Which loses footing when to mortals shewn. Dryden.

5. Tread; walk.
As he forward moved his footing old,
So backward still was turn'd his wrinkled face. Spenser.

6. Dance.
I would outnight you did no body come:
But hark, I hear the footing of a man. Shakespeare.
Break off, break off; I feel the different sound

no better than a fop in a gay coat. L'Estrange.
In a dull stream, which moving slow,
You hardly see the current flow;
When a small breeze obstructs the course;
It whirls about for want of force,
And in its narrow circle gathers
Nothing but chaff, and straws, and feathers:
The current of a female mind
Stops thus, and turns with ev'ry wind;
'Tis whirling round, together draws
Fools, fops, and rakes, for chaff and straws. Swift.

FOPDOODLE. n. f. [fop and doodle.] A

1. Folly; impertinence.
Let not the sound of shallow foppery enter
My sober house. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surpris of my powers, drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters,
the

How quickly nature
Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!
For this the foolish, over-careful fathers,
Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains
with care,

Their bones with industry: for this, engross'd
The canker'd heaps of strong achieved gold:
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises.

For never any man was yet so old;
But hop'd his life one Winter more would hold. Deabam.

Tell me what kind of thing is wit:
For the first matter loves variety less. Cowley.

Thus does he foolishly who, for fear of any thing in this world, ventures to displease God; for in doing he runs away from men, and falls into the hands of the living God. Tillotson.

2. Because; on this account that. It is in this sense properly followed by that, and without it is elliptical. This sense is almost obsolete.

I doubt not but great troops would be ready to run; yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would wish them chosen by discretion of wise men. Spenser on Ireland.

Jealous souls will not be answer'd to:
They are not ever jealous for a cause,
But jealous for they're jealous. Shakespeare. Otello.

Heaven defend your good souls, that you think
I will your serious and great business scant;
For he is with me. Shakespeare's Otello.

Nor swell'd his breast with uncouth pride,
That heav'n on him above his charge had laid;
But, for his great Creator would the same,
His will increas'd; so fire augmenteth flame. Fairfax.

Many excrescences of trees grow chiefly where the tree is dead or faded; for that the natural sap of the tree corrupteth into some preternatural substance. Bacon's Natural History.

3. FOR as much. In regard to that; in consideration of.

For as much as in publick prayer we are not only to consider what is needful, in respect of God; but there is also in men that which we must regard: we somewhat incline to length, lest overquick dispatch should give occasion to deem, that the thing itself is but little accounted of. Hooker.

For as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of spaw water. Arbuth.

4. FOR why. Because; for this reason that.

Solyman had three hundred fieldpieces; for why, Solyman purposing to draw the emperor into battle, had brought no pieces of battery with him. Knolles.

TO FORAGE. v. n. [from foris, abroad, Lat.]

1. To wander far; to rove at a distance. Not in use.

Forage, and run
To meet displeasure farther from the doors,
And grapple with him, ere he come to sight. Shak.

2. To wander in search of spoil, generally of provisions.

As in a stormy night,
Wolves urged by their raging appetite,
Forage for prey. Denham.

There was a brood of young larks in the corn, and the dam went abroad forage for them. L'Espr.

Nor dare they stray
When rain is promis'd or a stormy day;
But near the city walls their warring take,
Nor forage far, but short excursions make. Dryden.

3. To ravage; to feed on spoil.

His most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp Forage in blood of French nobility. Shakespeare.

TO FORAGE. v. a. To plunder; to strip; to spoil.

They will both strengthen all the country round, and also be as continual holds for her majesty; if the people should revolt; for without such it is easy to forage and over-run the whole land. Spenser.

The victorious Philistines were worsted by the captivated ark, which foraged their country more than a conquering army. South.

FORAGE. n. s. [from forage, German and French; from foris, Latin.]

1. Search of provisions; the act of feeding abroad.

One way a band-select from forage drives
A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground; or fleecy flock,
Ewes and their bleating lambs, over the plains
Their booty. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Provisions fought abroad.

Some o'er the publick magazines preside,
And some are sent new forage to provide. Dryden.

3. Provisions in general.

Provided forage, our spent arms renew'd. Dryd.

FORAMINOUS. adj. [from foramen, Latin.]

Full of holes; perforated in many places; porous.

Soft and foraminous bodies, in the first creation of the sound, will deaden it; but in the passage of the sound they will admit it better than harder bodies. Bacon's Natural History.

TO FORBEAR. v. n. pret. I forbare, anciently forbare; part. forborn. [from for, Saxon. for has in composition the power of privation; as, forbear: or depravation; as, forwear, and other powers not easily explained.]

1. To cease from any thing; to intermit.

Who can forbear to admire and adore him who weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance. Cheyne.

2. To pause; to delay.

I pray you, tarry: pause a day or two,
Before you hazard; for in chusing wrong,
I lose your company; therefore forbear a while. Shakespeare.

3. To omit voluntarily; not to do; to abstain.

He forbear to go forth. 1 Sa. xxiii. 13.
At this he started, and forbore to swear;
Not out of conscience of the sin, but fear. Dryden.

The wolf, the lion, and the bear,
When they their prey in pieces tear,
To quarrel with themselves forbear. Denham.

4. To refrain any violence of temper; to be patient.

By long forbearing is a prince persuaded, and a soft tongue breaketh the bone. Prov. xxv. 15.

TO FORBEAR. v. a.

1. To decline; to avoid voluntarily.

Forbear his presence, until time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure. Shakespeare. King Lear.

So angry bulls the combat do forbear,
When from the wood a lion does appear. Waller.

2. To abstain from; to shun to do; to omit.

If it pass'd only by the house of peers, it should be looked upon as invalid and void, and execution should be thereupon forborn or suspended. Clarendon.

There is not any one action whatsoever which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the Scripture will give him a clear precept or prohibition for it. South.

3. To spare; to treat with clemency.

With all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love. Eph. iv. 2.

4. To withhold.

Forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not. 2 Chron. xxv. 21.

FORBEARANCE. n. s. [from forbear.]

1. The care of avoiding or shunning any thing; negation of practice.

True nobleness would Learn him forbearance from to foul a wrong. Shak.
This may convince us how vastly greater a pleasure is consequent upon the forbearance of sin, than can possibly accompany the commission of it. South.

Liberty is the power a man has to do, or forbear doing, any particular action, according as its doing or forbearance has the actual preference in the mind. Locke.

2. Intermission of something.

3. Command of temper.
Have a continent forbearance, 'till the speed of his rage goes slower. Shakespeare. King Lear.

4. Lenity; delay of punishment; mildness.

Nor do I take notice of this instance of severity in our own country to justly such a proceeding, but only to display the mildness and forbearance made use of under the reign of his present Majesty. Addison's Freeholder.

He applies to our gratitude by obligations of kindness and beneficence, of long suffering and forbearance. Rogers.

FORBEARER. n. s. [from forbear.] An intermitter; interceptor of any thing.

The West as a father all goodness doth bring,
The East a forbearer, no manner of thing. Tupper.

TO FORBID. v. a. pret. I forbade; part. forbidden, or forbid. [from for, Saxon; verbieden, Dutch.]

1. To prohibit; to interdict any thing.

A witch, a quean, an old cozening quean; have I not forbid her my house? Shakespeare.

It is
The practice and the purpose of the king,
From whose obedience I forbid my soul. Shakespeare.

By tasting of that fruit forbid,
Where they sought knowledge, they did error find. Davies.

The voice of reason, in all the dictates of natural morality, ought carefully to be attended to, by a strict observance of what it commands, but especially of what it forbids. South.

All hatred of persons, by very many Christian principles, we are most solemnly and indispensably forbid. Sprat.

The chaste and holy race
Are all forbidden this polluted place. Dryd. Æt.

2. To command to forbear any thing.

She with so sweet a rigour forbad him, that he durst not rebel. Sidney.

They have determined to consume all those things that God hath forbidden them to eat by his laws. Judith, xi. 12.

3. To oppose; to hinder.

The moisture being forbidden to come up in the plant, stayeth longer in the root, and so dilateth it. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The plaster alone would pea the humour, and so exasperate it as well as forbid new humour. Bacon.

Thy throne is darkness in th' abyss of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the light!
O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd,
And search no farther than thyself reveal'd. Dryden.

4. To accurse; to blast. Now obsolete.

To bid is in old language to pray; to forbid therefore is to curse.

Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his penthouse lid;
He shall live a man forbid. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

TO FORBID. v. n. To utter a prohibition.

Now the good gods forbid,
That our renowned Rome
Should now eat up her own! Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

FORBIDDANCE. n. s. [from forbid.] Prohibition; edict against any thing.

How hast thou yielded to transgress
The strict forbiddance! how to violate
The sacred fruit forbidden? Milton's Paradise Lost.

FORBIDDENLY. adv. [from forbid.] In an unlawful manner.

With all confidence he swears, as he had seen't,
That you have touch'd his queen forbiddenly. Shak.

FORBIDDER. n. s. [from forbid.] One that prohibits; one that enacts a prohibition.

This was a bold accusation of God, making the fountain of good the contriver of evil, and the forbidder of the crime an abettor of the fact prohibited. Brown.

Other care, perhaps,
May have diverted from continual watch
Our great forbidder! Milton's Paradise Lost.

FORBIDDING. participial adj. [from forbid.]

Raising

Raising abhorrence; repelling approach; causing aversion.

He shall forecast his devices against the strong holds. Dan. xi.

2. To adjust; to contrive antecedently.

The feast was serv'd; the time so well forecast,
That just when the dessert and fruits were plac'd,
The hend's alarm began. Dryd. Tbed. and Honoria.

3. To foresee; to provide against.

It is wisdom to consider the end of things before we embark, and to forecast consequences. L'Estrange.

TO FORECAST. v. n. To form schemes; to contrive beforehand.

And whatso heavens in their secret doom
Ordained have, how can frail fleshy wight
Forecast, but it must needs to issue come? Spenser.

When broad awake, the finds in troublous flit,
Forecasting how his foe he might annoy. Fairy Q.

FORECAST. n. s. [from the verb.] Contrivance beforehand; scheme; plan; antecedent policy.

Alas! that Warwick had no more forecast,
But while he thought to steal the single tea,
The King was slyly finger'd from the deck. Shakesp.

He makes this difference to arise from the forecast and predetermination of the gods. Addison.

The fall, scarce ripen'd into perfect man,
Saw helpless him from whom their life began:

Mem'ry and forecast just returns engage;
That pointed back to youth, this on to age. Pope.

FORECASTER. n. s. [from forecast.] One who contrives beforehand.

TO RECASTLE. n. s. [fore and castle.] In a ship, is that part where the foremast stands, and is divided from the rest of the floor by a bulk-head: that part of the forecastle which is aloft, and not in the hold, is called the pro. Harris.

The commodity of the new cook-room the merchants have found to be so great, as that, in all their ships, the cook-rooms are built in their forecastles, contrary to that which had been anciently used. Raleigh's Essays.

FORECHOSEN. part. [fore and chosen.] Pre-elected.

FORECITED. part. [fore and cite.] Quoted before, or above.

All the steps of the growth and vegetation both of animals and plants, have been foreseen and fore-designed by the wise Author of nature. Cheyne.

TO FOREDO. v. a. [from for and do, not fore.]

1. To ruin; to destroy. A word obsolete.

Opposed to making happy.

Beseeking him, if either selves or oils,
A foredone wight from door of death might raise,
He would at her request prolong her nephew's days. Fairy Queen.

That drew on men God's hatred and his wrath,
And many souls in dolours had foredone. Fairy Q.

This doth betoken

The corse they follow did with desperate hand
Foredo its own life. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

This is the night

That either makes me, or foredoes me quite. Shak.

2. To overdo; to weary; to harass.

Whilst the heavy ploughman snears
All with weary talk foredone. Shakespeare.

TO FOREDOOM. v. a. [fore and doom.] To predestinate; to determine beforehand.

Through various hazards and events we move
To Latium, and the realms foredoom'd by Jove. Dryden's Æn.

The willing metal will obey thy hand,
Following with ease; if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state. Dryden.

Fate foredoom'd, and all things tend
By course of time to their appointed end. Dryden.

Here Britain's statesmen olt the fall foredoom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home. Pope.

FORE-ENO. n. s. [fore and end.] The anterieur part.

I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid
More pious debts to heaven than in all
The fore-end of my time. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

In the fore-end of it, which was towards him, grew a small green branch of palm. Bacon.

FOREFATHER. n. s. [fore and father.] Ancestor; one who in any degree of ascending genealogy precedes another.

The custom of the people of God, and the decrees of our forefathers, are to be kept, touching those things whereof the Scripture hath neither one way or other given us charge. Hooker.

If it be a generous desire in men to know from whence their own forefathers have come, it cannot be displeasing to understand the place of our first ancestor. Raleigh's History.

Conceit is still deriv'd
From some forefather grief; mine is not so. Shaksp.

Shall I not be dittaught,
And madly play with my forefathers joints? Shaksp.

Our great forefathers
Had left him nought to conquer but his country. Addison.

When a man sees the prodigious pains our forefathers have been at in their barbarous buildings, one cannot but fancy what miracles of architecture they would have left us, had they been instructed in the right way. Addison on Italy.

Blest Peer! his great forefathers ev'ry grace
Reflecting, and retic'd in his race. Pope.

TO FOREFEND. v. a. [It is doubtful whether from fore or for and defend. If from fore, it implies antecedent provision; as forearm: if from for prohibitory security; as forbid. Of the two following examples one favours for, and the other fore.]

1. To prohibit; to avert.

I would not kill thy uoprepared spirit;
No, heav'n's forefend! I would not kill thy soul. Shaksp.

Perhaps a fever, which the gods forefend,
May bring your youth to some untimely end. Dryd.

2. To provide for; to secure.

Down with it flat: take the bridge quite away
Of him, that, his particular to forefend,
Smells from the gen'ral weal. Shaksp.

FOREFINGER. n. s. [fore and finger.] The finger next to the thumb; the index.

An agate stone
On the forefinger of an alderman. Shakespeare.

Polymnia shall be drawn, as it were, acting her speech with her forefinger. Peacbam on Drawing.

FOREFOOT. n. s. plur. forefeet. [fore and foot.] The anterieur foot of a quadruped: in contempt, a hand.

Give me thy hft, thy forefoot to me give. Shak.

He ran fiercely, and smote at Heliodorus with his forefeet. 2 Mac. iii. 25.

I continue my line from thence to the heel;
then making the breakfast with the eminency thereof, bring out his neat forefoot, which I finish. Peacbam on Drawing.

TO FOREGO. v. a. [fore and go.]

1. To quit; to give up; to resign.

Is it her nature, or is it her will,
To be so cruel to an humble foe?
If nature, then she may it mend with skill;
If will, then she at will will forego. Spenser.
Having all before absolutely in his power, it remaineth so still, he having already neither forgiven nor foregone any thing thereby unto them, but having received something from them. Spenser.

He is a great adventurer, said he,
That hath his sword through hard essay foregone;
And now hath vowed, till he avenged be
Of that despite, never to wearen a one. Fairy Qy.
Special reason oftentimes causeth the will to prefer one good thing before another; to love one for another's sake, to forego meaner for the attainment of higher degrees. Hooker.

Must I then leave you? Must I needs forego
So good, so noble, and so true a master. Shakespeare.
Let us not forego
That for a trifle which was bought with blood. Shakespeare.

How can I live without thee! how forego
Thy sweet converse, and lore so dearly join'd
To live again in these wild woods forlorn! Milton.
This argument might prevail with you to forego a little of your repose for the publick benefit. Dryden.

What they have enjoyed with great pleasure at one time, has proved insipid or nauseous at another; and therefore they see nothing in it for which they should forego a present enjoyment. Locke.

2. To go before; to be past. [from fore and go.]

By our remembrances of days foregone,
Such were our faults: O! then we thought them not. Shakespeare.

It is to be understood of Cain, that many years foregone and when his paine were increased, he built the city of Enoch. Raleigh.

Reflect upon the two foregoing objections. Boyle.
This foregoing remark gives the reason why imitation pleases. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

I was seated in my elbow-chair, where I had indulged the foregoing speculations. Addison.
In the foregoing part of this work I promised proofs. Woodward.

3. To lose.

This is the very ecstacy of love,
Whose violent property foregoes itself,
And leaves the will to desperate undertakings. Shakespeare.

FOREGOER. n. s. [from forego.] Ancestor; progenitor.

Honours best thrive,
When rather from our acts we them derive Than our foregoers. Shakespeare.

FOREGROUND. n. s. [fore and ground.] The part of the field or expanse of a picture which seems to lie before the figures.

All agree that white can subsist on the foreground of the picture: the question therefore is to know, if it can equally be placed upon that which is backward, the light being universal, and the figures supposed to be in an open field. Dryden.

FOREHAND. n. s. [fore and hand.]

1. The part of a horse which is before the rider.

2. The chief part. Not in use.
The great Achilles whom opinion crowns
The sinew and the forehand of our host. Shakespeare.

FOREHAND. adj. Done sooner than is regular.

You'll say she did embrace me as a husband,
And to extenuate the forehand sin. Shakespeare.

FOREHANDED. n. s. [from fore and hand.]

1. Early; timely.

If by thus doing you have not secured your time by an early and forehanded care, yet be sure, by a timely diligence, to redeem the time. Taylor.

2. Formed in the foreparts.

He's a substantial true-bred beast, bravely forehanded: mark but the cleanness of his shapes too. Dryden.

FOREHEAD. n. s. [fore and head.]

1. That part of the face which reaches from the eyes upward to the hair.

The breast of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead when it spit forth blood
At Grecian swords contending. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
Some angel copy'd, while I slept, each grace,
And moulded ev'ry feature from my face:
Such majesty does from her forehead rise,
Her cheeks such blushes call, such rays her eyes. Dryden.

2. Impudence; confidence; assurance; audaciousness; audacity. The forehead is the part on which shame visibly operates.

A man of confidence prefieth forward upon every appearance of advantage; where his force is too feeble, he prevails by dint of impudence: these men of forehead are magnificent in promises, and infallible in their prescriptions. Collier.

I would fain know to what branch of the legislature they can have the forehead to apply. Swift.

FOREHOLDING. n. s. [fore and hold.]

Predictions; ominous accounts; superstitious prognoscations.

How are superstitious men hagg'd out of their wits with the fancy of omens foreholdings, and old wives tales. L'Esrange.

FOREIGN. adj. [forain, French, forano, Spanish; from foris, Latin.]

1. Not of this country; not domestick.

Your son, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home. Shakespeare.
The learned correspondence you hold in foreign parts. Milton.

The positions are so far from being new, that they are commonly to be met with in both ancient and modern, domestick and foreign writers. Atterbury.

The parties and divisions amongst us may several ways bring destruction upon our country, at the same time that our united force would secure us against all the attempts of a foreign enemy. Addison's Freeb.

2. Alien; remote; not allied; not belonging; without relation. It is often used with to; but more properly with from.

I must dissemble,
And speak a language foreign to my heart. Addison.
Fame is a good to wholly foreign to our natures, that we have no faculty in the soul adapted to it, nor any organ in the body to relish it, placed out of the possibility of fruition. Addison.

This design is not foreign from some peoples thoughts. Swift.

3. Excluded; not admitted; held at a distance.

They will not stick to say you envied him;
And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man still; which so griev'd him,
That he ran mad and died. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

4. [In law.] A foreign plea, placitum forinsecum; as being a plea out of the proper court of justice.

5. Extraneous; adventitious in general.

There are who, fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mould in their ill-natur'd laod Induce. Phillips.

FOREIGNER. n. s. [from foreign.] A man that comes from another country; not a native; a stranger.

Joy is such a foreigner,
So meet a stranger to my thoughts I know
Not how to entertain him. Denham's Sophy.
To this false foreigner you give your throne,
And wrong'd a friend, a kinsman, and a son. Dryden's Ben.

Water is the only native of England made use of in punch; but the lemon, the brandy, the sugar, and the outmags, are all foreigners. Addison.

Nor could the majesty of the English crown appear in a greater lustre, either to foreigners or subjects. Swift.

FOREIGNNESS. n. s. [from foreign.] Remoteness; want of relation to something.

Let not the foreignness of the subject hinder you from endeavouring to set me right.

TO FOREJUDGE. v. a. [fore and judge.] To judge beforehand; to be prepossessed; to prejudice.

TO FOREKNOW. v. a. [fore and know.] To have precedence of; to foresee.

We foreknow that the sun will rise and set, that all men born in the world shall die again; that after Winter the spring shall come; after the Spring, Summer and Harvest; yet is not our foreknowledge the cause of any of those. Raleigh.

He foreknew John should not suffer a violent death, but go into his grave in peace. Brown.
Calchas the sacred seer, who had in view Things present and the past, and things to come foreknew. Dryden's Iliad.

Who would the miseries of man foreknow?
Not knowing, we but share our part of woe. Dryden.

FOREKNOWABLE. adj. [from foreknow.] Possible to be known before they happen.

It is certainly foreknowable what they will do in such and such circumstances. More.

FOREKNOWLEDGE. n. s. [fore and knowledge.] Preference; knowledge of that which has not yet happened.

Our being in Christ by eternal foreknowledge saveth us not without our actual and real adoption into the fellowship of his saints in this present world. Hooker.

I told him you was asleep; he seems to have a foreknowledge of that too, and therefore chuses to speak with you. Shakespeare.

If I foreknew,
Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault,
Which had no less prov'd certain unforeknown. Milton.

I hope the foreknowledge you had of my esteem for you, is the reason that you do not dislike my letters. Pope.

FORELAND. n. s. [fore and land.] A promontory; headland; high land jutting into the sea; a cape.

As when a ship, by skillful steersman wrought,
Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind
Veers oft, as oft it steers, and shifts her sails. Milton?

TO FORELAY. v. a. [fore and lay.]

1. To lay wait for; to intrap by ambush.

A serpent shoots his sting at unaware;
An ambush'd thief forelays a traveller;

Brings every grace triumphant in her train:
The wond'ring Nereids, though they rais'd no storm,
Foreflow'd her passage to behold her form. Dryden.

2. To neglect; to omit

When the rebels were on Blackheath, the king knowing well that it stood him upon, by how much the more he had hitherto protracted the time in not encountering them, by so much the sooner to dispatch with them, that it might appear to have been no coldness in foreflowing, but wisdom in chusing his time, resolved with speed to assail them.

Bacon's Henry VII.

Our good purposes foreflow'd are become our tormentors upon our death-bed. Bishop Hall.

Chremes, how many fishers do you know
That rule their boats and use their nets aright,
That neither wind, nor time, nor tide foreflow;
Some such have been: but, ah! by tempests spite
Their boats are lost; while we may sit and moan
That few were such, and now these few are none.

P. Fletch.

To FORESLOW, v. n. To be dilatory; to loiter.

This may plant courage in their quailing breasts,
For yet is hope of life and victory,

A gentleman, almost forespent with speed. Shak.

2. Forepassed; past. [Fore and spent.]

Is not enough thy evil life forespent? Fairy Q.
You shall find his vanities forespent,
Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly. Shakespeare.

3. Bestowed before.

We must receive him
According to the honour of his sender;
And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us,
We must extend our notice. Shakespeare.

FORESPURRER, n. s. [fore and spur.] One that rides before.

A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how costly Summer was at hand,
As this forespurrer comes before his lord. Shakespeare.

FOREST, n. s. [forest, French; foresta, Italian.]

1. A wild uncultivated tract of ground interspersed with wood.

By many tribulations we enter into the kingdom of heaven, because, in a forest of many wolves, sheep cannot chuse but feed in continual danger of life. Hooker.

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Birnam-wood to Dunsinane's high hill Shall come against him.

—That will never be:

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

There be airs which the physicians advise their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champaigns, but grassy, and not overgrown with heath; or else timber-shades, as in forests. Bacon.
How the first forest rais'd its shady head. Roscom.

2. [In law.] A certain territory of woody grounds and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts, and fowls of forests, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in, in the safe protection of the king for his pleasure. The manner of making forests is this: the king sends out his commission, directed to certain persons, for viewing, perambulating, and bounding the place that he has a mind to afforest: which returned into Chancery, proclamation is made, that none shall hunt any wild bealls within that precinct, without licence; after which he appoints ordinances, laws, and officers for the preservation of the vert and venison; and this becomes a forest by matter of record. The properties of a forest are these: a forest, as it is strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commission to a justice in eyre for the forest; the courts; the officers for preserving the vert and venison, as the justices of the forest, the warden or keeper, the verders, the foresters, agistors, regarders, bailiffs, and beedles. The chief property of a forest is the swainmote, which is no less incident to it than the court of pycpowders to a fair.

Corwel.

To FORESTA'LL, v. a. [foresta, Saxon.]

1. To anticipate; to take up beforehand.

If thou be master-gunner, spend not all
That thou can'st speak at once; but husband it,

As if thou mad'st thy will, Herbert.

What need a man *foresta*ll his date of grief,
And run to meet what he would most avoid. Milt.

2. To hinder by preoccupation or prevention.

And though good luck prolonged hath thy date,
Yet death then would the like mishap *foresta*ll. Fairy Queen.

What's in thy prayer, but this twofold force
To be *foresta*ll'd ere we come to fall.
Or pardon'd being down. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

But for my tears,
I had *foresta*ll'd this dear and deep rebuke,
Ere you with grief had spoke. Shakespeare.

If thou covet death, as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God
Hath wifelier arm'd his vengeful ire, than fo
To be *foresta*ll'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I will not *foresta*ll your judgment of the rest. Pope.

3. To seize or gain possession of before another; to buy before another in order to raise the price.

He bold spake, Sir knight, if knight thou be,

we forgot our danger and our duty. Aterbury.
Alive, ridiculous; and dead, forgot. Pope.

2. Not to attend; to neglect.

Can a woman forget her ſucking child? Yea, they may forget; yet I will not forget thee.

If we might forget ourſelves, or forget God; if we might diſregard our reaſon, and live by humour and fancy in any thing, or at any time, or at any place, it would be as lawful to do the ſame in every thing,
at every time, and every place. Law.
The maſs of mean forgotten things. Anon.

FORGETFUL. adj. [from forget.]

1. Not retaining the memory of.

2. Cauſing oblivion; oblivious.

But when a thouſand rolling years are paſt,
So long their puniſhments and penance laſt,
Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
Compell'd to drink the deep Lethæan flood,
In large forgetful draughts to keep the cares
Of their paſt labours, and their irkſome years. Dryd. Æn.

3. Inattentive; negligent; neglectful; careleſs.

Be not forgetful to entertain ſtrangers. Heb. xiii. 2.
The Queen is comortleſs, and we forgetful

When that raſh humour, which my mother gave me, Makes me forgetful? Shakeſp. Julius Cæſar.
I, in fact, a real intereſt have,
Which to my own advantage I would ſave;
And, with the uſual courtier's trick, intend
To ſerve myſelf, forgetful of my friend. Prior.

FORGETFULNESS. n. f. [from forgetful.]

1. Oblivion; ceſſation to remember; loſs of memory.

O gentle ſleep!
Nature's ſoft nurſe, how have I frighted thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,
And ſteep my ſenſes in forgetfulneſs! Shakeſp.
All birds and beaſts be huth'd; ſteep ſteals away
The wild deſires of men and toils of day;
And brings, deſcending, through the ſilent air,
A ſweet forgetfulneſs of human care. Pope's Statius.

2. Negligence; neglect; inattention.

The church of England is grievouſly charged with forgetfulneſs of her duty. Hooker.

FORGETIVE. adj. [from forge.] That may forge or produce. A word, I believe, peculiar to Shakeſpeare.

Good ſterrie ſack aſcends me into the brain, dries me there all the fooliſh, dull vapours, makes it ap-prehenſive, quick, forgettive, full of nimble ſhapes, which, delivered to the voice, becomes excellent wit.
Shakeſpeare.

FORGETTER. n. f. [from forget.]

1. One that forgets.

2. A careleſs perſon.

TO FORGIVE. v. a. [forzytan, Saxon.]

1. To pardon a perſon; not to puniſh.

Thén heaven forgive him too! Shakeſpeare.
I do beſeech your grace for charity;
If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid againſt me, now forgive me frankly.

FOR

Sir Thomas Lovell, I aſ free forgive you,
As I would be forgiven: I forgive all. Shakeſp.
Slowly provok'd, the eaſily forgives. Prior.

2. To pardon a crime.

The people that dwell therein ſhall be forgiven their iniquity. If. xxxiii. 24.

If prayers

Could alter high decrees, I to that place
Would ſpeed before thee, and be louder heard,
That on my head all might be viſited,
Thy frailty and infirmer ſex forgiven,
To me committed, and by me expoſ'd. Milton.

3. To remit; not to exact debt or penalty.

The lord of that ſervant was moved with com-paſſion, looſed him, and forgave him the debt.
Mat. xviii. 27.

Or is thy baggage broke, that ſounds fo ſweet?
Or art thou of thy loved laſ forlorn? Spencer.
In every place was heard the lamentation of women and children; every thing ſhewed the heavineſs of the time, and ſeemed as altogether loſt and forlorn.
Knolles's Hiſtory.

How can I live without thee! how forego
Thy ſweet converſe, and love fo dearly join'd,
To live again in theſe wild woods forlorn! Milton.

Their way
Lies through the perplex'd paths of this drear wood;
The nodding horror of whoſe ſhady brows,
'Threat the forlorn and wand'ring paſſenger. Milton.
My only ſtrength and ſtay! forlorn of thee,
Whither ſhall I betake me, where ſubſiſt! Milton.
Like a declining ſtateſman, left forlorn
'To hiſ friends pity and purſuers ſcorn'. Denham.
The good old man, forlorn of human aid,
For vengeance to hiſ heavenly patron pray'd. Dryden.

Philomel laments forlorn.
As ſome ſad turtle hiſ loſt love deſpores,
Thus, far from Delia, to the winds I mourn;
Alike unheard, unpiy'd, and forlorn. Pope.

2. Taken away. This ſenſe ſhews that it is the participle of an active verb, now loſt,

When

When as night hath us of light forlorn,
I wish that day would shortly reascend. Spenser.
What is become of great Acrates' son!
Or where hath he hung up his mortal blade,
That hath so many haughty conquests won?
Is all his force forlorn, and all his Glory done?

3. Small; despicable; in a ludicrous sense.
He was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick fight were invincible. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
FORLORN. n. f.

1. A lost, solitary, forsaken man,
Henry
Is of a king become a banish'd man,
And forc'd to live in Scotland a forlorn. Shakespeare.
2. FORLORN Hope. The soldiers who are sent first to the attack, and are therefore doomed to perish.

Criticks in plume,
Who lolling on our foremost benches sit,
And still charge first, the true forlorn of wit. Dryden.
FORLORNNESS. n. f. [from ferlorn.] Destitution; misery; solitude.

Men displeas'd God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness; even whilst they compleated the forlornness of their condition by the lethargy of not being sensible of it. Boyle.

To FORLY'E, v. n. [from fore and lye.] To lye before.

Knit with a golden baldrick, which forlay
Athwart her snowy breast, and did divide
Her dainty paps, which, like young fruit in May,
Now little 'gan to swell; and being ty'd
Through her thin weed, their places only signify'd.
Fa. Qu.

FORM. n. f. [forma, Latin; forme, Fr.]

1. The external appearance of any thing; representation; shape.

Nay, women are frail too,
—Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves,
Which are as easy broke as they make forms. Shak.
It stood still; but I could not discern the form thereof. Job.

Gold will endure a vehement fire, without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts; yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its form. Grew's Cosmol. Sac.

Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no rift. Swift.

2. Being, as modified by a particular shape.
When noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair. Shakespeare's H. VIII.
Here toils and death, and death's half-brother,
sleep,

Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep;
With anxious pleasures of a guilty mind,
Deep frauds before, and open force behind. Dryden.

3. Particular model or modification.
He that will look into many parts of Asia and America will find men reason there perhaps as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism, nor can reduce any one argument to those forms. Locke.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words that are uttered in the ordinary method of religious worship. Addison.

4. Beauty; elegance of appearance.
He hath no form nor comeliness. Isa. liii. 2.

5. Regularity; method; order.
What he spoke, though it lack'd form a little,
Was not like madness. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

6. External appearance without the essential qualities; empty show.
Then those whom form of laws
Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause.
Dryden.
They were young heirs sent only for form from schools, where they were not suffer'd to stay three months. Swift.

7. Ceremony; external rites.

Though well we may not pass upon his life,
Without the form of justice; yet our pow'r
Shall do a court'ry to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not controul. Shakespeare. King Lear.

A long table, and a square table, or a seat about the walls, seem things of form, but are things of substance; for at a long table, a few at the upper end, in effect, sway all the business; but in the other form, there is more use of the counsellors opinions that fit lower. Bacon's Essays.

That the parliaments of Ireland might want no decent or honourable form used in England, he caus'd a particular act to pass, that the lords of Ireland should appear in parliament robes. Davies.

Their general used, in all dispatches made by himself, to observe all decency in their forms. Clarend.
How am I to interpret, sir, this visit?
Is it a compliment of form, or love?
A Pbil. Diss. Motb.

8. Stated method; established practice; rittual and prescribed mode.

He who assermeth speech to be necessary amongst all men, throughout the world, doth not thereby import that all men must necessarily speak one kind of language; even so the necessity of polity and regimen in all churches may be held, without holding any one certain form to be necessary in them all.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flatter and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

Nor seek to know
Their process, or the forms of law below. Dryden.

9. A long seat.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back; and a form is a seat for several persons, without a back. Watts.

I was seen with her in the manorhouse, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park. Shakespeare.

10. A class; a rank of students.

It will be necessary to see and examine those works which have given so great a reputation to the masters of the first form. Dryden.

11. The feat or bed of a hare.

Now for a clod like hare in form thy peer:
Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move;
Now the ambitious lark, with mirror clear,
They catch, while he, fool to himself makes love.
Sidney.

Have you observ'd a fitting hare,
Lift'ning, and fearful of the storm
Of horns and hounds, clap back her ear,
Afraid to keep or leave her form. Prior.

12. Form is the essential, specifical, or distinguishing modification of the matter of which any thing is composed, so as thereby to give it such a peculiar manner of existence. Harris.

In definitions, whether they be framed larger to augment, or stricter to abridge the number of sacraments, we find grace expressly mentioned as their true essential form, and elements as the matter whereunto that form did adjoin itself. Hooker.

13. A formal cause; that which gives essence.

They inferred, if the world were a living creature, it had a soul and spirit, by which they did not intend God, for they did admit of a deity besides, but only the soul or essential form of the universe.
Bacon's Natural History.

To FORM. v. a. [formo, Latin.]

1. To make out of materials.
God formed man of the dust of the ground.
Gen. ii. 7.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit molds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then, what might else be wrought
Fust, or grav'n in metal. Milton.

Determin'd to advance into our room
A creature form'd of earth. Milton.

She form'd the phantom of well-bodied air. Pope.

2. To model to a particular shape or state.
Creature in whom excell'd
Whatever can to fight or thought be form'd,
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet. Milton.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below, while thou to foresight wak'st;
As once thou sleep'st, while she to life was form'd.
Milton.

3. To modify; to scheme; to plan.
Lucretius taught him not to form his heroes, to give him piety or valour for his manners. Dryden.

4. To arrange; to combine in any particular manner; as, he formed his troops.

5. To adjust; to settle.
Our differences with the Romanists are thus form'd into an interest, and become the design not of single persons, but of corporations and successions.
Decay of Piety.

6. To contrive; to coin.
The defeat of the design is the routing of opinions
form'd for promoting it. Decay of Piety.
He dies too soon;
And fate, if possible, must be delay'd:
The thought that labours in my forming brain,
Yet crude and immature, demands more time. Rosier.

7. To model by education or institution.
Let him to this with easy pains be brought,
And seem to labour when he labours not:
Thus form'd for speed, he challenges the wind,
And leaves the Scythian atrow far behind. Dryden.

FORMAL. adj. [formel, French; formalis,
Latin.]

1. Ceremonious; solemn; precise; exact to affectation.
The justice,
In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances
And so he plays his part. Shakespeare. As you like It.
Formal in apparel,
In gait and countenance surely like a father.
Shakespeare.

Ceremonies be not to be omitted to strangers and formal natures; but the exalting them above the mean is not only tedious, but doth diminish the credit of him that speaks. Bacon.

2. Done according to established rules and methods; not irregular; not sudden; not extemporaneous.
There is not any positive law of men, whether it be general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation, as in customs it cometh to pass, but may be taken away, if occasion serve. Hooker.

As there are formal and written leagues, respective to certain enemies; so there is a natural and tacit confederation amongst all men against the common enemies of human society, so as there needs no intimation or denunciation of the war; but all these formalities the law of nature supplies, as in the case of pirates. Bacon.

3. Regular; methodical.
The formal stars do travel so,
As we their names and courses know;
And he that on their changes looks,
Would think them govern'd by our books. Waller.

4. External; having the appearance but not the essence.
Of formal duty, make no more thy boast;
Thou disobey'st where it concerns me most. Dryden.

5. Depending upon establishment or custom.
Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
Or bound in formal or in real chains. Pope.

6. Having the power of making any thing what it is; constituent; essential.
Of letters the material part is breath and voice:
The formal is constituted by the motions and figure of the organs of speech affecting breath with a peculiar sound, by which each letter is discriminated.
Holder's Elements of Speech.

Bellarmino agrees in making the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superior; but withal he

he makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it: whereas mere excellency, without superiority, doth not require any subjection, but only esteem. Stillington.

The very life and vital motion, and the formal essence and nature of man, is wholly owing to the power of God. Bentley.

7. Retaining its proper and essential characteristic; regular; proper.

Thou shou'dst come like a fury cover'd with snakes, Not like a formal man. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

I will not let him stir,
'Till I have us'd th' approved means I have;
With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again. Shakespeare.

FORMALIST. n. f. [formaliste, French; from form.] One who practises external ceremony; one who prefers appearance to reality; one who seems what he is not.

It is a ridiculous thing, and fit for a satyr to persons of judgment, to see what shifts formalists have, and what prospectives to make superficiality seem a body that hath depth and bulk. Bacon.

A grave, staunch, skillfully managed face, set upon a grasping aspiring mien, having got many a formal reputation of a primitive and severe piety. South.

FORMALITY. n. f. [formalié, French; from form.]

1. Ceremony; established mode of behaviour.

The attire, which the minister of God is by order to use at times of divine service, is but a matter of mere formality, yet such as for comeliness sake hath hitherto been judged not unnecessary. Hooker.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than in desperate designs. King Charles.

Many a worthy man sacrifices his peace to formalities of compliment and good manners. L'Estré.

Nor was his attendance on divine offices a matter of formality and custom, but of conscience. Atterbury.

2. Solemn order, method, mode, habit, or dress.

If men forswear the deeds and bonds they draw,
Though sign'd with all formality of law;
And though the signing and the seal proclaim
The barefac'd perjury, and fix the shame. Dryden.

The pretender would have infallibly landed in our northern parts, and found them all fat down in their formalities, as the Gauls did the Roman senators. Swift.

3. External appearance.

To fix on God the formality of faculties, or affections, is the impotence of our fancies, and contradictory to his divinity. Glanville's Sceptic.

4. Essence; the quality by which any thing is what it is.

May not a man vow to A. and B. that he will give a hundred pounds to an hospital? Here the vow is made both to God and to A. and B. But here A. and B. are only witnesses to the vow; but the formality of the vow lies in the promise made to God. Stillington.

TO FORMALIZE. v. a. [formalizer, French; from formal.]

1. To model; to modify. A word not now in use.

The same spirit which anointed the blessed soul of our Saviour Christ, doth so formalize, unite, and actuate his whole race, as if both he and they were so many limbs compacted into one body. Hooker.

2. To affect formality; to be fond of ceremony.

FORMALLY. adv. [from formal.]

1. According to established rules, methods, ceremonies or rites.

Formally according to our law,
Depose him. Shakespeare's Richard III.

2. Ceremoniously; stiffly; precisely.

To be stiff and formally reserved, as if the company did not deserve our familiarity, is a downright challenge of homage. Collier on Pride.

Vol. I.

3. In open appearance; in a visible and apparent state.

You and your followers do stand formally divided against the authorized guides of the church, and the rest of the people. Hooker.

4. Essentially; characteristically.

This power and dominion is not adequately and formally the Image of God, but only a part of it. South.

The Heathens and the Christians may agree in material acts of charity; but that which formally makes this a Christian grace, is the spring from which it flows. Smalridge.

FORMATION. n. f. [formation, French; from formo; Lat.]

1. The act of forming or generating.

The matter discharged forth of volcano's, and other spiracles, contributes to the formation of meteors. Woodward.

The solids are originally formed of a fluid, from a small point, as appears by the gradual formation of a fetus. Arbutnot.

Complicated ideas, growing up under observation, give not the same confusion, as if they were all offered to the mind at once, without your observing the original and formation of them. Watts.

2. The manner in which a thing is formed.

The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth tear asunder. Brown.

FORMATIVE. adj. [from formo, Latin.]

Having the power of giving form; plastic.

As we have established our assertion of the seminal production of all kinds of animals; so likewise we affirm, that the meanest plant cannot be raised without seed, by any formative power residing in the soil. Bentley's Sermons.

FORMER. n. f. [from form.] He that forms; maker; contriver; planner.

The wonderful art and providence of the contriver and former of our bodies, appears in the multitude of intentions he must have in the formation of several parts for several uses. Ray on the Creation.

FORMER. [adj. [from forma, Saxon, first; whence former, and formost, now commonly written foremost, as if derived from before. Foremost is generally applied to place, rank, or degree, and former only to time; for when we say the last rank of the procession is like the former, we respect time rather than place, and mean that which he saw before, rather than that which had precedence in place.]

1. Before another in time,

Thy air,
Thou other gold bound brow, is like the first:
—A third is like the former. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. Mentioned before another.

A bad author deserves better usage than a bad critic: a man may be the former merely through the misfortune of an ill judgment; but he cannot be the latter without both that and an ill temper. Pope.

3. Past: as this was the custom in former times.

The present point of time is all thou halt,
The future doubtful, and the former past. Harte.

FORMERLY. adv. [from former.] In times past.

The places were all of them formerly the cool retirements of the Romans, where they used to hide themselves among the woods and mountains, during the excessive heats of their Summer. Addison.

As an animal degenerates by diseases, the animal falls, formerly benign, approach towards an alkaline nature. Arbutnot.

FORMIDABLE. adj. [formidabilis, Latin; formidable, French.] Terrible; dreadful; tremendous; terrific; to be feared.

I swell my preface into a volume, and make it formidable, when you see so many pages behind. Dryden's Agn. Dedication.

They seem'd to fear the formidable fight,
And roll'd their billows on, to speed his flight. Dryden.

FORMIDABLENESS. n. f. [from formidable.]

1. The quality of exciting terror or dread.

2. The thing causing dread.

They rather chuse to be shew'd the formidableness of their danger, than by a blind embracing it, to perish. Decay of Piety.

FORMIDABLY. adv. [from formidable.] In a terrible manner.

Behold! e'en to remoter shores,
A conquering navy proudly spread;
The British cannon formidably roars. Dryden.

FORMLESS. adj. [from form.] Shapeless; without regularity of form.

All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England's love. Shakespeare.

FORMULARY. n. f. [formulaire, French; from formule.] A book containing stated and prescribed models or set forms.

FORMULARY. adj. Ritual; prescribed; stated.

FORMULE. n. f. [formule, French; formula, Latin.] A set or prescribed model.

FORNICATE. v. a. [from fornix, Latin.] To commit lewdness.

It is a new way to fornicate at a distance. Brown.

FORNICATION. n. f. [fornication, French; fornicatio, Latin.]

1. Concubinage or commerce with an unmarried woman.

Bless me! what a fry of fornication is at the door. Shakespeare.

The law ought to be strict against fornications and adulteries; for, if there were universal liberty, the increase of mankind would be but like that of foxes at best. Graunt.

2. In Scripture, sometimes idolatry.

Thou didst trust in thine own beauty, thou playedst the harlot, because of thy renown, and pouredst out thy fornications on every one that passed by. Ezek. xvi. 15.

FORNICATOR. n. f. [fornicateur, French; from fornix, Lat.] One that has commerce with unmarried women.

A fornicator or adulterer steals the soul, as well as dishonours the body of his neighbour. Taylor.

FORNICATRESS. n. f. [from fornicator.] A woman who without marriage cohabits with a man.

See you the fornicatress be remov'd;
Let her have needful but not slavish means. Shakespeare.

TO FORSAKE. v. a. preter. forsook; part. pass. forsook, or forsoaken. [versaaen, Dut.]

1. To leave in resentment, neglect, or dislike.

'Twas now the time when first Saul God forsook,
God Saul; the room in's heart wild passions took. Cowley.

Orestes comes in time
To save your honour: Pyrrhus cools apace;
Prevent his fallhood, and forsake him first:
I know you hate him. A. Philips's Distress Mother.

Daughter of Jove, whose arms in thunder wield
Th' avenging bolt, and shake the dreadful shield,
Forsook by thee, in vain I sought thy aid. Pope.

2. To leave; to go away from; to depart from.

Unwilling I forsook your friendly state,
Commanded by the gods, and forc'd by fate. Dryden.

3. To desert; to fail.

Truth, modesty, and shame the world forsook;
Fraud, avarice, and force their places took. Dryden.

When ev'n the flying sails were seen no more,
Forsoaken of all sight the left the shore. Dryden.

Their purple majesty,
And all those outward shows which we call greatness,
Languish and droop, seem empty and forsoaken,
And draw the wond'ring gazers eyes no more. Rowe.

FORSAKER. n. f. [from forsoake.] Deserter; one that forsakes.

Thou didst deliver us into the hands of lawless enemies, most hateful forfakers of God. Apocrypha.
FORSOOTH. adv. [fɔrsuð, Saxon.]

1. In truth; certainly; very well. It is used almost always in an ironical or contemptuous sense.

Wherefore doth Lyfander
 Drey your love, so rich within his soul,
 And tender me, forsooth, affection! Shakespeare.
 A fit man forsooth to govern a realm, who had so goodly government in his own estate. Hayward.
 Unlearned persons use such letters as juttly express the power or found of their speech; yet for- sooth, we say, write not true English, or true French.
Holder on Speech.

In the East Indies a widow, who has any regard to her character, throws herself into the flames of her husband's funeral pile, to shew, forsooth, that she is faithful to the memory of her deceased lord.
Addison's Freeholder.

She would cry out murder, and disturb the whole neighbourhood; and when John came running down the stairs to enquire what the matter was, nothing, forsooth, only her maid had stuck a pin wrong in her gown. Arbut. Hist. of John Bull.

Some question the genuineness of his books, because, forsooth, they cannot discover in them that fumen orationis that Cicero speaks of. Baker.

2. It is supposed once to have been a word of honour in address to women. It is probable that an inferior, being called, shewed his attention by answering in the word yes, forsooth, which in time lost its true meaning; and instead of a mere exclamatory interjection, was supposed a compellation. It appears in Shakespeare to have been used likewise to men.

Our old English word forsooth has been changed for the French madam. Guardian.

TO FORSWEAR. v. a. pret. forfswore :
 part forfsworn. [fɔrsweʁn, Saxon.]

1. To renounce upon oath.

I firmly vow
 Never to woo: her more; but do forfswear her,
 As one unworthy all the former favours
 That I have fondly flatter'd her withal. Shakespeare.

2. To deny upon oath.

And that self chain about his neck,
 Which he forfswore most monstrously to have. Shak.
 Observe the wretch who hath his faith forsook,
 How clear his voice, and how assur'd his look!
 Like innocence, and as serenely bold
 As truth, how loudly he forfswears thy gold!
Dryd. Juv.

3. With the reciprocal pronoun: as, to for- swear himself to be perjured; and to swear falsely.

To leave my Julia, shall I be forfsworn?
 To leave fair Sylvia, shall I be forfsworn?
 To wrong my friend, shall I be much forfsworn?
 And ev'n that power which gave me hat my oath,
 Provokes me to this threefold perjury. Shakespeare.
 One says, he never should endure the sight
 Of that forfsworn, that wrongs both lands and laws.
Daniel.

I too have sworn, ev'n at the altar sworn,
 Eternal love and endless faith to Thebes;
 And yet I'm false, forfsworn: the hallow'd shrine,
 That heard me swear, is witness to my falsehood.
Smith.

TO FORSWEAR. v. n. To swear falsely;
 to commit perjury.

Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,
 To hurl upon their heads that break his law.
 —And that same vengeance doth hurl on thee,
 For false forfswearing, and for murder too. Shakespeare.

FORSWEARER. n. s. [from forfswear.] One who is perjured.

FORT. n. s. [fort, French.] A fortified house; a castle.

They erected a fort, which they called the fort de Por; and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest. Bacon.

Now to their fort they are about to send
 For the loud engines which their ill defend. Waller.
 He that views a fort to take it.
 Plants his artillery 'gainst the weakest part. Denham.
 My fury does, like jealous forts pursue
 With death ev'n strangers who but come to view.
Dryden.

FORTED. adj. [from fort.] Furnished or guarded by forts. Not used now.

Your desert speaks loud, and I should wrong
 To lock it in the wards of covert bosom,
 When it deserves with characters of brass
 A forted residence, 'gainst the tooth of time
 And rasure of oblivion. Shak. Measure for Measure.

FORTH. adv. [fɔrð, Saxon; whence further and furthest.]

1. Forward; onward in time.

From that day forth I lov'd that face divine;
 From that day forth I cast in careful mind
 To seek her out. Fairy Queen.

2. Forward in place or order.

Look at the second admonition, and so forth, where they speak in most unchristian manner.
Whigiste.

Mad Pandarus steps forth, with vengeance vow'd
 For Bitias' death. Dryden's Æn.

3. Abroad; out of doors.

Uncle, I must come forth. Shakespeare. Othello.
 I have no mind of sealing forth to-night. Shakespeare.
 Attend you here the door of our stern daughter?
 Will she not forth? Shakespeare.

When Winter past, and Summer scarce begun,
 Invites them forth to labour in the sun. Dryden.

4. Out away; beyond the boundary of any place.

They will privily relieve their friends that are forth; they will send the enemy secret advertisements; and they will not also stick to draw the enemy
 privily upon them. Spenser.

Ev'n that sunshine brew'd a show'r for him,
 That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France.
Shakespeare.

5. Out into a public character; publick view.

You may set forth the same with farmhouses.
Peacham.

But when your troubled country call'd you forth,
 Your flaming courage, and your matchless worth,
 To fierce contention gave a prosp'rous end. Waller.

6. Thoroughly; from beginning to end.

Out of use,
 You, cousin,
 Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
 Do with your injuries as seems you best. Shakespeare.

7. To a certain degree. Obsolete.

Hence we learn, how far forth we may expect justification and salvation from the sufferings of Christ; no further than we are wrought on by his renewing grace. Hammond.

8. On to the end. Out of use.

I repeated the Ave-Maria: the inquisitor bad me say forth; I said I was taught no more.
Memoir in Strype.

FORTH. prep. Out of.

And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
 From forth the streets of Pompeet. Shakespeare.

Some forth their cabbins peep,
 And trembling ask what news, and do hear so
 As jealous husbands, what they would not know.
Donne.

FORTHCOMING. adj. [forth and coming.]

Ready to appear; not absconding; not lost.

Carry this mad knave to jail: I charge you see that he be forthcoming. Shak. Taming of a Shrew.
 We'll see your trinkets here forthcoming all.
Shakespeare. Henry VI.

mediately; without delay; at once;
 straight.

Forthwith he runs, with feigned faithful haste,
 Unto his guest; who, after troublous fights
 And dreams, 'gan now to take more sound repast.
Spenser.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate. Hooker.

Neither did the martial men dally or prosecute the service faintly, but did forthwith quench that fire. Davies on Ireland.

Forthwith began these fury-moving sounds,
 The notes of wrath, the music brought from hell,
 The rattling drums. Daniel's Civil War.

The winged heralds, by command
 Of sov'reign pow'r throughout the host proclaim
 A solemn council forthwith to be held At Pandæmonium. Milton's Paradise Lost.

In his passage thither one put into his hand a note of the whole conspiracy, desiring him to read it forthwith, and to remember the giver of it as long as he lived. Saush.

FORTIETH. adj. [from forty.] The fourth tenth; next after the thirty-ninth.

What doth it avail
 To be the fortieth man in an entail? Donne.

Burnet says, Scotland is not above a fortieth part in value to the rest of Britain; and, with respect to the profit that England gains from thence, not the forty thousandth part. Swift.

FORTIFIABLE. adj. [from fortify.] What may be fortified.

FORTIFICATION. n. s. [fortification, French;
 from fortify.]

1. The science of military architecture.

Fortification is an art shewing how to fortify a place with ramparts, parapets, moats, and other bulwarks; to the end that a small number of men within may be able to defend themselves, for a considerable time, against the assaults of a numerous army without; so that the enemy, in attacking them, must of necessity suffer great loss. It is either regular or irregular; and, with respect to time, may be distinguished into durable and temporary.
Harris.

The Phenicians, though an unwartlike nation, yet understood the art of fortification. Broome.

2. A place built for strength.

The hounds were uncoupled, and the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.

Excellent devices were used to make even their sports profitable; images, battles, and fortifications being then delivered to their memory, which, after stronger judgements, might dispense some advantage.
Sidney.

3. Addition of strength. Not much used.

To strengthen the infested parts, give some few advices by way of fortification and antidote.
Government of the Tongue.

FORTIFIER. n. s. [from fortify.]

1. One who erects works for defence.

The fortifier of Pendennis made his advantage of the commodity offered by the ground. Carew.

2. One who supports or secures; one who upholds.

He was led forth by many armed men, who often had had been the fortifiers of wickedness, to the place of execution. Sidney.

TO FORTIFY. v. a. [fortifier, French.]

1. To strengthen again attacks by walls or works.

Great Dunfinane he strongly fortified. Shakespeare.
He fortified the city against besieging. Eccles. l. 4.

2. To confirm; to encourage.

It greatly fortified her desires, to see that her mother had the like desires. Sidney.

To fortify the former opinions Tostatus adds, that those which dwell near the falls of water are deaf from their infancy; but this I hold as feigned. Raleigh.

3. To fix; to establish in resolution.

But in-born worth that fortune can controul,
New-strung and stiffer bent her foster soul:
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryden.

A young man, before he leaves the shelter of his father's house, should be fortified with resolution to secure his virtues. Locke.

TO FORTIFY. v. n. To raise strong places.

Thou us impower'd
To fortify thus far and overlay
With this portentous bridge the dark abyss. Milton.

FORTILAGE. n. s. [from fort.] A little fort; a blockhouse.

Yet was the fence thereof but weak and thin
Nought fear'd their force that fortilage to win. Spenser.

In all straits and narrow passages there should be some little fortilage, or wooden castle set, which would keep and command the straight. Spenser.

FORTIN. n. s. [French.] A little fort raised to defend a camp, particularly in a siege. Hanmer.

Thou hast talk'd
Of Palifadoes, fortins, parapets. Shakespeare.

FORTITUDE. n. s. [fortitudo, Latin.]

1. Courage; bravery; magnanimity; greatness of mind; power of acting or suffering well.

The king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no reliſh of them. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The better fortitude

Of patience, and heroic martyrdom Unſung. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Fortitude is the guard and support of the other virtues; and without courage, a man will scarce keep steady to his duty and fill up the character of a truly worthy man. Locke.

They thought it reasonable to do all possible honour to the memories of martyrs; partly that others might be encouraged to the same patience and fortitude, and partly that virtue, even in this world, might not lose its reward. Nelson.

2. Strength; force. Not in use.

He wrongs his fame,
Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches and the help of Hell! Shakespeare.

FORTLET. n. s. [from fort.] A little fort.

FORTNIGHT. n. s. [contracted from fourteen nights, peoppezyne night, Saxon. It was the custom of the ancient northern nations to count time by nights; thus we say, this day seven-night. So Tacitus, Non dierum numerum, ut nos, sed noctium computant.] The space of two weeks.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late, that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney.

Hanging on a deep well, somewhat above the water, for some fortnight's space, is an excellent means of making drunk fresh and quick. Baron.

About a fortnight before I had finished it, his majesty's declaration for liberty of conscience came abroad. Dryden.

He often had it in his head but never, with much apprehension, 'till about a fortnight before. Swift.

FORTRESS. n. s. [fortresse, French.] A strong hold; a fortified place; a castle of defence.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest he over-ran all, breaking down all the holds and fortresses.

The trump of death sounds in their hearing shrill;
Their weapon, faith; their fortress was the grave. Fairfax.

God is our fortress, in whose conqu'ring name
Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks. Shakespeare.

There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round about with legions of obscure and undefined words; which yet makes these retreats more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.

FORTUITOUS. adj. [fortuit, French; fortuitus, Lat.] Accidental; casual; happening by chance.

A wonder it must be, that there should be any man found so stupid as to persuade himself that this most beautiful world could be produced by the fortuitous concurrence of atoms. Ray.

If casual concurrence did the world compose,
And things and acts fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring. Blackmore.

FORTUITOUSLY. adv. [from fortuitous.] Accidentally; casually; by chance.

It is partly evaporated into air, and partly diluted into water, and fortuitously shared between all the elements. Rogers.

FORTUNATE. adj. [fortunatus, Latin.] Lucky; happy; successful; not subject to miscarriage. Used of persons or actions.

I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home, Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
He sigh'd; and could not but their fate deplore,
So wretched now, so fortunate before. Dryden.

No, there is a necessity in fate
Why still the brave bold man is fortunate;
He keeps his object ever full in sight,
And that assurance holds him firm and right:
True, 'tis a narrow path that leads to bliss,
But right before there is no precipice;
Fear makes them look aside, and so their footing
miss. Dryden.

FORTUNATELY. adv. [from fortunate.] Happily; successfully.

Bright Eliza rul'd Britannia's state,
And boldly, wise, and fortunately great. Prior.

FORTUNATENESS. n. s. [from fortunate.] Happiness; good luck; success.

O me, said she, whose greatest fortunateness is more unfortunate than my sisters greatest unfortunateness. Sidney.

FORTUNE. n. s. [fortuna, Latin; fortune, French.]

1. The power supposed to distribute the lots of life according to her own humour.

Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to the poor. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel. Shakespeare.

2. The good or ill that befalls man.

Rejoice, said he, to-day
In you the fortune of Great Britain lies:
Among so brave a people you are they Whom heav'n has chose to fight for such a prize. Dryden.

The adequate meaning of chance, as distinguished from fortune, in that the latter is understood to befall only rational agents, but chance to be among inanimate bodies. Bentley.

3. The chance of life; means of living.
His father dying, he was driven to London to seek his fortune. Swift.

4. Success, good or bad; event.

No, he shall eat, and die with me, or live;

Our equal crimes, shall equal fortune give. Dryden.

5. Estate; possessions.

If thou do'st,
And this instructs thee, thou do'st make thy way
To noble fortunes. Shakespeare's King Lear.

That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh
To raise my fortunes. Shakespeare's King Lear.

But tell me, Tityrus, what heav'nly power
Preserv'd your fortunes in that fatal hour? Dryden.

The fate which governs poets, thought it fit
He should not raise his fortunes by his wit. Dryden.
He was younger son to a gentleman of a good birth, but small fortune. Swift.

6. The portion of a man or woman: generally of a woman.

I am thought some heiress rich in lands,
Fled to escape a cruel guardian's hands;
Which may produce a story worth the telling,
Of the next sparks that go a fortune stealing. Prolog. to Cyprian.

The fortune hunters have already cast their eyes upon her, and take care to plant themselves in her view. Spectator.

When miss delights in her spinnet,
A sidler may a fortune get. Swift.

7. Futurity; future events.

You who men's fortunes in their faces read,
To find out mine, look not, alas, on me:
But mark her face, and all the features heed;
For only there is writ my destiny. Cowley's Mistress.

TO FORTUNE. v. n. [from the noun.] To befall; to fall out; to happen; to come casually to pass.

It fortuned, as fair it then beſel
Behind his back, unweeting, where he stood,
Of ancient time there was a springing well,
From which fast trickled forth a silver flood. Fairy Queen.

It fortuned, the same night that a Christian, serving a Turk in the camp, secretly gave the watchmen warning. Knolles.

I'll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder what hath fortun'd. Shakespeare.

On whose fair revolutions wait
The obsequious motions of love's fate. Craſhaw.

FORTUNEHUNTER. n. s. [fortune and hunt.] A man whose employment is to enquire after women with great portions, to enrich himself by marrying them.

We must, however, distinguish between fortune-hunters and fortune-stealers. Spectator.

TO FORTUNETELL. v. n. [fortune and tell.] To pretend to the power of revealing futurity.

We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling. Shakespeare.

I'll conjure you, I'll fortunetell you. Shakespeare.
The gypsies were to divide the money got by stealing linen, or by fortunetelling. Walton's Angler.

2. To reveal futurity.

Here, while his caunting drone-pipe scan'd
The mystick figures of her hand,
He tipples palmistry, and dines
On all her fortunetelling lines. Cleveland.

FORTUNETELLER. n. s. [fortune and tell.] One who cheats common people, by pretending to the knowledge of futurity.

They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortuneteller. Shakespeare.
A Welchman being at a scilions-house, and seeing

5 K 2 the

the prisoners hold up their hands at the bar, related to some of his acquaintance that the judges were good fortunetellers; for if they did but look upon their hand, they could certainly tell whether they should live or die.

Bacon's Apophthegms.
Hast thou given credit to vain predictions of men, to dreams or fortunetellers, or gone about to know any secret thing by lot? Duessa's Rules for Devotion.

There needs no more than impudence on one side, and a superstitious credulity on the other, to the setting up of a fortuneteller.

Long ago a fortuneteller
Exactly said what now befell her. Swift.

FOR'TY. adj. [φορτηγ, Saxon.] Four times ten.

Those are the common frailties of the muse. Dryd.

Death, only death, can break the lasting chain;
And here, ev'n then, shall my cold dust remain;
Here all its frailties, all its flames resign,
And wait, 'till 'tis no sin to mix with thine. Pope.

That Christians are now not only like other men in their frailties and infirmities, might be in some degree excusable; but the complaint is, they are like heathens in all the main and chief articles of their lives. Law.

FRAISCHEUR. n. f. [French.] Freshness; coolness. A word foolishly innovated by Dryden.

Hither in Summer-evenings you repair,

Thou art their foldier, and, being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way; but thou wilt frame
Thyself forsooth hereafter theirs. Shak. Coriolanus.

I have been a truant to the law;
I never yet could frame my will to it,
And therefore frame the law unto my will. Shakes.

6. To form and digest by thought.

The most abstruse ideas are only such as the understanding frames to itself, by joining together ideas that it had either from objects of sense or from its own operations about them. Locke.

Full of that flame his tender scenes he warms,
And frames his goddess by your matchless charms. Granville.

Urge him with truth to frame his sure replies,
And sure he will, for wisdom never lies. Pope.

How many excellent reasonings are framed in the mind of a man of wisdom and study in a length of years. Watts.

itself, if celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility, turn themselves any way, as it might happen. Hooker.

Castles made of trees upon frames of timber, with turrets and arches, were anciently matters of magnificence. Bacon.

These are thy glorious works, parent of good!
Almighty! thine this universal frame. Milton.

Divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame. Dryden.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame,
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,

The labour of a god; and all along Tough iron plates were clench'd to make it strong. Dryden.

We see this vast frame of the world, and an innumerable multitude of creatures in it; all which we, who believe a God, attribute to him as the author. Tillotson.

2. Any thing made so as to inclose or admit something else.

Put both the tube and the vessel it leaned on into a convenient wooden frame, to keep them from mishances. Boyle.

His picture scarcely would deserve a frame. Dryd.

A globe of glass, about eight or ten inches in diameter, being put into a frame where it may be swiftly turned round its axis, will, in turning, shine, where it rubs against the palm of one's hand. Newton.

3. Order; regularity; adjusted series or disposition.

A woman, that is like a German clock,
Still a repairing, ever out of frame,
And never going aright. Shakespeare.

FRANKPLEDGE. n. f. [francplegium, Latin; VOL. I.

of franc, i. e. liber & pleige, i. e. fidei jussor.] A pledge or surety for freemen.

For the ancient custom of England, for the preservation of the publick peace, was, that every freeborn man at fourteen years of age, religious persons, clerks, knights, and their eldest sons excepted, should find security for his fidelity to the king, or else be kept in prison: whence it became customary for a certain number of neighbours to be bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the transgression of any one absenting himself. This was called frankpledge, and the circuit thereof was called decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten households; and every particular person, thus mutually bound, was called decennier. This custom was so strictly observed, that the sheriffs, in every county did from time to time take the oaths of young ones as they grew to the age of fourteen years, and see that they combined in one decennary or other; this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visus franciplegii, view of frankpledge.

 If any be, the trespass of the queen. Shakef.
 He recovered the temple, free'd the city, and upheld the laws which were going down. 2 Mac. ii. 22.
 Can't thou no other master understand,
 Than him that free'd thee by the pretor's wand?
Dryden.

Should thy coward tongue
 Spread its cold poison through the martial throng,
 My jav'lin shall revenge to safe a part,
 And free the soul that quivers in thy heart. Pope.
 2. To rid from; to clear from any thing ill: with of or from.
 It is no marvel, that he could think of no better way to be free'd of these inconveniences the passions of those meetings gave him, than to dissolve them.
Clarendon.

Hercules
Free'd Erymanthus from the foaming boar. Dryden.
 Our land is from the rage of tygers free'd. Dryden.
 3. To clear from impediments or obstructions.
 The chaste Sibylla shall your steps convey,
 And blood of offer'd victims free the way. Dryden.
 Fierce was the fight; but half'n'ing to his prey,
 By force the furious lover free'd his way. Dryden.
 This master-key
 Frees every lock, and leads us to his person. Dryden.

4. To banish; to send away; to rid. Not in use.
 We may again
 Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights,
 Free from our seats and baouquets bloody knives.
Shakef.
 Never any sabbath of release
 Could free his travels and afflictions deep. Dantel.

5. To exempt.
 For he that is dead is free'd from sin. Rom. vi. 7.
FREERO'OTER. n. f. [free and booty.] A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.
 Perkin was not followed by any English of name, his forces consisted mostly of base people and free- booters, fitter to spoil a coast than to recover a kingdom. Bacon.
 The Earl of Warwick had, as often as he met with any Irish frigates, or such freebooters as failed under their commission, taken all the seamen.
Clarendon.

FREERO'OTING. n. f. Robbery; plunder;
 the act of pillaging.
 Under it he may cleanly convey any fit pillage, that cometh handomely in his way; and when he goeth abroad in the night on freebooting, it is his best and surest friend. Spenser.

FREEBORN. adj. [free and born.] Not a slave; inheriting liberty.
 O baseness, to support a tyrant's throne,
 And crush your freeborn brethren of the world!
Dryden.
 I shall speak my thoughts like a freeborn subject, such thing; perhaps as no Dutch commentator could,
 and I am sure no Frenchman durst. Dryden.
 Shall freeborn men, in humble awe,
 Submit to servile shame;
 Who from consent and custom draw,
 The same right to be rul'd by law,
 Which kings pretend to reign?
Dryden.

FRECH'APPEL. n. f. [free and chappel.] Such chappels as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. The king may also license a subject to found such a chappel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's visitation. Cowel.

FREECOST. n. f. [free and cost.] Without expence; free from charges.
 We must not touch any man for an exact master in the rules of our modern policy, but such a one as has brought himself so far to hate and despise the absurdity of being kind upon freecost, as not so much as to tell a friend what it is o'clock for nothing.
South.

FRE'DMAN. n. f. [freed and man.] A slave manumitted. Libertus.
 The freedman jostles, and will be preferr'd;
 First come, first serv'd, he cries. Dryden's Jew.

FRE'DOM. n. f. [from free.]
 1. Liberty; exemption from servitude; independence.
 The laws themselves they do specially rage at, as most repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom.
Spenser on Ireland.

O freedom! first delight of human kind!
 Not that which bondmen from their masters find,
 The privilege of doles; nor yet t' inscribe
 Their names in this or t' other Roman tribe:
 That false enfranchisement with ease is found;
 Slaves are made citizens by turning round. Dryden.
 2. Privileges; franchises; immunities.
 By our holy sabbath have I sworn
 To have the due and forfeit of my bond:
 If you deny it, let the danger light
 Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shak.

3. Power of enjoying franchises.
 This prince first gave freedom to servants, so as to become citizens of equal privileges with the rest, which very much increased the power of the people.
Swiss.
 4. Exemption from fate, necessity, or pre-determination.

I else must change
 Their nature, and revoke the high decree
 Uouchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd
 Their freedom; they themselves ordain'd their fall.
Milton.
 In every sin, by how much the more free will is in its choice, by so much is the act the more sinful; and where there is nothing to importune, urge, or provoke the will to any act, there is so much an higher and perfecter degree of freedom about that act.
South.

5. Unrestraint.
 I will that all the feasts and sabbaths shall be all days of immunity, and freedom for the Jews in my realm. 1 Mac. x.

6. The state of being without any particular evil or inconvenience.
 The freedom of their state lays them under a greater necessity of always chusing and doing the best things. Law.

7. Ease or facility in doing or showing any thing.
FREFO'OTED. adj. [free and foot.] Not restrained in the march.
 We will letters put upon this fear,
 Which now goes too freefooted. Shakef. Hamlet.

FREHE'ARTED. adj. [free and heart.] Liberal; unrestrained.
 Love must freehearted be, and voluntary;
 And not incanted, or by fate constrain'd. Davies.

FREHO'LD. n. f. [free and hold.] That land or tenement which a man holdeth in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life. Freehold in deed is the real possession of lands or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life.
Freehold in law is the right that a man has to such land or tenements before his entry or seizure. Freehold is sometimes taken in opposition to villenage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either bockland, that is, holden by book or writing, or folcland, that is, holden, without writing. The former was held by far better conditions, and by the better sort of tenants, as noblemen and gentlemen, being such as we now call freehold.
 The latter was commonly in the possession of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord. Cowel.
 No alienation of lands holden in chief should be available, touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it were made by matter of record.

Bacon's Office of Alienation.
 There is an unspeakable pleasure in calling any thing one's own: a freehold, though it be but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it. Addison.
 My friends here are very few, and fixed to the freehold, from whence nothing but death will remove them. Swift.
 I should be glad to possess a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give consent. Swift.

FREHO'LDER. n. f. [from freehold.] One who has a freehold.
 As extortion did banish the old English freeholder, who could not live but under the law; so the law did banish the Irish lord, who could not live but by extortion. Davies.

FRE'ELY. adv. [from free.]
 1. At liberty; without vassalage; without slavery; without dependence.
 2. Without restraint; heartily; with full gust.

If my son were my husband, I would freelier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embracesments of his bed, where he would show most love. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 3. Plentifully; lavishly.
 I pledge your grace; and if you knew what pains
 I have bestow'd to breed this present peace,
 You would drink freely. Shakef. Henry IV.

4. Without scruple; without reserve.
 Let such teach others who themselves excel,
 And censure freely who have writtne well. Pope.
 5. Without impediment.
 To follow rather the Goths in rhyming than the Greeks in true versifying, were even to eat acorns with swine, when we may freely eat wheat-bread among men. Afcham.

The path to peace is virtue: what I show,
 Thyself may freely on thyself bestow:
 Fortune was never worshipp'd by the wife;
 But set aloft by fools, usurps the skies. Dryden.
 6. Without necessity; without predetermi-nation.
Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell.
Milton.

He leaves us to chuse with the liberty of reasonable beings: they who comply with his grace, comply with it freely; and they who reject it, do also freely reject it. Rogers.

7. Frankly; liberally; without cost.
 By nature all things have an equally uncommon use: nature freely and indifferently opens the bosoms of the universe to all mankind. South.

8. Spontaneously; of its own accord.
FRE'EMAN. n. f. [free and man.]
 1. One not a slave; not a vassal.
 Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves, than that Cæsar were dead, to live all free- men? Shakespeare.
 If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination and judgment which keeps us from chusing or doing the worst, be liberty, true liberty, madmen and fools are the only freemen. Locke.

2. One partaking of rights, privileges, or immunities.
 He made us freemen of the continent,
 What nature did like captives treat before. Dryden.
 What this union was is expressed in the preceding verse, by their both having been made freemen on the same day. Addison.

FREEM'NDED. adj. [free and mind.] Un-perplexed; without load of care.
 To be freeminded, and cheerfully disposed at hours of meat, sleep, and exercise, is one of the best precepts of long lasting. Bacon's

FRE'ENESS. n. f. [from free.]
 1. The state or quality of being free.
 2. Openness; unreservedness; ingenuouf-ness; candour.

F R E

The reader may pardon it, if he please, for the freeness of the confession. Dryden.

3. Generosity; liberality.

I hope it will never be said that the laity, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable, shall in their corporations exceed the clergy itself, and their sons, in freeness of giving. Spratt.

FREESCHOOL. n. f. [free and school.] A school in which learning is given without pay.

To give a civil education to the youth of this land in the time to come, provision was made by another law, that there should be one free-school at least erected in every diocese. Davies.

Two clergymen stood candidates for a small free-school; a gentleman who happened to have a better understanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better scholar. Swift.

FREESPOKEN: adj. [free and spoken.] Accustomed to speak without reserve.

Nerva one night supped privately with some six or seven; amongst whom there was one that was a dangerous man, and began to take the like courses as Marcellus and Regulus had done: the Emperor fell into discourse of the injustice and tyranny of the former time, and, by name, of the two accusers; and said, what should we do with them, if we had them now? One of them that was at supper, and was a freespoken senator, said, Marry, they should sup with us. Bacon.

FREESTONE. n. f. [free and stone.] Stone commonly used in building.

Freestone is so named from its being of such a constitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction. Woodward.

I saw her hand; she has a leathern hand, a freestone-coloured hand. Shaksp. As you like it.

The streets are generally paved with brick or freestone, and always kept very neat. Addison on Italy.

FREETHINKER. n. f. [free and think.] A libertine; a contemner of religion.

Atheist is an old fashioned word: I'm a freethinker, child. Addison.

Of what use is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the sole end, how remote soever in appearance, of all objections against Christianity? And therefore the freethinkers consider it as an edifice, wherein all the parts have such a mutual dependance on each other, that if you pull out one single nail, the whole fabrick must fall to the ground. Swift.

FREEWILL. n. f. [free and will.]

1. The power of directing our own actions without restraint by necessity or fate.

We have a power to suspend the prosecution of this or that desire: this seems to me the source of all liberty; in this seems to consist that which is improperly called freewill. Locke.

2. Voluntaryness; spontaneity.

I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee. Ezra, vii. 13.

FREEWOMAN. n. f. [free and woman.] A woman not enslaved.

All her ornaments are taken away; of a freewoman; she is become a bondslave. 1 Mac. ii. 11.

To FREEZE. v. n. preter. froze. [vriesen, Dutch.]

1. To be congealed with cold.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods in all parts of the earth, would as well serve men to reckon their years by as the motions of the sun: Locke.

2. To be of that degree of cold by which water is congealed.

Orpheus with his lute made trees And mountain tops, that freeze, Bow themselves when he did sing. Shaksp.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shaksp.

F R E

Heav'n froze above severe, the clouds congeal, And thro' the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail. Dryden.

To FREEZE. v. a. pret. froze; part. frozen or froze.

1. To congeal with cold.

When we both lay in the field, Frozen almost to death, how did he lap me, Ev'n in his garments! Shaksp. Richard III.

My master and mistress are almost frozen to death. Shaksp.peare.

3. To chill by the loss of power or motion.

I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins, That almost freezes up the heat of life. Shaksp.

Death came on amain And exercis'd below his iron reign;

Then upward to the seat of life he goes; Sense fled before him, what he touch'd he froze. Dryden.

To FREIGHT. v. a. preter. freighted; part. freight; which being now used as an adjective, freighted is adopted. [fretter, French.]

1. To load a ship or vessel of carriage with goods for transportation.

The princes Have to the port of Athens sent their ships, Fraught with the ministers and instruments Of cruel war. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida, Prol.

Nor is, indeed, that man less mad than these, Who freights a ship to venture on the seas;

With one frail interposing plank to save From certain death, roll'd on by ev'ry wave. Dryd.

Freighted with iron, from my native land I steer my voyage. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To load as the burthen; to be the thing with which a vessel is freighted.

I would Have sunk the sea within the earth, or ere It should the good ship so have swallow'd, and The freighting souls within her. Shaksp.

FREIGHT. n. f.

1. Any thing with which a ship is loaded.

He clears the deck, receives the mighty freight; The leaky vessel groans beneath the weight. Dryden.

To FRIT'TER. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To cut meat into small pieces to be fried.
 2. To break into small particles or fragments.
 Joy to great chaos! let division reign!
 My racks and tortures soon shall drive them hence,
 Break all their nerves, and fritter all their sense. Dunciad.
 How prologues into prefaces decay,
 And these to notes are fritter'd quite away. Pope.
FRIVOLOUS. adj. [frivolus, Latin; frivole, French.] Slight; trifling; of no moment.
 It is frivolous to say we ought not to use bad ceremonies of the church of Rome, and presume all such bad as it pleaseth themselves to dislike. Hooker.
 These seem very frivolous and fruitless; for, by the breach of them, little damage can come to the commonwealth. Spenser.
 She tam'd the brinded lioness,
 And spotted mountain pard; but set at nought
 The frivolous bolt of Cupid. Milton.
 Those things which now seem frivolous and slight,
 Will be of serious consequence to you,
 When they have made you once ridiculous. Roscommon.
 All the impeachments in Greece and Rome agreed in a notion of being concerned, in point of honour, to condemn whatever person they impeached, however frivolous the articles, or however weak the proofs. Swift.
 I will not defend any mistake, and do not think myself obliged to answer every frivolous objection. Arbutnot.
FRIVOLOUSNESS. n. f. [from frivolous.]
 Want of importance; triflingness.
FRIVOLOUSLY. adv. [from frivolous.]
 Triflingly; without weight.

 Therein I spy'd this yellow frizled hair. Gay.
FRO. adv. [fna, Saxon.]
 1. Backward; regressively. It is only used in opposition to the word to; to and fro, backward and forward, to and from.
 The Carthaginians having spoiled all Spain, rooted out all that were affected to the Romans; and the Romans, having recovered that country, did cut off all that favoured the Carthaginians: so betwixt them both, to and fro, there was scarce a native Spaniard left. Spenser.
 As when a heap of gather'd thorns is cast,
 Now to, now fro, before th' autumnal blast,
 Together clung, it rolls around the field. Pope.
 2. It is a contraction of from: not now used.
 They turn round like grindlestones,
 Which they dig out fro the delves,
 For their bairns bread, wives, and selves. Ben Jonson.
FROCK. n. f. [froc, French.]
 1. A dress; a coat.
 That monitor, custom, is angel yet in this,
 That to the use of actions fair and good,
 He likewise gives a frock or livery,
 That aptly is put on. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail Adamantean proof. Milton's Agonistes.

 the pancake is crisped or crimped in frying.] A kind of food made by frying bacon inclosed in a pancake.
FROLICK. adj. [vrolijck, Dutch.] Gay;
 full of levity; full of pranks.
 We fairies, that do run
 By the triple Hecate's team,
 From the presence of the sun,
 Following darkness like a dream,
 Now are frollick. Shakespeare.
 Whether, as some fages sing,
 The frollick wind that breathes the Spring,
 Zephyr with Aurora playing,
 As he met her once a Maying;
 There on beds of violets blue,
 And fresh-blown roses wadh'd in dew,
 Fill'd her with thee a daughter fair,
 So buxom, blithe, and debonnaire. Milton.
 Who ripe, and frollick of his full-grown age,
 Roving the Celtick and Ibeian fields,
 At last betakes him to this ominous wood. Milton.
 The gay, the frollick, and the loud. Waller.
FRO'LUCK. n. f. [from the adjective.] A wild prank; a flight of whim and levity. Jr

He would be at his frolick once again,
And his pretensions to divinity. Roscommen.
Alcibiades having been formerly noted for the like frolicks and excursions, was immediately accused of this. Swift.
While rain depends, the pensive cat gives o'er
Her frolicks, and pursues her tail no more. Swift.
To FRO'LI'CK. v. n. [from the noun.] To play wild pranks; to play tricks of levity and gaiety.
Manly spirit and genius plays not tricks with words, not frolicks with the caprices of a frothy imagination. Glanville.
Then to her new love let her go,
And deck her in golden array;
Be finest at every fine show,
And frolick it all the long day. Rowe.
FRO'LI'CKLY. adv. [from frolick.] Gaily; wildly.
FRO'LI'CKSOME. adj. [from frolick.] Full of wild gaiety.

I shall find time
From this enormous state, and seek to give Losses their remedies. Shakespeare's King Lear.
6. With to following; noting succession.
These motions we must examine from first to last,
to find out what was the form of the earth. Burnet.
He bid her from time to time be comforted. Addis.
7. Out of; noting emission.
When the most high
Eternal Father, from his secret cloud
Amid'it, in thunder utter'd thus his voice. Milton.
Then pierc'd with pain, she took her haughty
head,
Sigh'd from her inward soul, and thus she said. Dryd.
8. Noting progress from premises to inferences.
If an objection be not removed, the conclusion of experience from the time past to the time present will not be found and perfect. Bacon.
This is evident from that high and refined morality, which shined forth in some of the ancient heathens. South.
9. Noting the place or person from whom a message is brought.
The king is coming, and I must speak with him from the bridge.
—How now, Fluellen, cam'st thou from the bridge? Shak. Hen. V.
10. Out of; noting extraction.
From high Meonia's rocky shores I came,
Of poor descent; Acetes is my name. Addison.
11. Because of. Noting the reason or motive of an act or effect.
You are good, but from a nobler cause;
From your own knowledge, not from nature's laws. Dryden.

David celebrates the glory of God from the consideration of the greatness of his works. Tillofson.
We sicken soon from her contagious care;
Grieve for her sorrows, groan for her despair. Prior.
Relaxation from plente is cured by spare diet,
and from any cause by that which is contrary to it.
Arbutnot on Aliments.
12. Out of. Noting the ground or cause of any thing.
By the sacred radiance of the sun,
The mysteries of Hecate, and the night;
By all the operations of the orbs,
From whom we do exist, and cease to be,
Here I disclaim all my paternal care. Shakesp.
They who believe that the praises which arise from valour are superior to those which proceed from any other virtues, have not considered. Dryd.
What entertainment can be raised from so pitiful a machine? We see the success of the battle from the very beginning. Dryden.
'Tis true from force the strongest title springs,
I therefore hold from that which first made kings. Dryden.
13. Not near to; noting distance.
His regiment lies half a mile at least
South from the mighty power of the king. Shak.
14. Noting separation or recession.
To die by thee, were but to die in jest;
From thee to die, were torture more than death. Sh.
Hast thou beheld when from the goal they start,
The youthful charioteers with heaving heart,
Rush to the race, and, panting, scarcely bear
Th' extremes of sev'rish hope and chilling fear. Dryd. Virgil.
15. Noting exemption or deliverance.
From jealousy's tormenting strife,
For ever be thy bosom free'd. Prior.
16. Noting absence.
Our father he hath writ, so hath our sister,
Of differences, which I best thought it fit
To answer from our home. Shakesp. King Lear.
17. Noting derivation.
I lay the deep foundations of a wall
And Enos, nam'd from me, the city call. Dryden.
18. Since. Noting distance from the past.
The flood was not the cause of mountains, but there were mountains from the creation. Raleigh.
I had, from my childhood, a wart upon one of my fingers. Bacon.
The other had been trained up from his youth in the war of Flanders. Clarendon.
The milk of tygers was his infant food,
Taught from his tender years the taste of blood. Dryden.
Were there, from all eternity, no memorable actions done 'till about that time? Tillofson.
19. Contrary to. Not in use.
Any thing so overdone is from the purpose of playing; whose end, both at the first and now, was and is to hold, as twere, the mirror up to nature. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Do not believe,
That from the sense of all civility,
I thus would play and trifle with your reverence. Shakesp.
Did you draw bonds to forfeit? Sign, to break?
Or must we read you quite from what we speak,
And find the truth out the wrong way? Donne.
20. Noting removal.
Thrice from the ground she leap'd. Dryden.
21. From is very frequently joined by an ellipsis with adverbs: as, from above, from the parts above; from below, from the places below; of which some are here exemplified.
22. FROM above.
He which gave them from above such power, for miraculous confirmation of that which they taught, endued them also with wisdom from above, to teach that which they so did confirm. Hooker.
No sooner were his eyes in slumber bound,
When, from above, a more than mortal sound
Invades his ears. Dryden's Æn.
23. FROM afar.
Light demigances from afar they throw. Dryden.

24. FROM beneath.
With whirlwinds from beneath the tofs'd the ship,
And bare expos'd the bottom of the deep. Dryden.
An arm arises out of Stygian flood,
Which, breaking from beneath with bellowing sound
Whirls the black waves and rattling stones around. Dryden.
25. FROM behind.
See, to their base restor'd, earth, seas, and air,
And joyful ages from behind, in crowding ranks appear. Dryden.
26. FROM afar.
Their train proceeding on their way,
From far the town and lofty tow'rs survey. Dryden.
27. FROM high.
Then heav'n's imperious queen shot down from high. Dryden.
28. FROM thence. Here from is superfluous.
In the necessary differences which arise from thence, they rather break into several divisions than join in any one publick interest; and from thence have always risen the most dangerous factions, which have ruined the peace of nations. Clarendon.
29. FROM whence. From is here superfluous.
While future realms his wand'ring thoughts delight,
His daily vision and his dream by night,
Forbidden Thebes appears before his eye,
From whence he sees his absent brother fly. Pope.
30. FROM where.
From where high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'erarching shades and pendent woods,
Us to these shores our filial duty draws. Pope's Odys.
31. FROM without.
When the plantation grows to strength, then it is time to plant it with women as well as with men, that it may spread into generations, and not be pierced from without. Bacon.
If native power prevail not, shall I doubt
To seek for needful succour from without. Dryden.
32. From is sometimes followed by another preposition, with its proper case.
33. FROM amidst.
Thou thou shalt fall by time or barb'rous foes,
Whose circling walls the sev'n fam'd hills enclose;
And thou, whose rival tow'rs invade the skies,
And, from amidst the waves with equal glory rise. Addison.
34. FROM among.
Here had new begun
My wand'ring, had not he, who was my guide
Up hither from among the trees appear'd,
Presence divine! Milton's Paradise Lost.
35. FROM beneath.
My worthy wife our arms mislaid,
And from beneath my head my sword convey'd. Dryden's Æn.
36. FROM beyond.
There followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from beyond Jordan. Mat. iv. 25.
37. FROM forth.

Brought the full laver o'er their hands to pour,
And canisters of consecrated flour. Pope's Odyssey.
38. FROM off.
The sea being constrained to withdraw from off certain tracts of lands, which lay till then at the bottom of it. Woodward.
Knights, unhors'd, may rise from off the plain,
And fight on foot, their honour to regain. Dryden.
39. FROM out.
The king with angry threatnings from out a window, where he was not at hand, the world should behold him a beholder, commanded his guard and the rest of his soldiers, to hasten their death. Sidney.
And join thy voice unto the angel-quire
From out his secret altar touch'd with hallow'd fire. Milton.
Now shake from out thy fruitful breast, the seeds
Of envy, discord, and of cruel deeds. Dryden's Æn.
Strong god of iron, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing north and hyperborean seas,
Terrour is thine, and wild amazement, slung
From out thy chariot, withers ev'n the strong. Dryden.
40. FROM out of.
Whatever such principle there is, it was at the M

first bound out by disburse, and drawn from out of the very bowels of heaven and earth. Hooker.

41. FROM under.
He, though blind of sight,
Despis'd, and thought extinguish'd quite,
With inward eyes illuminated,
His fiery virtue rous'd
From under ashes into sudden flame. Milt. Agonistes.

42 FROM within.
From within
The broken bowels and the bloated skin,
A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms. Dryden.

FRO'WARD, prep. [fram and weard, Saxon.]
Away from; the contrary to the word to-wards. Not now in use.

As cheerfully going towards as Pyrocles went forward fromward his death. Sidney.

The horizontal needle is continually varying towards East and West; and so the dipping or inclining needle is varying up and down, towards or fromwards the zenith. Cbeyne.

FRONT, n. s. [frons, Latin; front, French.]

1. The face.
His front yet threatens, and his frowns command. Prior.

They stand not front to front, but each doth view
The other's tail pursu'd as they pursue. Creech.

The patriot virtues that distend thy thought,
Spread on thy front and in thy bosom glow. Thomson.

2. The face, in a sense of censure or dislike: as, a hardened front; a fierce front. This is the usual sense.

3. The face as opposed to an enemy.
His forward hand, inur'd to wounds, makes way
Upon the sharpest fronts of the most fierce. Daniel.

4. The part or place opposed to the face.
The access of the town was only by a neck of land: our men had shot, that thundered upon them from the rampier in front, and from the galleys that lay at sea in flank. Bacon.

5. The van of an army.
'T'wixt host and host but narrow space was left,
A dreadful interval and front to front
Presented, stood in terrible array. Milton's Par. Lost.

6. The forepart of any thing as of a building.
Both these sides are not only returns, but parts of the front; and uniform without, though severally partitioned within, and are on both sides of a great and stately tower, in the midst of the front. Bacon.

Palladius adviseth the front of his edifice should so respect the South, that in its first angle it receive the rising rays of the Winter sun, and decline a little from the Winter setting thereof. Brown.

The prince approach'd the door,
Possess'd the porch, and on the front above
He fix'd the fatal bough. Dryden's Æn.

One sees the front of a palace covered with painted pillars of different orders. Addison on Italy.

7. The most conspicuous part or particular.

To FRONT, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To oppose directly, or face to face; to encounter.

Can you, when you have push'd out of your gates the very defender of them, think to front his revenges with easy groans. Shakespeare.

Some are either to be won to the state in a fast and true manner, or fronted with some other of the same party that may oppose them, and so divide the reputation. Bacon's Essays.

I shall front thee, like some staring ghout,
With all my wrongs about me. Dryd. Don Sebastian.

2. To stand opposed or overagainst any place or thing.
The square will be one of the most beautiful in Italy when this statue is erected, and a town house built at one end to front the church that stands at the other. Addison on Italy.

To FRONT, v. n. To stand foremost.
I front but in that file,
Where others tell steps with me. Shak. Henry VIII.

FRONTAL, n. s. [frontale, Latin; frontal, French.] Any external form of medicine to be applied to the forehead, generally composed amongst the ancients of coolers and hypnoticks. Quincy.

We may apply intercipients upon the temples of maffick: frontales may also be applied. Wifeman.

The torpedo, alive, stupifies at a distance; but after death produceth no such effect; which had they retained, they might have supplied opium, and served as frontales in phrenesies. Brown.

FRONTATED, adj. [from frons, Latin.]
In botany, the frontated leaf of a flower grows broader and broader, and at last perhaps terminates in a right line: used in opposition to cusped, which is, when the leaves of a flower end in a point. Quincy.

FRONTBOX, n. s. [front and box.] The box in the playhouse from which there is a direct view to the stage.
How vain are all these glories, all our pains,
Unless good sense preserve what beauty gains!
That men may say, when we the frontbox grace,
Behold the first in virtue, as in face. Pope.

FRONTED, adj. [from frons.] Formed with a front.
Part fronted brigades form. Milton.

FRONTIER, n. s. [frontiere, French.] The marches; the limit; the utmost verge of any territory; the border; properly that which terminates not at the sea, but fronts another country.

FRONTROOM, n. s. [front and room.] An apartment in the forepart of the house.
If your shop stands in an eminent street, the frontrooms are commonly more airy than the backrooms; and it will be inconvenient to make the frontroom shallow. Moxon.

FRÖRE, adj. [bevrozen, Dutch, frozen.]

Frozen. This word is not used since the time of Milton.

The parching air
Burns froze, and cold performs th' effect of fire. Milton.

FRÖNE, adj. [bevrozen, Frozen, Dutch.]
Frozen; congealed with cold. Obsolete.
O, my heart-blood is well nigh frome I seele,
And my galage grown fast to my heele. Spenser's Past.

FROST, n. s. [frost, Saxon.]

1. The last effect of cold; the power or act of congelation.
This is the state of man: to day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

When the frost seizes upon wine, only the more waterish parts are congealed: there is a mighty spirit which can retreat into itself, and within its own compass lie secure from the freezing impression. South.

2. The appearance of plants and trees sparkling with congelation of dew.
Behold the groves that shine with silver frost,
Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure lost. Pope.

FROSTBITTEN, adj. [frost and bitten.]
Nipped or withered by the frost.
The leaves are too much frostbitten. Mortimer.

FROSTED, adj. [from frost.] Laid on in inequalities like those of the hoar frost upon plants.

Dispraise my work, than praise it frostily. Ben Jonson.

FROSTINESS, n. s. [from frosty.] Cold; freezing cold.

FROSTNAIL, n. s. [frost and nail.] A nail with a prominent head driven into the horse's shoes, that it may pierce the ice.
The claws are strait only to take hold, for better progression; as a horse that is shod with frostnails. Grew's Cosmol.

FROSTWORK, n. s. [frost and work.] Work in which the substance is laid on with inequalities, like the dew congealed upon shrubs.
By nature shap'd to various figures, those
The fruitful rain, and these the hail compose;
The snowy fleece and curious frostwork these Produce the dew, and those the gentle breeze. Blackmore.

FROSTY, adj. [from frost.]

1. Having the power of congelation; excessive cold.
For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed,
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd,
Be pitiful to my condemned sons. Shak. Titus Andron.

The air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely; as fire scorseth in frosty weather. Bacon.

A gnat half-starved with cold and hunger, went out one frosty morning to a bee-hive. L'Estrange.

2. Chill in affection; without warmth of kindness or courage.
What a frosty spirited rogue is this! Shakesp.

FROTH, n. s. [free, Danish and Scottish.]

1. Spume; foam; the bubbles caused in liquors by agitation.
His hideous tail then hurled he about, And

And therewith all enwrap the nimble thighs
Of his froth foamy steed. Fairy Queen.
When wind expireth from under the sea, as it causeth some resounding of the water, so it causeth some light motions of bubbles, and white circles of froth. Bacon's Natural History.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, th' assault renew;
Vain batt'ry, and in froth or bubbles end. Milton.
The useless froth swims on the surface, but the pearl lies covered with a mass of waters. Glanville.
The scatter'd ocean flies;
Black sands, discolour'd froth, and mingled mud arise. Dryden.

They were the froth ray raging folly mov'd
When it boil'd up; I knew not then I lov'd,
Yet then lov'd most. Dryden's Aurengzebe.
If now the colours of natural bodies are to be mingled, let water, a little thickened with soap, be agitated to raise a froth; and after that froth has stood a little, there will appear, to one that shall view it intently, various colours every where in the surfaces of the bubbles; but to one that shall go so far off that he cannot distinguish the colours from one another, the whole froth will grow white, with a perfect whiteness. Newton.

A painter, having finished the picture of a horse, excepting the loose froth about his mouth and his bridle; and after many unsuccessful essays, despairing to do that to his satisfaction, in a great rage threw a sponge at it, all besmeared with the colours, which fortunately hitting upon the right place, by one bold stroke of chance most exactly supplied the want of skill in the artist. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Any empty or senseless shew of wit or eloquence.

3. Any thing not hard, solid, or substantial.
Who catch his veal, pig, and lamb being froth,
Shall twice in a week go to bed without broth. Tusser.

To FROTH, v. n. [from the noun.] To foam; to throw out spume; to generate spume.

He frets within, froths treason at his mouth,
And churns it through his teeth. Dryden.
Excess muddies the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high. Grew.

FRO'THILY, adv. [from frothy.]

1. With foam; with spume.

2. In an empty trifling manner.

FRO'THY, adj. [from froth.]

1. Full of foam, froth, or spume.

The sap of trees is of differing natures; some watery and clear, as vines, beeches, pears; some thick, as apples; some gummy, as cherries; and some frothy, as elms. Bacon.

Behold a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.

2. Soft; not solid; wasting.

Their bodies are so solid and hard as you need not fear that bathing should make them frothy. Bacon.

3. Vain; empty; trifling.

What's a voluptuous dinner, and the frothy vanity of discourse that commonly attends these pompous entertainments? What is it but a mortification to a man of sense and virtue? L'Estrange.
Though the principles of religion were never so clear and evident, yet they may be made ridiculous by vain and frothy men; as the gravest and wisest person in the world may be abused by being put in a fool's coat. Tillotson.

FROUNCE, n. s. A word used by falconers for a distemper, in which white spittle gathers about the hawk's bill. Skinner.

To FROUNCE, v. a. [from the noun.] To frizzle or curl the hair about the face.
This word was at first probably used in contempt.

Some frounce their curled hair in courtly guise,
Some prank their ruffs, and others timely dight
Their gay attire. Fairy Queen.
Some warlike sign must be used; either a slowly buckin, or an overhanging frounced head. Ascham.

Thus, night oft sees me in thy pale career,
'Till civil suited morn appear;

FRUCTIFEROUS, adj. [fructifer, Latin.]
Bearing fruit.

To FRUCTIFY, v. a. [fructifier, French.]
To make fruitful; to fertilise.

The legal levies the sovereign raises are as vapours which the sun exhales, which fall down in sweet showers to fructify the earth. Howel's Vocal Forest.

Where'er she looks, behold some sudden birth,
Adorns the trees, and fructifies the earth. Granville.

To FRUCTIFY, v. n. To bear fruit.

It watereth the heart, to the end it may fructify;
maketh the virtuous in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; and serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents which befall men in this present life. Hooker.

Thus would there nothing fructify, either near or under them, the sun being horizontal to the poles. Brown.

FRUCTIFICATION, n. s. [from fructify.]
The act of causing or of bearing fruit;
fecundation; fertility.

That the sap doth powerfully rise in the Spring, to put the plant in a capacity of fructification, he that hath beheld how many gallons of water may be drawn from a birch-tree, hath slender reason to doubt. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FRUCTUOUS, adj. [fructueux, French; from fructify.] Fruitful; fertile; impregnating with fertility.

Apples of price, and plenteous sheaves of corn
Oit interlac'd occur; and both imbibe
Fitting congeal'd juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'erabound! Phillips.

FRUGAL, adj. [frugalit, Latin; frugal, French.] Thrifty; sparing; parsimonious;
not prodigal; not profuse; not lavish.

Reasoning, I oft admire,
How nature wise and frugal could commit
Such disproportion, with superfluous hand
So many nobler bodies to create,
Greater so manifold to his own use. Milton.

And wing'd purveyors his sharp hunger fed
With frugal scraps of flesh and mastin bread. Harte.

If through mist he shoots his sullen beams,
Frugal of light, in loose and straggling streams, Suspect a drizzling day. Dryden's Virgil.

 a libellous pamphlet of a fugitive physician. Watson.
FUGITIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.]
 1. One who runs from his station or duty.
 Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects; for they are light to run away, and almost all fugitives are of that condition. Bacon.
 Back to thy punishment,
 False fugitive! and to thy speed add wings,
 Lest with a whip of scorpions I pursue Thy ling'ring. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 We understand by some fugitives that he hath commanded
 The generals to return with victory, or expect A shameful death. Denham's Sophy.
 2. One who takes shelter under another power from punishment.
 Too many, being men of good inheritance, are fled beyond the seas, where they live under princes, which are her majesty's professed enemies; and con-vey'd.

verts and are confederates with other traitors and fugitives there abiding. Spenser on Ireland.

Your royal highness is too great and too just, either to want or to receive the homage of rebellious fugitives. Dryden.

That divers salt, emerging upon the analysis of many concretes, are very volatile, is plain from the fugitiveness of salt and of hartshorn attending in distillation. Boyle.

2. Instability; uncertainty.

FUGUE. n. f. [French; from fuga, Latin.]
In music, some point consisting of four, five, six, or any other number of notes begun by some one single part, and then seconded by a third, fourth, fifth and sixth part, if the composition consists of so many; repeating the same or such like notes, so that the several parts follow, or come in one after another in the same manner, the leading parts still flying before those that follow. Harris.

The reports and fugues have an agreement with the figures in rhetoric of repetition and tautology. Bacon's Natural History.

The skillful organist plies his grave and fancied descant in lofty fugues. Milton on Education.

His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low and high,
Fled, and pursu'd transverse the resonnant fugue. Milton.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;
In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a fugue expire. Addison.

FULCIMENT. n. f. [fulcrimen, fulcimentum, Latin.] That on which a body rests, which acts or is acted upon at each end, as a balance or a lever.

The power that equiperates with any weight, must have the same proportion unto it, as there is betwixt their several distances from the centre or fulcrimen. Wilkins.

To FULFIL. v. a. [full and fill.]

1. To fill till there is no room for more. This sense is now not used.

Six gates is th' city, with massy staples,
And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts,
Spare up the sons of Troy. Shak-Troil. and Cressida.

2. To answer any prophecy or promise by performance.

They knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath-day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him. Acts, xiii. 27.

The fury bath'd them in each other's blood;
Then, having fix'd the fight, exulting flies,
And bears fulfill'd her promise to the skies. Dryden.

3. To answer any purpose or design.

Here nature seems fulfill'd in all her ends. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. To answer any desire by compliance or gratification.

If on my wounded breast thou drop'st a tear,
Think for whose sake my breath that wound did bear;
And faithfully my last desires fulfill,
As I perform my cruel father's will. Dryden's Ovid.

5. To answer any law by obedience.

Love worketh no ill to his neighbour, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law. Rom. xiii. 10.

This I my glory account
My exaltation, and my whole delight,
That thou in me well-pleas'd declar'st thy will Fulfill'd, which to fulfill is all my bliss. Milton.

FULFRUGHT. adj. [full and fraught.]

Fully stored.

Thy fall hath left a kind of blot
To mark the fulfrught man, the best endu'd,
With some suspicion. Shakespeare's Henry V.

FULGENCY. n. f. [fulgens, Latin.] Splendour; glitter. Diæ.

FULGENT. adj. [fulgens, Latin.] Shining; dazzling; exquisitely bright.

As from a cloud his fulgent head,
And shape star-bright, appear'd. Milton's Par. Lost.
The illumination is not so bright and fulgent as to obscure or extinguish all perceptibility of reason. More's Divine Dial.

FULGID. adj. [fulgidus, Latin.] Shining; glittering; dazzling.

FULGIDITY. n. f. [from fulgid.] Splendour; dazzling glitter. Diæ.

FULGOUR. n. f. [fulgor, Latin.] Splendour; dazzling brightness like that of lightning. Glow-worms alive project a lustre in the dark; which fulgour, notwithstanding, ceaseth after death. Brown.

When I set my eyes on this side of things, there shines from them such an intellectual fulgour, that methinks the very glory of the Deity becomes visible through them. More.

FULGURATION. n. f. [fulguratio, Latin.] The act of lightening.

FULHAM. n. f. A cant word for false dice. Hannet.

Let vultures gripe thy guts, for gourd and Fulbam's hold,
And high and low beguile the rich and poor. Shaksp.

FULGINOUS. adj. [fuliginosus, French, fuliginosus, Latin.] Sooty; smoky.

Burrae hath an excellent spirit to repress the fuliginous vapours of dusky melancholy, and so cure madness. Bacon.

Whereas history should be the torch of truth, he makes her in divers places a fuliginous link of lies. Hovell.

FULMART. n. f. [This word, of which Skinner observes that he found it only in this passage, seems to mean the same with foat.] A kind of stinking ferret.

The fishet, the fulmart, and the ferret, live upon the face, and within the bowels of the earth. Walton's Angler.

FULL. adj. [fulle, Saxon; vol, Dutch.]

1. Replete; without vacuity; having no space void.

Better is an handful with quietness, than both the hands full with travel and vexation of spirit. Ecl. iv. 6.

Valley full of chariots. Isaiah.
The trees of the Lord are full of sap. Psalms.
Where all must full or not coherent be. Pope.

2. Abounding in any quality good or bad.

With pretence from Strephon her to guard,
He met her full, but full of warefulness. Sidney.

You should tread a course
Pretty and full of view. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, are full of inconvenience; they taint business through want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon.

That must be our cure,
To be no more; sad cure; for who would lose,
Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
Those thoughts that wander through eternity? Milt.

Gay religion's full of pomp and gold. Milton.

In that sweet season, as in bed I lay,
I turn'd my weary side, but still in vain,
Though full of youthful health and pain. Dryden.

He is full of wants which he cannot supply, and compass'd about with infirmities which he cannot remove. Tillotson.

From yon bright heaven our author fetch'd his fire,
And paints the passions that your eyes inspire;
Full of that flame, his tender scenes he warms,
And frames his goddess by your matchless charms. Granv.

3. Stored with any thing; well supplied with any thing.

Full of days was he;
Two ages past, he liv'd the third to see. Ticket.

4. Plump; faginated; fat.

A gentleman of a full body having broken his shin by a fall, the wound inflamed. Wifeman's Surg.

5. Saturated; fated.

I am full of the burnt offerings of rams. Isa. i. 11.
The alteration of scenes feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object. Bacon.

6. Crowded with regard to the imagination or memory.

Every one is full of the miracles done by cold baths on decayed and weak constitutions. Lacke.

7. That which fills or makes full; large; great in effect.

Water digesteth a full meal sooner than any liquor. Arbushnot.

8. Complete; such as that nothing further is desired or wanted.

That day had seen the full accomplishment
Of all his travels. Daniel's Civil War.

What remains, ye gods,
But up and enter now into full bliss? Milton.

Being tried at that time only with a promise, he gave full credit to that promise, and still gave evidence of his fidelity as fast as occasions were offered. Hammond's Praef. Catechism.

The resurrection of Jesus from the dead hath given the world full assurance of another life. Tillotson.

9. Complete without abatement; at the utmost degree.

At the end of two full years Pharaoh dreamed. Genesis.

After hard riding plunge the horses into water, and allow them to drink as they please; but gallop them full speed, to warm the water in their bellies. Swift.

10. Containing the whole matter; expressing much.

Where my expressions are not so full as his, either our language or my art were defective; but where mine are fuller than his, they are but the impressions which the often reading of him have left upon my thoughts. Denham.

Should a man go about with never so set study to describe such a natural form of the year before the deluge as that which is at present established, he could scarcely do it in so few words, so fit and proper, so full and express. Woodward.

11. Strong; not faint; not attenuated.

I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart; but the empty vessel makes the greatest sound. Shakespeare.

Barrels placed under the floor of a chamber, make all noises in the same more full and resounding. Bacon's Natural History.

Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line. Pope.

12. Mature; perfect.

In the fantasy of the Mamalukes, slaves reigned over families of free men; and much like were the case, if you suppose a nation, where the custom were that after full age the sons should expulse their fathers out of their possessions. Bacon.

So law appears imperfect, and but given
With purpose to resign them in full time
Up to a better covenant. Milton.

These thoughts
Full counsel must mature. Milton.

13. [Applied to the moon.] Complete in its orb.

Towards the full moon, as he was coming home one morning, he felt his legs faulter. Wifeman.

14. Not continuous, or a full stop.

Therewith he ended, making a full point of a hearty sign. Sidney.

15. Spread to view in all dimensions.

'Till about the end of the third century, I do not remember to have seen the head of a Roman emperor drawn with a full face: they always appear in profile. Addison on Medals.

FULL. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Complete measure; freedom from deficiency.

When we return,
We'll see those things affected to the full. Shaksp.

He liked the pomp and absolute authority of a general

general well, and preserved the dignity of it to the full. Clarendon.
The picture of Ptolemy P^otopater is given by authors to the full. Dryden.

Sicilian tortures and the brazen bull,
Are emblems, rather than express the full
Of what he feels. Dryden's Perf.
If where the rules not far enough extend,
Some lucky licence answer to the full
Th' intent propos'd, that licence is a rule. Pope.

2. The highest state or degree.
The swan's down feather,
That stands upon the swell at full of tide, Neither way inclines. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

3. The whole; the total.
The king hath won, and hath sent out
A speedy pow'r to encounter you, my lord:
This is the news at full. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
But what at full I know, thou know'st no part;
I knowing all my peril, thou no art. Shakespeare.

4. The state of being satiated.
When I had fed them to the full. Jer. v. 7.

5. [Applied to the moon.] The time in which the moon makes a perfect orb.
Brains in rabbits, woodcocks, and calves, are full-est in the full of the moon. Bacon's Natural Hist.

FULL. adv.
1. Without abatement or diminution.

He full
Resplendent all his Father manifest Express'd. Milton.
In the unity of place they are full as scrupulous;
which many of their criticks limit to that very spot of ground where the play is supposed to begin. Dryd.
A modest blush the wears, not form'd by art;
Free from deceit his face, and full as free his heart.
Dryden.

The most judicious writer is sometimes mistaken after all his care; but the hasty critick, who judges on a view, is full as liable to be deceived. Dryden.

2. With the whole effect.
Suspect my courage, if I should not lay,
The pawn I proffer shall be full as good. Dryd. Virg.

'Tis the pencil, thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth to express the foam, which the painter, with all his skill, could not perform without it.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony,
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

3. Exactly.
Full in the centre of the sacred wood,
An arm ariseth of the Stygian flood. Addison.
Full nineteen sailors did the ship convey,
A shoal of nineteen dolphins round her play. Addis.

4. Directly.
He met her full, but full of wearfulness. Sidney.
He then confronts the bull,
And on his ample forehead aiming full,
The deadly stroke descending pierc'd the skull. Dryden.

At length resolv'd, he throws with all his force
Full at the temples of the warrior horse. Dryden.

5. It is placed before adverbs and adjectives, to intend or strengthen their signification.
Tell me why on your shield, so goodly scord'd,
Bear ye the picture of that lady's head?
Full lively in the semblant, though the substance dead. Spenser.

I was set at work
Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking Either for such men or such business. Shakefp.
Full well ye reject the commandment. Mar. vii. 9.
Adam was all in tears, and to his guide
Lamenting turn'd full sad. Milton's Paradise Lost.
You full little think that you must be the beginner of the discourse yourself. Mor's Divine Dial.
Full little thought of him the gentle knight. Dryd.
Full well the god his sister's envy knew,
And what her aims and what her arts pursue. Dryd.
There is a perquisite full as honest, by which you have the best part of a bottle of wine for yourself. Swift.

F U L

FULL is much used in composition to intimate any thing arrived at its highest state, or utmost degree.

FULL-BLOWN. adj. [full and blown.]
1. Spread to the utmost extent, as a perfect blossom.

My glories are past danger; they're full blown:
Things, that are blasted, are but in the bud. Denb.
My full-blown youth already fades apace;
Of our short being 'tis the shortest space! Dryden.

2. Stretched by the wind to the utmost extent.
He who with bold Cratinus is inspir'd,
With zeal and equal indignation fir'd;
Who at enormous villainy turns pale,
And steers against it with a full-blown sail. Dryden.

FULL-BOTTOMED. adj. [full and bottom.]
Having a large bottom.
I was obliged to sit at home in my morning-gown, having pawned a new suit of cloaths and a full-bottomed wig for a sum of money. Guardian.

FULL-EARED. adj. [full and ear.] Having the heads full of grain.
As flames roll'd by the winds conspiring force,
O'er full-ear'd corn, or torrents raging course. Denham.

FULL-EYED. adj. [full and eye.] Having large prominent eyes.

FULL-FED. adj. [full and fed.] Sated; fat; saginated.
All as a partridge plump, full-fed and fair,
She form'd this image of well bodied air. Pope.

FULL-LADEN. adj. [full and laden.] Laden 'till there can be no more added.
It were onst that so excellent a reward as the Gospel promises should stoop down, like fruit upon a full-laden bough, to be plucked by every idle and wanton hand. Tillotson.

FULL-SPREAD. adj. [full and spread.] Spread to the utmost extent.
How easy 'tis, when destiny proves kind,
With full-spread sails to run before the wind;
But those that 'gainst stiff gales laveering go,
Must be at once resolv'd and skillful too. Dryden.

FULL-SUMMED. adj. [full and summed.] Complete in all its parts.
The cedar stretched forth his branches, and the king of birds nested within his leaves, thick feathered, and with full-summed wings fastening his talons East and West; but now the eagle is become half naked. Horvel's Vocal Forest.

I need not instance in the habitual intemperance of rich tables, nor the evil accidents and effects of fulness, pride and lust, wantonness and softness. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

7. Plenty; wealth.

To lapse in fulness
'Is forer than to lie for need; and falsehood
Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

8. Struggling perturbation; swelling in the mind.

A principal fruit of friendship is the ease and discharge of the fulness of the heart, which passions of all kinds do cause and induce. Bacon's Essays.

9. Largeness; extent.

There wanted the fulness of a plot, and variety of characters to form it as it ought; and perhaps something might have been added to the beauty of the style. Dryden.

10. Force of sound, such as fills the ear; vigour.

This sort of pastoral derives almost its whole beauty from a natural ease of thought and smoothness of verse; whereas that of most other kinds consists in the strength and fulness of both. Pope.

F U L S O M E. adj. [from fulle, Saxon, foul.]

1. Nauseous; offensive.

He that brings fulsome objects to my view,
With nauseous images my fancy fills,
And all goes down like oxymel of squills. Roscommon.
How half the youth of Europe are in arms,
How fulsome must it be to itay behind,
And die of rank diseases here at home? Orway.

2. Rank; gross: to the smell.

White satyrion is of a dainty smell, if the plant puts forth white flowers only, and those not thin or dry, they are commonly of rank and fulsome smell. Bacon.

3. Lustful.

He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes. Shakespeare.

4. Tending to obscenity.

A certain epigram, which is ascribed to the emperor, is more fulsome than any passage I have met with in our poet. Dryden.

Our mechanick thefts will have their atoms never once to have fumbled in these their motions, nor to have produced any inept system. Cudworth.

2. To puzzle; to strain in perplexity.

Am not I a friend to help you out? You would have been fumbling half an hour for this excuse. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

3. To play childishly.

I saw him fumble with the sweets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his finger's end. Shakespeare.

F U M

To F U M B L E. v. a. To manage awkwardly.

As many farewells as be stars in heav'n,
With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to them,
He fumbles up all in one loose adieu. Shakespeare.

His greasy bald-pate choir
Came fumbling o'er the beads, in such an agony
They told 'em false for fear. Dry. Spanish Flyar.

F U M B L E R. n. s. [from fumble.] One who acts awkwardly.

F U M B L I N G L Y. adv. [from fumble.] In an awkward manner.

F U M E. n. s. [fumée French; fumus, Latin.]

1. Smoke.

Thus fighting fires a while themselves consume;
'But straight, like Turks, forc'd on to win or die,
They first lay tender bridges of their fumes,
And o'er the breach in unctuous vapours fly. Dryd.

2. Vapour; any volatile parts flying away.

Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs:
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes. Shakespeare.
It were good to try the taking of fumes by pipes, as they do in tobacco, or other things, to dry and comfort. Bacon.
In Winter, when the heat without is less, breath becomes so far condensed as to be visible, flowing out of the mouth in form of a fume, or crasser vapour; and may, by proper vessels, set in a strong freezing mixture, be collected in a considerable quantity. Woodward.

3. Exhalation from the stomach.

The fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brains of a man overcharged with it. Soutb.
Plung'd in sloth we lie, and snore supine,
As fill'd with fumes of undigested wine. Dryden.
Pow'r, like new wine, does your weak brain surprize,
And its mad fumes in your discourses rise;
But time these yielding vapours will remove:
Mean while I'll taste the sober joys of love. Dryden.

4. Rage; heat of mind; passion.

The fumes of his passion do really intoxicate and confound his judging and discerning faculty. Soutb.

5. Any thing unsubstantial.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassel so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

6. Idle conceit; vain imagination.

Plato's great year would have some effect, not in renewing the state of like individuals; for that is the fume of those, that conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influence upon these things below, than they have, but in gross. Bacon.
To lay aside all that may seem to have a shew of fumes and fancies, and to speak solids, a war with Spain is a mighty work. Bacon.

To F U M E. v. n. [fumer, French; fumo, Latin.]

1. To smoke.

Their pray'r's pass'd
Dimensionless through heav'nly doors; then clad
With incense, where the golden altar fum'd
By the great intercessor; came in light
Before their father's throne. Milton's Paradise Lost.
From thence the fuming trail began to spread,
And lambent glories danc'd about her head. Dryden.
Strait hover round the fair her airy band;
Some, as the sipp'd, the fuming liquor fann'd. Pope.

2. To vapour; to yield exhalations, as by heat.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Silenus lay,
Whose constant cups lay fuming to his brain,
And always boil in each extended vein. Roscommon.

3. To pass away in vapours.

We have
No anger in our eyes, no storm, no lightning:
Our hate is spent and fum'd away in vapour,
Before our hands be at work. Ben Jonson's Catiline.
Their parts are kept from fuming away by their fixity, and also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them. Cheyne.
The first fresh dawn then wak'd the gladden'd race,
Of uncorrupted man, nor blubb'd to see,

F U N

The sluggish sleep beneath its sacred beam;
For their light slumbers gentle fun'd away. Thomson.

4. To be in a rage; to be hot with anger.

When he knew his rival free'd and gone,
He swells with wrath; he makes outrageous moan:
He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground,
The hollow tow'r with clamours ring around. Dryden.

To F U M E. v. a.

1. To smoke; to dry in the smoke.

Those that serve for hot countries they used at first to fume, by hanging them upon long sticks one by one, and drying them with the smoke of a soft fire. Carew.

Fy, my lord, fy! a soldier, and afraid? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account? Shakespeare.

A bawd, sir, fy upon him!
But fy, my wand'ring muse, how thou dost stray!
Expectance calls thee now another way. Milton.

Nay, fy, what mean you in this open place?
Unhand me, or, I swear, I'll scratch your face:
Let go, for shame; you make me mad for spite:
My mouth's my own; and if you kiss, I'll bite. Dryden.

Fy, madam, he cried, we must be past all these gaities. Taylor.

G.

G A B

G Has two sounds, one from the Greek Γ, and the Latin, which is called that of the hard G, because it is formed by a pressure somewhat hard of the forepart of the tongue 'gainst the upper gum. This sound G retains before a, o, u, l, r; as, gate, go, gull. The other sound, called that of the soft G, resembles that of J, and is commonly, though not always, found before, e, i; as, gem, gibbet. Before n, at the end of a word, g is commonly melted away; as in the French, from which these words are commonly derived: thus, for benign, malign, condign, we pronounce benine, maline, condine. It is often silent in the middle of the words before b; as, might. The Saxon G, γ, seems to have had generally the sound of y consonant; whence gate is by rusticks still pronounced yate.

GA'BARDINE. n. f. [gavaridina, Italian.] A coarse frock; any mean dress.

My best way is to creep under his gabardine; there is no other shelter hereabouts. Shakespeare.

Three or four will outrage in apparel, huge hofs, monstrous hats, and gai'rish colours. Afcham.

I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen,
The presentation of but what I was;
A mother, only mock'd with two fair babes;
A dream of what thou wast, a gai'rish flag,
To be the aim of every dangerous shot. Shakefp.

There in close covert by some brook,
Where no profaner eye may look,
Hide me from day's gai'rish eye. Milton.

2. Extravagantly gay; flighty.

Fame and glory transport a man out of himself: it makes the mind loose and gai'rish, scatters the spirits, and leaves a kind of dissolution upon all the faculties. Sourb.

GAI'RISHNESS. n. f. [from gai'rish.]

1. Finery; flaunting gaudiness.

2. Flighty or extravagant joy.

Let your hope be without vanity, or gai'rishness of spirit, but sober, grave, and silent. Taylor.

GAIT. n. f. [gat, Dutch.]

1. Away; as, gang your gait.

Good youth, address thy gait unto her;
Be not denied access, stand at her door. Shakefp.

2. March; walk.

Nought regarding, they kept on their gait,
And all her vain allurements did forsake. Fairy Queen.

Thou art so lean and meagre waxen late,
That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gait. Hubb. Tale.

3. The manner and air of walking.

Great Juoo comes; I know her by her gait. Shakefppeare.

He had in his person, in his aspect, the appearance of a great man, which he preserved in his gait and motion. Clarendon.

A third, who, by his gait
And fierce demeanor, seems the prince of hell. Milton.

Leviathans
Wallowing, unwieldy, enormous in their gait. Milton.

I describ'd his way,
Bent all on speed, and mark'd his airy gait. Milton.

GALA'GE. n. f. A shepherd's dog. Not in use.

My heart-blood is well nigh frone, I feel;
And my galage grown salt to my heel. Spenser.

GALA'NGAL. n. f. [galange, French.] A medicinal root.

The lesser galangal is in pieces, about an inch or two long, of the thickness of a man's little finger; a brownish red colour, extremely hot and pungent. The larger galangal is in pieces, about two inches or more in length, and an inch in thickness: its colour is brown, with a faint cast of red in it: it has a disagreeable, but much less acrid and pungent taste. Hill.

GALA'XY. n. f. [γαλαξία; galaxie, Fr.]

The milky way; a stream of light in the sky, consisting of many small stars.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
Seen in the galaxy. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A brown, or which heaven would disband
The galaxy, and stars be tan'd. Cleveland.

Several lights will not be seen,
If there be nothing else between;
Men doubt, because they stand so thick i' th' sky,
If thou be stars that paint the galaxy. Cowley.
We dare not undertake to shew what advantage is brought to us by those innumerable stars in the galaxy. Bentley.

GALBANUM. n. f.

We meet with galbanum sometimes in loose granules, called drops of tears, which is the purest, and sometimes in large masses. It is soft, like wax, and ductile between the fingers; of a yellowish or reddish colour: its smell is strong and disagreeable. It is of a middle nature between a gum and a resin, being inflammable as a resin, and soluble in water as a gum, and will not dissolve in oil as pure resins do. It is the produce of an umbelliferous plant. Hill.

I yielded indeed a pleasant odour, like the best myrrh; as galbanum. Ecclef. xxiv. 15.

GALE. n. f. [gabling, hasty, sudden, German.] A wind not tempestuous, yet stronger than a breeze.

What happy gale
Blows you to Padua here, from old Verona? Shakefppeare.

Winds
Of gentlest gale Arabian odours fann'd
From their lost wings, and Flora's earliest smells. Milton.

Fresh gales and gentle air.
Umbria's green retreats,
Where western gales eternally reside. Addison.

GAL'EATED. adj. [galeatus, Latin.]

1. Covered as with a helmet.

A galeated elchiasus copped, and in shape somewhat more conick than any of the foregoing. Woodward on Fossils.

2. [In botany.] Such plants as bear a flower resembling an helmet, as the monkshood.

GALERI'ULATE. adj. [from galerus, Latin.] Covered as with a hat.

GAL'IOT. n. f. [galioite, French.] A little galley or sort of brigantine, built very slight and fit for chase. It carries but one mast, and two or three patereroes. It can both sail and row, and has sixteen or twenty seats for the rowers, with one man to each oar. DiB.

Barbarossa sent two notable pyrates with thirty galliots, who, landing their men, were valiantly encountered, and forced again to their galliots. Knolles's History.

GALL. n. f. (zeala, Saxon; galle, Dutch.)

1. The bile, an animal juice remarkable for its suppos'd bitterness.

Come to my woman's breast,
And take my milk for gall, you murthering ministers! Shakefppeare.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, hut sorrow's fall. Shakefp.

This position informs us of a vulgar error, terming the gall bitter, as their proverb implies, It's as bitter as gall; whereas there's nothing gustable sweeter; and what is most unctuous must needs partake of a sweet flavour. Harvey.

Gall is the greatest resolvent of curdled milk: Beerhaave has given at a time one drop of the gall of an eel with success. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. The part which contains the bile.

The married couple, as a testimony of future concord, did cast the gall of the sacrifice behind the altar. Brown.

3. Any thing extremely bitter.

Thither write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall. Shakefp. Cymbeline.

Poison be their drink!
Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest meat they taste! Shakefppeare.

She still insults, and you must still adore;
Grant that the honey's much, the gall is more. Dryd, Jew.

4. Rancour; malignity.

They did great hurt unto his title, and have left a perpetual gall in the mind of the people. Spenser on Ireland.

5. Anger; bitterness of mind.

Suppose your hero were a lover,
Though he before had gall and rage;
He grows dispirited and low,
He hates the fight, and shuns the blow. Prior.

6. A slight hurt by fretting off the skin.

[From the verb.]
This is the fatalist wound; as much superior to the former, as a gangrene is to a gall or scatch. Government of the Tongue.

7. [From galla.]

Galls or galnuts are preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on trees; but those of the oak only are used in medicine. We have Oriental and European galls: the Oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bigness of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their surface, of a very firm texture, and a disagreeable, acerb, and astringent taste. The European galls are of the same size, with perfectly smooth surfaces: they are light, often spongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a less austere taste, and are of much less value than the first sort. The general history of galls is this: An insect of the fly kind wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole deposits her egg: the lacerated vessels of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg, which, as soon as it is in its winged state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is seen, the maggot, or its remains, are sure to be found within. It has been observed, that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries: but this observation shall be confined to the medicinal galls; for all those excrecencies which we call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true galls; though less firm in their texture. Hill.

Besides the acorns, the oak beareth galls, oak-apples, and oak-nuts. Bacon's Natural History.

Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which name he comprehends all preternatural and morbose excrecencies, demonstrates that all such excrecencies, where any insects are found, are excited by some venenose liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed. Ray on the Creation.

The Aleppo galls, wherewith we make ink, are no other than cases of insects, which are bred in them. Derbam.

TO GALL. v. a. [galer, French.]

1. To hurt by fretting the skin.

I'll touch my point
With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly,
It may be death. Shakefp. Hamlet.

His yoke is easy, when by us embrac'd;
But loads and galls, if on our necks 'tis cast. Denbam.

A carrier, when he would think of a remedy for his galled horse, begins with casting his eye upon all things. Locke.

On the monarch's speech Achilles broke,
And furious thus, and interrupting spoke,
Tyrant, I well deserv'd thy galling chain. Pope.

2. To impair; to wear away.

He doth object, I am too great of birth;
And that my state being galled with my expence,
I seek to heal it only by his wealth. Shakefppeare.

If it should fall down in a continual stream like a river, it would gall the ground, wash away plants by the roots, and overthrow houses. Ray.

3. To tease; to fret; to vex.

In honour of that action, and to gall their minds who did not so much commend it, he wrote his book. Hooker.

What they seem contented with, even for that very cause we reject; and there is nothing but it pleaseth us the better, if we espy that it galleth them, Hooker.

When

When I shew justice,
I pity those I do not know;
Which a dismifs'd offence would after gall.
Shakespeare

All studies here I solemnly defy,
Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke.
Shak. Hen. IV.

No man commits any sin but his conscience smites him, and his guilty mind is frequently galled with the remembrance of it.
Tillotson

4. To harass; to mischief; to keep in a state of uneasiness.

The Helots had gotten new heart, and with divers sorts of shot from corners of streets and house-windows galled them.
Sidney

Light demilances from afar they throw,
Fasten'd with leathern thongs, to gall the foe.
Dryd. Æn.

In our wars against the French of old, we used to gall them with our long bows, at a greater distance than they could shoot their arrows.
Addison

To GALL. v. n. To fret.
I have seen you galling and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice.
Shakespeare

GALLANT. adj. [galant, French, from gala, fine dress, Spanish.]

1. Gay; well dressed; showy; splendid; magnificent.

A place of broad rivers, wherein shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ships pass thereby.
Is. xxiii. 21.

The gay, the wise, the gallant, and the grave,
Subdu'd alike, all but one passion have.
Waller

2. Brave; high spirited; daring; magnanimous.

Scorn, that any should kill his uncle, made him seek his revenge in manner gallant enough.
Sidney

But, fare thee well, thou art a gallant youth.
Shakespeare

A gallant man, whose thoughts fly at the highest game, requires no further insight.
Digby

3. Fine; noble; fracious.
There are no tricks in plain and simple faith;
But hollow men, like horses' hot at hand,
Make gallant shew and promise of their mettle.
Shakespeare

4. Courtly with respect to ladies.
He discoursed, how gallant and how brave a thing it would be for his highness to make a journey into Spain, and to fetch home his mistress.
Clarendon

When first the soul of love is sent abroad,
The gay troops begin
In gallant thought to plume their painted wings.
Thomson

GALLANT. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A gay, sprightly, airy, splendid man.
The new proclamation.
—What is't for?
—The reformation of our travell'd gallants,
That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and taylor.
Shakespeare

The gallants and lusty youths of Naples came and offered themselves unto Vatius.
Krollen

The gallants, to protect the lady's right,
Their tauchious brandish'd at the giddy spright.
Dryden

Gallants, look to't, you say there are no sprights;
But I'll come dance about your beds at nights.
Dryden

2. A whoremaster, who caresses women to debauch them.

One, worn to pieces with age, shews himself a young gallant.
Shakespeare

She had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant.
Addison's Spectator

Shakespeare

4. Courtship; refined address to women.
The martial Moors, in gallantry refin'd,
Invent new arts to make their charmers kind.
Granville

5. Vicious love; lewdness; debauchery.

It looks like a sort of compounding between virtue and vice, as if a woman were allowed to be vicious, provided she be not a profligate; as if there were a certain point where gallantry ends, and Infamy begins.
Swift

GALLEASS. n. f. [galeas, French.] A heavy low-built vessel, with both sails and oars. It carries three masts, but they cannot be lowered, as in a galley. It has thirty-two seats for rovers, and six or seven slaves to each. To carry three tire of guns at the head, and at the stern there are two tire of guns.
Dict.

The Venetians pretend they could set out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred galleys, and ten galleasses.
Addison on Italy

My father hath no less Than three great argosies, besides two galleasses, And twelve tight gallees.
Shakespeare

GALLEON. n. f. [galion, French.] A large ship with four or sometimes five decks, now in use only among the Spaniards.

I assured them that I would stay for them at Trinidad, and that no force should drive me thence, except I were sunk, or set on fire by the Spanish galleons.
Raleigh's Apology

The number of vessels were one hundred and thirty, whereof galleasses and galleons seventy-two goodly ships, like floating towers or castles.
Bacon's War with Spain

GALLERY. n. f. [galerie, French; derived by Du Cange from galeriu, low Latin, a fine room.]

1. A kind of walk along the floor of a house, into which the doors of the apartments open; in general, any building of which the length much exceeds the breadth.

In most part there had been framed by art such pleasant arbors, that, one answering another, they became a gallery aloft from tree to tree, almost round about, which below gave a perfect shadow.
Sidney

High lifted up were many lofty towers,
And goodly galleries fair overlaid.
Spenser

Your gallery
Have we pass'd through, not without much content.
Shaksp.

The row of return on the banquet side, let it be all stately galleries, in which galleries let there be three cupolas.
Bacon

A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,
Not to the foe yet known.
Denham

Nor is the shape of our cathedrals proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre, with galleries gradually overlooking each other; for into this condition the parish churches of London are driving apace, as appears by the many galleries every day built in them.

Granv.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches.
Addison

2. The seats in the playhouse above the pit, in which the meaner people sit.

While all its throats the gallery extends,
And all the thunder of the pit ascends.
Pope

GALLETYLE. n. f. I suppose this word has the same import with gallipot.

Make a compound body of glass and galletyle; that is, to have the colour milky like a chalcedon, being a stuff between a porcellane and a glass.
Bacon's Phys. Rem.

GALLEY. n. f. [galea, Italian; galere, French; derived, as some think, from galea, a helmet, pictured anciently on the prow; as others from γαλιότης, the swordfish; as others from galleon, expressing in Syriac men exposed to the sea. From galley come galeas, galleon, galliot.]

1. A vessel driven with oars, much in use in the Mediterranean, but found unable to endure the agitation of the main ocean.

Great Neptune grieved underneath the load
Of ships, hulks, gallees, barks and brigandines.
Fairfax

In the ages following, navigation did every where greatly decay, by the use of gallees, and such vessels as could hardly brook the ocean.
Bacon

Jalon ranged the coasts of Asia the Leds in an open boat or kind of galley.
Raleigh's History

On oozy ground his gallees moor;
Their heads are turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore.
Dryden

2. It is proverbially considered as a place of toilsome misery, because criminals are condemned to row in them.

The most voluptuous person, were he tied to follow his hawks and his hounds, his dice and his courtships every day, would find it the greatest torment that could befall him: he would fly to the mines and the gallees for his recreation, and to the spade and the mattock for a diversion from the misery of a continual uninterrupted pleasure.
South

GALLEY-SLAVE. n. f. [galley and slave.] A man condemned for some crime to row in the gallees.

As if one chain were not sufficient to load poor men, he must be clogged with innumerable chains: this is just such another freedom as the Turkish galley-slaves do enjoy.
Bramb

Hardened galley-slaves despise manumission.
Decay of Piety

The surges gently dash against the shore,
Flocks quit the plains, and galley-slaves their oar.
Garib

GALLIARD. n. f. [galliard, French; imagined to be derived from the Gaulish ard, genius; and gay.]

1. A gay, brisk, lively man; a fine fellow.
Selden is a galliard by himself.
Cleveland

2. An active, nimble, spritely dance. It is in both senses now obsolete.

I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was form'd under the star of a galliard.
Shakespeare's Twelfth Night

There's nought in France
That can be with a nimble galliard won:
You cannot revel into dukedoms there.
Shakespeare

If there be any that would take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on: as musicians use to do with those that dance too long galliards.
Bacon

The tripl'e and changing of times have an agreement with the changes of motion; as when galliard time and measure time are in the melody of one dance.
Bacon

GAILLARDISE. n. f. [French.] Merriment; exuberant gaiety. Not in use.

At my nativity my ascendant was the watery sign of Scorpius: I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden planer in me: I am no way facetious, nor disposed for the mirth and galliardise of company. Brown.

GALLICISM. n. f. [gallicisme, French; from gallicus, Latin.] A mode of speech peculiar to the French language: such as, he figured in controversy; he held this conduct; he held the same language that another had held before: with many other expressions to be found in the pages of Belinbroke.

In English I would have Gallicisms avoided, that we may keep to our own language, and not follow the French mode in our speech. Fulton on the Claff.

GALLIGASKINS. n. f. [Caligæ Gallo-Vasconum. Skinner.] Large open hose. Not used but in ludicrous language.

My galligaskins, that have long withstood The Winter's fury, and encroaching frosts, By time subdu'd, what will not time subdue, An horrid chasm disclose. Philipp.

GALLOON. n. f. [galon, French.] A kind of close lace made of gold or silver, or of silk alone.

To GALLOP. v. n. [galoper, French.] Derived by all the etymologists, after Budaus, from καλαραζω; but perhaps it comes from gant, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch; that is, to go on full speed.]

1. To move forward by leaps, so that all the feet are off the ground at once.

VOL. I.

I did hear

The galloping of horse: who was't come by? Sbak.

His steeds will be restrain'd,

But gallop lively down th' western hill. Donne.

In such a shape grim Saturn did refrain

His heav'nly limbs, and flow'd with such a mane,

When half surpriz'd, and fearing to be seen,

The leacher gallop'd from his jealous queen. Dryd.

2. To ride at the pace which is performed by leaps.

Seeing such streams of blood as threatened a downing life, we galloped toward them to part them. Sidney.

They 'gan espy

An armed knight towards them gallop fast,

That seem'd from some feared foe to fly. Fairy Qu.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one he meets, though he gallop all day full speed. Locke.

3. To move very fast.

The golden sun

Gallops the zodiack in his glitt'ring coach. Sbaksp.

Whom doth time gallop withal?

—With a thief to the gallows. Shakespeare.

He that rides post through a country may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie: such superficial ideas he may collect in galloping over it. Locke.

GALLOP. n. f. [from the verb.] The motion of a horse when he runs at full speed; in which, making a kind of a leap forwards, he lifts both his forelegs very near at the same time; and while these are in the air, and just upon the point of touching the ground, he lifts both his hindlegs almost at once. Farrier's Dict.

GALLOPER. n. f. [from gallop.]

1. A horse that gallops.

Mules bred in cold countries are much better to ride than horses for their walk and trot; but they are commonly rough gallopers, though some of them are very fleet. Morimer's Husbandry.

2. A man that rides fast, or makes great haste.

GALLOWAY. n. f. A horse not more than fourteen hands high, much used in the North; probably as coming originally from Galloway, a shire in Scotland.

Gallow the very wand'ers of the dark,

And make them keep their caves. Shakespeare.

GALLOWGLASSES. n. f.

1. It is worn likewise of footmen under their shirts of mail, the which footmen the Irish call gallowglasse: the which name doth discover them also to be ancient English; for gallogla signifies an English servitor or yeoman. And he being so armed in a long shirt of mail, down to the calf of his leg, with a long broad ax in his hand, was then pedes gravis armaturæ; and was instead of the footman that now weareth a corset, before the corset was used, or almost invented. Spenser on Ireland.

2. [Hammer, otherwise than Spenser.] Soldiers among the wild Irish, who serve on horseback.

A puissant and mighty pow'r

Of gallowglasse: and stout kernes,

Is marching hitherward in proud array. Sbaksp.

GALLOW. } n. f. [It is used by some in GALLOWES. } the singular; but by more only in the plural, or sometimes has another plural gallowes. Galgo, Gothick; gealga, Saxon; galge, Dutch; which some derive from gabalus furca, Latin; other^s from גבו high, others from gallu, Welsh, power; but it is probably derived like gallow, to fright, from azalpan, the gallows being the great object of legal terror.]

1. A beam laid over two posts, on which malefactors are langed.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows: in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, in his left hand a purse of money. Sidney.

I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were desolation of gaolers and gallowes. Sbaksp. Cymbeline.

I prophesied if a gallowes were on land, This fellow could not drown. Sbaksp. Tempest.

He took the mayor aside, and whispered him that execution must that day be done, and therefore required him that a pair of gallowes should be erected. Hayward.

 A gamester, the greater master he is in his art, the worse man he is, Bacon.
Gamesters for whole patrimonies play;
 The steward brings the deeds, which must convey
 The whole estate. Dryden's Juvenal.
 Could we look into the mind of a common gamester, we should see it full of nothing but trumps and matadores: her slumbers are haunted with kings, queens, and knaves. Addison.
 All the superfluous whims relate,
 That fill a female gamester's pate;
 What agony of soul she feels
 To see a knave's inverted heels. Swift.
 Her youngest daughter is run away with a gamester, a man of great beauty, who in dressing and dancing has no superior. Law.

 The quick dice,
 In thunder leaping from the box, awake
 The sounding gammon. Thomson's Autumn.

GA'MMUT. n. f. [gama, Italian.] The scale of musical notes.
 Madam, before you touch the instrument,
 To learn the order of my fingering,
 I must begin with rudiments of art,
 To teach you gamut in a briefer sort. Shakespeare.
 When by the gamut some musicians make
 A perfect song, others will undertake,
 By the same gamut chang'd, to equal it:
 Things simply good can never be unfit. Denne.
 Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
 That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;
 In songs and airs express their martial fire,
 Combat in trills, and in a seuge expire. Addison.

Those which only warble long,
And gargle in their throats a song. Waller.

So charm'd you were, you ceas'd a while to doat
On nonsense gargled in an eunuch's throat. Fenton.

GA'RGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A liquor with which the throat is washed.

His throat was washed with one of the gargles set down in the method of cure. Wifeman's Surgery.

GA'RGLION. n. f. An exudation of nervous juice from a bruise, or the like, which indurates into a hard immoveable tumour. Quincy.

GA'RGOL. n. f. A distemper in hogs. The signs of the gargol in hogs are, hanging down of the head; moist eyes, staggering, and loss of appetite. Mortimer.

GA'RLAND. n. f. [garlande, guirland, Fr.]

1. A wreath of branches or flowers. Strepson, with leavy twigs of laurel-tree, A garland made, on temples for to wear; For he then chosen was the dignity Of village-lord that Whitfuntide to bear. Sidney.

A reeling world will never stand upright,
'Till Richard wear the garland of the realm:
—How! wear the garland! do'st thou mean the crown?

—Ay, my good lord. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Then party-coloured flow'rs of white and red
She wove, to make a garland for her head. Dryd.

Vanquish again; though she be gone,
Whose garland crown'd the victor's hair,
And reign; though she has left the throne,
Who made thy glory worth thy care. Prior.

Her gods and godlike heroes rise to view,
And all her faded garlands bloom anew. Pope.

2. The top; the principal; the thing most prized.

With every minute you do change a mind,
And call him noble, that was now your hate,
Him vile, that was your garland. Shakespeare.

GA'RRLICK. n. f. [γάρρ, Saxon, a lance; and lick, the leek that shoots up in blades. Skinner. Allium, Lat.]

It has a bulbous root, consisting of many small tubercles included in its coats: the leaves are plain:
the flowers consist of six leaves, formed into a corym-bus on the top of the stalk; and are succeeded by subrotund fruit, divided into three cells, which contain roundish seeds. Miller.

Garlick is of an extremely strong smell, and of an acid and pungent taste. It is extremely active, as may be proved by applying plasters of garlick to the feet, which will give a strong smell to the breath. Hill.

Garlick has, of all our plants, the greatest strength; affords most nourishment, and supplies most spirits to those who eat little flesh. Temple.

'Tis mortal sin an onion to devour;
Each clove of garlick is a sacred powder:
Religious nations sure, and best abodes,
Where ev'ry orchard is o'er-run with gods. Tate.

GA'RRLICK Pear-tree. n. f. This tree is pretty common in Jamaica, and several other places of America, where it usually rises to the height of thirty or forty feet, and spreads into many branches. When the flowers fall off the pointal, it becomes a round fruit, which when ripe, has a rough brownish rind, and a mealy sweet pulp, but a strong scent of garlick. Miller.

GA'RRLICK Wild. n. f. A plant.

GARLICK EATER. n. f. [garlick and eat] A mean fellow.

You've made good work,
You and your apron men, that stood so much Upon the voice of occupation, and
The breath of garlick eaters. Shakespeare's Coriol.

GARMENT. n. f. [guariment, old French.] Any thing by which the body is covered; cloaths; dress.

Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones
Out of thy garments. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

Our leaf, once fallen, springeth no more; neither doth the sun or summer adorn us again with the garments of new leaves and flowers. Raleigh's Hist.

Fairest thing that shines below,
Why in this robe dost thou appear?
Would'st thou a while more perfect show,
Thou must at all no garment wear. Cowley.

Three worthy persons from his side it tore,
And dy'd his garment with their scatter'd gore. Waller.

The peacock, in all his pride, does not display half the colours that appear in the garments of a British lady when she is dressed. Addison's Spect.

Let

G A R

Let him that fues for the coat, i. e. the shirt, or inner garment, take the cloak also, is a proverbial phrase too; for in the truth of the letter, a shirt is no likely matter of a lawsuit, and signifies an uncontenting suffrage of such small losses. Kettlewell.

GARNER. n. f. [genier, French.] A place in which threshed grain is stored up.

Earth's increase, and soyson plenty,
Barns and garners cover empty. Shakespeare.

For sundry soes the rural realm surround;
The fieldmouse builds her garner under ground;
For gather'd grain the blind laborious mole,
In winding mazes, works her hidden hole. Dryd.

To GARNER. v. a. [from the noun.] To store as in garners.

There, where I have garner'd up my heart,
Where either I must live, or bear no life. Shakespeare.

GARNET. n. f. [garnato, Italian; granatus, low Latin: from its resemblance in colour to the grain of the pomegranate.]

The garnet is a gem of a middle degree of hardness, between the saphire and the common crystal. It is found of various sizes. Its surfaces are not so smooth or polite as those of a ruby, and its colour is ever of a strong red, with a plain admixture of blueish: its degree of colour is very different, and it always wants much of the brightness of the ruby. Hill.

The garnet seems to be a species of the carbuncle of the ancients: the Bohemian is red, with a slight cast of a flame-colour; and the Syrian is red, with a slight cast of purple. Woodward's Met. Fossils.

To GARNISH. v. a. [garnir, French.]

1. To decorate with ornamental appendages. There were hills which garnish'd their proud heights with stately trees. Sidney.

All within with flowers was garnish'd,
That, when mild Zephyrus amongst thum blew,
Did breathe out bounteous smells, and painted colours shew. Spenser.

With taper light
To seek the beauteous eye of heav'n to garnish,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Shakespeare.

Paradise was a terrestrial garden, garnish'd with fruits, delighting both the eye and the taste. Raleigh.
All the streets were garnish'd with the citizens, standing in their liveries. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. To embellish a dish with something laid round it.

With what expence and art, how richly dress'd!
Garnish'd with Sparagus, himself a treat!
No man lards fat pork with orange-peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spitchock'd eel. King's Cookery.

3. To fit with fetters. A cant term.

GARNISH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Ornament; decoration; embellishment. So are you, sweet, Ev'n in the lovely garnish of a boy. Shakespeare.

GARNISHMENT. n. f. [from garnish.] Ornament; embellishment.

The church of Sancta Gustiana in Padoua is a found piece of good art, where the materials being ordinary stone, without any garnishment of sculpture, ravish the beholders. Watson.

GARNITURE. n. f. [from garnish.] Furniture; ornament.

They conclude, if they fall short in garniture of their knees, that they are inferior in garniture of their heads. Gov. of Tongue.

Plain sense, which pleas'd your fires an age ago,
Is lost, without the garniture of show. Granville.
As nature has pour'd out her charms upon the female part of our species, so they are very studious in bestowing upon themselves the finest garnitures of art. Addison's Spectator.

G A R

GARROUS. adj. [from garum.] Resembling pickle made of fish.

In a civet-cat an offensive odour proceeds, partly from its food, that being especially fish; whereof this humour may be a garous excretion, and odious separation. Brown.

GARRAN. n. f. [Erse. It imports the same as gelding. The word is still retained in Scotland.] A small horse; a hobby. A Highland horse, which, when brought into the North of England, takes the name of galloway.

When he comes forth, he will make their cows and garrans to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons. Spenser.

Every man would be forced to provide Winter-fodder for his team, whereas common garrans thist upon grass the year round; and this would force men to the enclosing of grounds, so that the race of garrans would decrease. Temple.

GARRET. n. f. [garite, the tower of a citadel, French.]

1. A room on the highest floor of the house.

The mob, commission'd by the government,
Are feldom to an empty garret sent. Dryden.
John Bull skipped from room to room; ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garret. Arbutnot's John Bull.

On earth the god of wealth was made
Sole patron of the building trade;
Leaving the arts the spacious air,
With licence to build castles there:
And 'tis conceiv'd their old pretence,
To lodge in garrets, comes from thence. Swift.

2. Rotten wood. Not in use.

The colour of the shining part of rotten wood, by daylight, is in some pieces white, and in some pieces inclining to red, which they call the white and red garret. Bacon.

GARTH. n. f. [as if girth, from gird.] The bulk of the body measured by the girdle.

GAS. n. f. [A word invented by the chymists.] It is used by Van Helmont, and seems designed to signify, in general, a spirit not capable of being coagulated: but he uses it loosely in many senses. Harris.

GASCONA'DE. n. f. [French; from Gascou, a nation eminent for boasting.] A boast; a bravado.

Was it a gascouade to please me, that you said your fortune was increased to one hundred a year since I left you? Swift.

To GASCONA'DE. v. n. [from the noun.] To boast; to brag; to bluster.

To GASH. v. a. [from hacher, to cut, Fr. Skinner.] To cut deep so as to make a gaping wound; to cut with a blunt instrument so as to make the wound wide.

Where the Englishmen at arms had been defeated, many of their horses were found grievously gashed or gored to death. Hayward.

It is a keen instrument, and every one can cut and gash with it: but to carve a beautiful image requires art. Tillotson.

See me gash'd with knives,
Or fear'd with burning steel. Rowe's Royal Comv.
Streaming with blood, all over gash'd with wounds;
He reel'd, he groan'd, and at the altar fell. Philips.

GASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A deep and wide wound.

He glancing on his helm, made a large
And open gash therein; were not his target,
That broke the violence of his intent,
The weary soul from thence it would discharge. Spenser.

A perilous gash, a very limb lopt off. Shakespeare.

Hamilton drove Newton almost to the end of the lists: but Newton on a sudden gave him such a gash on the leg, that therewith he fell to the ground. Hayward.

But th' ethereal substance clos'd
Not long divisible; and from the gash
A stream of nectarous humour issuing flow'd. Milt.

2. The mark of a wound. I know not if this be proper.

I was fond of back-sword and cudgel play, and I now bear in my body many a black and blue gash and fear. Arbutnot.

GASKINS. n. f. [from Gascogne. See GALLIGASKINS.] Wide hose; wide breeches. An old ludicrous word.

If one point break, the other will hold;
Or, if both break, your gaskins fail. Shakespeare.

To GASP. v. n. [from gaze, Skinner; from gisse, Danish, to sob, Junius.]

1. To open the mouth wide; to catch breath with labour.

G A T

The sick for air before the portal gasp. Dryden.
They rais'd a feeble cry with trembling notes;
But the weak voice receiv'd their *gasp*ing throats.

The *gasp*ing head flies off; a purple blood
Flows from the trunk. Dryden's Æn.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew no longer air, but fire. Dryd.
A feantling of wit lay *gasp*ing for life, and groaning beneath a heap of rubbish. Dryden.

The rich countrymen in Austria were faint and *gasp*ing for breath. Brown's Travels.

Pale and faint,
He *gasp*s for breath; and, as his life flows from him,
Demands to see his friends. Addison's Caro.

2. To emit breath by opening the mouth convulsively.

I lay me down to gasp my latest breath;
The volves will get a breakfast by my death. Dryd.
He staggers round, his eyeballs roll in death,
And with short sobs he *gasp*s away his breath.

3. To long for. This sense is, I think, not proper, as nature never expresses desire by *gasp*ing.

The Cælian and his wife had the comfort to be under the same master, who, seeing how dearly they loved one another, and *gasp*d alter their liberty, demanded a most exorbitant price for their ransom.

GASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of opening the mouth to catch breath.

2. The short catch of breath in the last agonies.

His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name
Is as last gasp. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breath'd his last;
And to the latest gasp cry'd out for Warwick. Shak.

If in the dreadful hour of death,
If at the latest gasp of breath,

When the cold damp belews your brow,
You hope for mercy, shew it now. Addison.

TO GASP. v. a. [from gatz, Saxon. See AGHAST.] To make aghast; to fright;
to shock; to terrify; to fear; to affray.

large building.

Open the gate of mercy, gracious God!
My soul flies through these wounds to seek thee. Shak.

Gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbans on, without
Good-morrow to the sun. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

2. A frame of timber upon hinges to give a passage into inclosed grounds.

Know'st thou the way to Dover?
—Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath. Shak.

3. An avenue; an opening.

Austria had done nothing but wisely and politickly, in setting the Venetians together by the ears with the Turk, and opening a gate for a long war. Kneller.

GATEVEIN. n. f. The vena porta.

G A T

Being a king that loved wealth, he could not endure to have trade sick, nor any obstruction to continue in the gatevein which disperseth that blood.

Bacon's Henry VII.

GATEWAY. n. f. [gate and way.] A way through gates of inclosed grounds.

therer. Wotton.

To pay the creditor, that lent him his rent, he must gather up money by degrees. Locke.

4. To crop; to pluck.

What have I done?
To see my youth, my beauty, and my love
No sooner gain'd, but slighted and betray'd;
And like a rose just gather'd from the stalk,
But only smelt, and cheaply thrown aside,
To wither on the ground! Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

5. To assemble.

They have gathered themselves together against me. Job.

All the way we went there were gathered some people on both sides, standing in a row. Bacon.

gatherings when I come. 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

GATTEN-TREE. n. f. A species of Cornelian cherry.

GAUDE. n. f. [The etymology of this word is uncertain: Skinner imagines it may come from gaude, French, a yellow flower, yellow being the most gaudy colour. Junius, according to his custom, talks γάρως; and Mr. Lye finds gaude, from gwarwdio, Welsh, to cheat. It seems to me most easily deducible from gandium, Latin, joy; the cause of joy; a token of joy: thence aptly applied to any thing that gives or expresses pleasure. In Scotland this word is still retained, both as a showy bawble, and the person fooled. It also in Scotland denotes a yellow flower.]
An ornament; a fine thing; any thing worn as a sign of joy. It is not now much used.

He stole th' impression of her fantasy;

With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gaudes, conceits,
Knacks, trifles, nosegays sweetmeats. Shaksp.peare.
The sun is in the heav'n, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gaudes,
To give me audience. Shaksp. King Lear.

My love to Hermia
Is melted as the snow; seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gaude,
Which in my childhood I did doat upon. Shaksp.
So me bound for Guinea, golden sand to find,
Bore all the gaudes the simple natives wear;
Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,
For folded turbants finest holland bear. Dryd.

To GAUDE. v. a. [gaudeo, Latin.] To exult; to rejoice at any thing.
Go to a gossip's feast, and gaude with me,
After so long grief such nativity. Shaksp.peare.
GA'UDERY, n. f. [from gaude.] Finery; ostentatious luxury of dreis.

The triumph was not pageants and gaudery, but one of the wisest and noblest institutions that ever was. Bacon's Essays.
Age, which is but one remove from death, and should have nothing about us but what looks like a decent preparation for it, scarce ever appears, of late, but in the high mode, the flaunting garb, and utmost gaudery of youth, with cloaths as ridiculously, and as much in the fashion, as the person that wears them is usually grown out of it. South.
A plain suit, since we can make but one,
Is better than to be by tamish'd gaud'ry known. Dryden.

GA'UDILY, adv. [from gaudy.] Showily.
GA'UDINESS, n. f. [from gaudy.] Showiness; tinsel appearance.

GA'UDY, adj. [from gaude.] Showy; splendid; pompous; ostentatiously fine.
Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not express in fancy: rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shaksp.peare.
Fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
As thick and numberless
As the gay notes that people the sun-beams. Milton.
A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hopp'd from side to side. Dryden.

The Bavarian duke his brigades leads,
Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold. Philips.
A man who walks directly to his journey's end, will arrive thither much sooner than him who wanders aside to gaze at every thing, or to gather every gaudy flower. Watts.
It is much to be lamented, that persons so naturally qualified to be great examples of piety, should, by an erroneous education, be made poor and gaudy spectacles of the greatest vanity. Louv.
GA'UDY, n. f. [gaudium, Latin.] A feast; a festival; a day of plenty. A word used in the university.

He may surely be content with a fast to-day, that is sure of a gaudy to-morrow. Cheyne.
GAVE. The preterite of give.
Thou can't not every day give me thy heart;

Sounds are generated where there is no air at all. Bacon.

Whatever generates a quantity of good chyle, must likewise generate milk. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GENERATION. n. f. [from generate, generation. French.]

1. The act of begetting or producing.
Seals make excellent impressions; and so it may be thought of sounds in their first generation: but then the dilation of them, without any new sealing, shews they cannot be impressions. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
He longer will delay, to hear thee tell
His generation, and the rising birth
Of nature, from the unapparent deep. Milton.

If we deduce the several races of mankind in the several parts of the world from generation, we must imagine the first numbers of them, who in any place agree upon any civil constitutions, to assemble as so many heads of families whom they represent. Temple.

2. A family; a race.
Y'are a dog.
—Thy mother's of my generation: what's she, if I be a dog? Shakespeare's Timon.

3. Progeny; offspring.
The barb'rous Scythian.
Or he that makes his generation messes,
To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosom
Be as well neighbour'd. Shakespeare's King Lear.

4. A single succession; one gradation in the scale of genealogical descent.
This generation shall not pass 'till all these things be fulfilled. Matt. xxiv. 34.
In the fourth generation they shall come hither again. Gen.
A marvellous number were excited to the conquest of Palestine, which with singular virtue they performed, and held that kingdom some few generations. Raleigh's Essays.

5. An age.
By some of the ancients a generation was fixed at an hundred years; by others at an hundred and ten;
by others at thirty-three, thirty, twenty-five, and twenty: but it is remarked, that the continuance of generations is so much longer as they come nearer to the more ancient times. Caimet.
Every where throughout all generations and ages of the Christian world, no church ever perceived the word of God to be against it. Hooker.

GENERATIVE. adj. [generatif, French, from genero, Latin.]

1. Having the power of propagation.
He gave to all, that have life, a power generative, thereby to continue their species and kinds.
Raleigh's History.
Ingrains and kernels the greatest part is but the nurtiment of that generative particle, so disproportionable unto it. Brown.

2. Prolifick; having the power of production; fruitful.
If there hath been such a gradual diminution of the generative faculty upon the earth, why was there not the like decay in the production of vegetables?
Bentley.

GENERATOR. n. f. [from genero, Latin.]
The power which begets, causes, or produces,
Imagination assimilates the idea of the generator into the reality in the thing engendered. Brown.

GENERICAL. } adj. [generique, French;
GENERIC. } from genus, Latin.]

That which comprehends the genus, or distinguishes from another genus, but does not distinguish the species.

The word consumption being applicable to a proper, and improper to a true and bastard consumption, requires a generical description quadrate to both. Harvey on Consumptions.

GENERALLY. adv. [from generick.] With regard to the genus, though not the species.

These have all the essential characters of sea-shells, and shew that they are of the very same specific gravity with those to which they are so generically allied. Woodward.

GENEROUSITY. n. f. [generosité, French; generositas, Latin.] The quality of being generous; magnanimity; liberality.
Can he be better principled in the grounds of true virtue and generosity than his young tutor is?

With manners generous as his noble blood. Pope.
The gen'rous god who wit and gold refines,
And ripens spirits as he ripens mines. Pope.
His gen'rous spouse, Theano, heav'nly fair,
Nurs'd the young stranger with a mother's care. Pope.
Pray for others in such forms, with such length, importunity, and earnestness, as you use for yourself;
and you will find all little ill-natur'd passions die away, your heart grows great and generous, delighting in the common happiness of others, as you used only to delight in your own. Law.

3. It is used of animals. Spritely; daring; courageous.
So the imperial eagle does not stay
Till the whole carcase he devour,
As if his gen'rous hunger underfoot
That he can never want plenty of food,
He only sucks the tasteless blood. Cowley.
Actæon spies
His op'ning hounds, and now he hears their cries:
A gen'rous pack. Addison.

4. Liberal; munificent.
When from his vest the young companion bore
The cup the gen'rous landlord own'd before,
And paid profusely with the precious bowl,
The stinted kindness of this churlish soul. Parnel.
Fast by the margin of her native flood,
Whose wealthy waters are well known to fame,
Fair as the bordering flowers the prince's flood,
And rich in bounty as the gen'rous stream. Heigh.

5. Strong; vigorous.
Having in a digestive furnace drawn off the ardent spirit from some good sack, the phlegm, even in this generous wine, was copious. Boyle.
Those who in southern climes complain,
From Phoebus' rays they suffer pain,
Melt own that pain is well repaid,
By gen'rous wines beneath a shade. Swift.

GENET. n. f. [French. The word originally signified a horseman, and perhaps a gentleman or knight.] A small-sized well-proportioned Spanish horse.
You'll have your nephews neigh to you; you'll have coufers for cousins, and genets for germanes.
Shakespeare's Orsello.

It is no more likely that frogs should be engendered in the clouds, than Spanish genets be begotten by the wind. Ray.

He shews his statue too, where plac'd on high,
The genet underneath him seems to fly. Dryden.

GENETHLI'ACAL. adj. [γενεθλιακον.] Pertaining to nativities as calculated by astronomers; shewing the configurations of the stars at any birth.

The night immediately before he was slighting
the art of those foolish astrologers, and genethliacal ephemerists, that use to pry into the horoscope of nativities. Howell's Vocal Forest.

GENETHLI'ACKS. n. f. [from γενεθλιακον.] The science of calculating nativities, or predicting the future events of life from the stars predominant at the birth.

GENETHLI'ATICK. n. f. [γενεθλιακον.] He who calculates nativities.
The truth of astrological predictions is not to be referred to the constellations: the genethliaticks conjecture by the disposition, temper, and complexion of the person. Drummond.

GENE'VA. n. f. [A corruption of genevre,
French, a juniper-berry.]
We used to keep a distilled spirituous water of Juniper in the shops. At present only a better kind is distilled from the juniper-berry: what is commonly sold is made with no better an ingredient than oil of turpentine, put into the still, with a little common salt and the coarsest spirit. Hill's Mat. Med.

GENIAL. adj. [genialis, Latin.]

Broom on the Odyssey.

GEOGRAPHY. n. f. [γῆ and γραφή; geographie, French.] Geography, in a strict sense, signifies the knowledge of the circles of the earthly globe, and the situation of the various parts of the earth.

When it is taken in a little larger sense, it includes the knowledge of the seas also; and in the largest sense of all, it extends to the various customs, habits, and governments of nations. Watts.

Olympus is extolled by the Greeks as attaining unto heaven; but geography makes slight account hereof, when they discourse of Andes or Teneriff.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

According to ancient fables the Argonauts sailed up the Danube, and from thence passed into the Adri-atick, carrying their ships upon their shoulders; a mark of great ignorance in geography. Arbutnot.

...er'd the height and bigness of Hercules by his foot?
Stillingfleet.
 Does not this wise philosopher assert,
 That the vast orb, which casts so fair his beams,
 Is such, or not much bigger than he seems?
 That the dimensions of his glorious face
 Two geometrick feet do scarce surpass?
Blackmore.
 3. Disposed according to geometry.
Geometrick jasper seemeth of affinity with the lapis sanguinalis described by Boetius; but it is certainly one sort of lapis cruciformis. Grew's Mus.
GEOMETRICALLY. adv. [from geometricus.] According to the laws of geometry.
 'Tis possible geometrically to contrive such an artificial motion as shall be of greater swiftness than the revolutions of the heavens. Wilkins's Math.

GEOMETRICIAN. n. s. [γεωμετρικός.] One skilled in geometry; a geometer.
 Although there be a certain truth, geometricians would not receive satisfaction without demonstration thereof. Brown.
 How easily does an expert geometrician, with one glance of his eye, take in a complicated diagram, made up of many lines and circles!
Watts.
To GEOMETRIZE. v. a. [γεωμετρίω.] To act according to the laws of geometry.
 We obtained good store of crystals, whose figures were differing enough, though prettily shaped, as if nature had at once affected variety in their figuration, and yet confined herself to geometrize. Boyle.
GEOMETRY. n. s. [γεωμετρία; geometrie, French.] Originally signifies the art of measuring the earth, or any distances or dimensions on or within it: but it is now used for the science of quantity, extension, or magnitude abstractedly considered, without any regard to matter.
Geometry is usually divided into speculative and practical; the former of which contemplates and treats of the properties of continued quantity abstractedly; and the latter applies these speculations and theorems to use and practice. Harris.
 In the muscles alone there seems to be more geometry than in all the artificial engines in the world. Ray on the Creation.
 Him also for my censor I disdain,
 Who thinks all science, as all virtue, vain;
 Who counts geometry and numbers toys,
 And with his foot the sacred dust destroys. Dryd.
GEOPONICAL. adj. [γῆ and πονός; geoponique, French.] Relating to agriculture; relating to the cultivation of the ground.

things; and it is less dishonourable to abridge a petty charge than to stoop to petty gettings. Bacon.
The meaner families return a small share of their gettings, to be a portion for the child. Swift.

GE'WGAW. n. f. [געזאך, Saxon; joyau, French.] A showy trifle; a toy; a bauble; a splendid plaything.
That metal they exchanged for the meanest trifles and gewgaws which the others could bring. Abbot.
Prefer that which Providence has pronounced to be the staff of life, before a glittering gewgaw that has no other value than what vanity has set upon it. L'Estrange.
As children, when they throw one toy away, straight a more foolish gewgaw comes in play. Dryden.
A heavy gewgaw, call'd a crown, that spread about his temples, drown'd his narrow head, and would have crushed it. Dryden's Juvenal.
Some loose the bands of ancient friendship, cancel nature's laws for pagantry and tawdry gewgaws. Philips.
The first images were fans, silks, ribbands, laces, and many other gewgaws, which lay so thick that the whole heart was nothing else but a toyshop. Addison's Guardian.

GE'WGAW. adj. Splendidly trifling; showy without value.
Let him that would learn the happiness of religion, see the poor gewgaw happiness of Feliciana. Law's Serious Call.

GHA'STFUL. adj. [גאך and fulle, Saxon.] Dreary; dismal; melancholy; fit for walking spirits. Obsolete;
Here will I dwell apart,
In ghastful grave, 'till my last sleep
Do close mine eyes.
Help me, ye baneful birds, whose striking sound
Is sign of dreary death. Spenser's Pastorals.

GHA'STLINESS. n. f. [from ghastly.] Horror of countenance; resemblance of a ghost; paleness.
GHA'STLY. adj. [גאך, or ghost and like.]
1. Like a ghost; having horror in the countenance; pale; dreadful; dismal.
Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?
—O, I have past a miserable night;
So full of ugly sights, of ghastly dreams,
So full of dismal terror was the time. Shakespeare.
Envy quickly discovered in court Solymans changed countenance upon the great bass, and began now to shew her ghastly face. Knolles.
Death
Ginn'd horrible a ghastly smile, to hear
His famine should be fill'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Those departed friends, whom at our last separation we saw disfigured by all the ghastly horrors of death, we shall then see assisting about the majestic throne of Christ, with their once vile bodies transfigured into the likeness of his glorious body, mingling their glad acclamations with the hallelujahs of thrones, principalities and powers. Boyle.
He came, but with such alter'd looks,
So wild, so ghastly, as if some ghost had met him,
All pale and speechless. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
I did not for these ghastly visions send;
Their sudden coming does some ill portend. Dryden.

2. Horrible; shocking; dreadful.
To be less than gods
Disdain'd; but meaner thoughts learn'd in their sight,
Mangled with ghastly wounds through plate and mail. Milton.
I who make the triumph of to-day,
May of to-morrow's pomp one part appear,
Ghastly with wounds, and lifeless on the bier! Prior.

GHA'STNESS. n. f. [from גאך, Saxon.] Ghastliness; horror of look. Not used.
Look you pale, mistress?
Do you perceive the ghastness of the eye? Shakespeare.

GH'ERKIN. n. f. [from gurche, German, a cucumber.] A small pickled cucumber. Skinner.

GIA

To GHESS. v. n. [See To G'WESS. Ghejs is by critics considered as the true orthography, but ghejs has universally prevailed.] To conjecture.

GHOST. n. f. [גאך, Saxon.]
1. The soul of man.
Vex not his ghost: O, let him pass! He hates him, That would upon the rack of this rough world stretch him out longer. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Often did I strive
To yield the ghost; but still the envious flood kept in my soul. Shakespeare's Richard III.

2. A spirit appearing after death.
The mighty ghosts of our great Harrys rose,
And armed Edwards look'd with anxious eyes,
To see this fleet among unequal foes,
By which fate promis'd them their Charles should rise. Dryden.

3. To give up the GHOST. To die; to yield up the spirit into the hands of God.
Their shadows seem
A canopy most fatal, under which
Our army lies ready to give up the ghost. Shakespeare.

4. The third person in the adorable Trinity, called the Holy Ghost.
To GHOST. v. n. [from the noun.] To yield up the ghost; to die. Not in use.
Eurymachus taking leave of Lucretia, precipitated her into such a love-fit, that within a few hours she ghested. Sidney.

To GHOST. v. a. To haunt with apparitions of departed men. Obsolete.
Julius Caesar
Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghested,
There saw you labouring for him. Shakespeare.

GI'AMBEUX. n. f. [jambes, French.] Legs, or armour for legs; greaves.
The mortal steel spiteously entail'd,
Deep in their flesh, quite through the iron walls,
That a large purple stream adown their gi'ambeux fall. Spenser.

GIANT. n. f. [geant, French; gigas, Lat.] A man of size above the ordinary rate of men; a man unnaturally large. It is observable, that the idea of a giant is always associated with pride, brutality, and wickedness.
Now does he feel his axle
Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe
Upon a dwarfish thief. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbans on, without
Good-morrow to the sun. Shakefp. Cymbeline.

Woman's gentle brain
Could not drop forth such giant rude invention;
Such Ethiop words. Shakefp. As you like it.

Fierce faces threat'ning wars,
Giants of mighty bone, and bold emprise! Milton.
Those giants, those mighty men, and men of renown, far exceeded the proportion, nature, and strength of those giants remembered by Moses of his own time. Raleigh's History.

The giant brothers, in their camp, have found
I was not forc'd with ease to quit my ground. Dryd.
By weary steps and slow

The groping giant with a trunk of pine Explor'd his way. Addison.

Neptune, by pray'r repentant, rarely wou,
Afflicts the chief I'avege his giant son,
Great Polyphemus of more than mortal might. Pepe.

GI'ANTESS. n. f. [from giant.] A she-giant; a woman of unnatural bulk and height.

I had rather be a gianteſs, and lie under mount Pelion. Shakeſpeare.

Were this subject to the cedar, she would be able to make head against that huge gianteſs. Howel.

GI'ANTLIKE. } adj. [from giant and like.]

GI'ANTLY. } Gigantick; vast; bulky.

Single courage has often, without romance, overcome giantly difficulties. Decay of Piety.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, which they are deplorably strangers to, and those unanswerable doubts and difficulties, which, over their cups, they pretend to have against Christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to deſiſt his money, the proud man not to adore himſelf, and I, dare undertake that all their giantlike objections against the Christian religion shall pre-ſently vaniſh and quit the field. South.

GI'ANTSHIP. n. f. [from giant.] Quality or character of a giant.

His giantſhip is gone ſomewhat creſt fallen,
Stalking with leſs unconſcious ſtrides,
And lower looks. Milton's Agoniſtes.

GI'BBE. n. f. Any old worn-out animal.
Hannmer.

For who that's but a queen, fair, ſober, wiſe,
Would from a paddock, from a but, a gibbe,
Such dear concernings hide? Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

To GI'BBER. v. u. [from jabber.] To ſpeak inarticulately.

The ſheeted dead

Did ſqueak and gibber in the Roman ſtreets. Shakeſp.

GI'BBERTII. n. f. [Derived by Skinner from galer, French, to cheat; by others conjectured to be formed by corruption from jabber. But as it was anciently written gehriſb, it is probably derived from the chymical cant, and originally implied the jargon of Geber and his tribe.]
Cant; the private language of rogues and gipſeys; words without meaning.

Some, if they happen to hear an old word, albeit very natural and ſignificant, cry out ſtraightway, that we ſpeak no English, but gibberſb.

Spencer.

Some of both ſexes writing down a number of letters, juſt as it came into their heads; upon reading this gibberſb, that which the men had wrote ſounded like High Dutch, and the other by the women like Italian. Swift.

GI'BBET. n. f. [gibet, French.]

1. A gallows; the poſt on which malefactorſ are hanged, or on which their carcaſes are expoſed.

When was there ever curſed a theiſt brought Unto the gibbet, but he did adore
That bleſſed pow'r which he had ſet at nought?
Davies.

You ſcandal to the ſtock of verſe, a gibbet
Able to bring the gibbet in diſgrace. Cleaveland.

Haman ſuffered death himſelf upon the very gibbet that he had provided for another. L'Eſtrange.

Papers lay ſuch principles to the Tories, as, if they were true, our next buſineſs ſhould be to erect gibbets in every pariſh, and hang them out of the way. Swift.

2. Any tranſverſe beams.

bous*.] Convexity; prominence; protuberance.

When ſhips, ſailing contrary ways, loſe the ſight one of another, what ſhould take away the ſight of ſhips from each other, but the gibboſity of the in-

GI'BBOUS. adj. [gibbus, Latin; gibbeux,
French.]

1. Convex; protuberant; ſwelling into inequalities;

The bones will riſe, and make a gibbous member.
Wiſeman.

A pointed ſtinty rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back.
Dryden

The ſea, by this acceſs and receſs, ſhuffling the empty ſhells, wears them away, reducing thoſe that are concave and gibbous to a flat. Woodward.

2. Crookbacked.

I demand how the camels of Baſtria came to have two bunches on their back, whereas the camels of Arabia have but one? How oxen, in ſome, countries, began and continue gibbous, or hunchbacked? Brown.

GI'BBOUSNESS. n. f. [from gibbous.] Con-vexity; prominence.

To make the convexity of the earth diſcernible, ſuppoſe a man liſted in the air, that he may have a ſpacious horizon; but then, becauſe of the diſ-tance, the convexity and gibboſneſs would vaniſh away, and he would only ſee a great circular flat.
Benley's Sermons.

GIBCAT. n. f. [gib and cat.] An old worn-out cat.

I am as melancholy as a gibcat, or a lugg'd bear.
Shakeſpeare.

To GIBE. v. n. [gaber, old French, to ſneer, to ridicule.] To ſneer; to join cenſoriousneſs with contempt.

They ſeem to imagine that we have erected of late a frame of ſome new religion, the furniture whereof we ſhould not have borrowed from our enemies, leſt they ſhould afterwards laugh and gibe
at our party. Hooker.

When he ſaw her toy, and gibe, and geer,
And paſs the bounds of modeſt merry make,
Her dalliance he deſpis'd. Spencer.

Why that's the way to choke a gibing ſpirit,
Whoſe influence is begot of that looſe grace
Which ſhallow laughing hearers give to fools. Shak.

Thus with talents well endu'd

To be ſcurrilous and rude,
When you peitly raiſe your ſnout,
Fear and gibe, and laugh and ſhout. Swift.

To GIBE. v. a. To reproach by contemptuous hints; to ſtout; to ſcoff; to ridicule; to treat with ſcorn; to ſneer;
to taunt.

When rioting in Alexandria, you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did gibe my miſſive out of audience. Shakeſpeare.

Draw the beaſts as I deſcribe them,
From their features, while I gibe them. Swift.

GIBF. n. f. [from the verb.] Sneer; hint of contempt by word or look; ſcoff; act or expreſſion of ſcorn; taunt.

Mark the ſneers, the gibes, and notable ſcorns
That dwell in ev'ry region of his face. Shakeſpeare.

The rich have ſtill a gibe in ſtore,
And will be moniſtrous witty on the poor. Dryden.

If they would hate from the bottom of their hearts, their averſion would be too ſtrong for little gibes every moment. Speſtator.

But the dean, if this ſecret ſhould come to his ears,
Will never have done with his gibes and his jeers.
Swift.

GI'BER. n. f. [from gibe.] A ſneerer; one who turns others to ridicule by contemptuous hints; a ſcoffer; a taunter.

from gobbet, gobbet: according to Juntius more properly from gibier, game, Fr.]
The parts of a gooſe which are cut off before it is roasted.

'Tis holyday; provide me better cheer:
'Tis holyday; and ſhall be round the year:
Shall I my houſhold gods and geoius cheat,
To make him rich who grudges me my meat?
That he may loll at eaſe; and pamper'd high,
When I am laid, may feed on giblet pie. Dryden.

GI'BSTAFF. n. f.

I am bound -
To Persia, and want gilders for my voyage. Shakespeare.
- GILDING. n. f. [from gild.] Gold laid on any surface by way of ornament.
Silvering will lully and canker more than gilding, which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, is profit. Bacon.
The church of the Annunciation, all but one corner of it, is covered with statues, gilding, and paint. Addison on Italy.
- Could laureate Dryden Pimp and Fry'r engage,
And I not strip the gilding off a knave, Unplac'd unpension'd, no man's heir or slave? Pope.
- GILL. n. f. [agulla, Spanish; gula, Latin.]
1. The apertures at each side of a fish's head.
The Leviathan,
Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,
And seems a moving land, and at his gills
Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out a sea. Milton.
Fishes perform respiration under water by the gills. Ray.
He hath two gill-fins; not behind the gills, as most fishes, but before them. Walton.
'Till

G I M

'Till they of farther passage quite bereft,
Were in the mesh with gills entangl'd left. King.

2. The flaps that hang below the beak of a fowl.
The turkeycock hath great and swelling gills, and the hen hath less. Bacon's Natural History.

3. The flesh under the chin.
In many there is no paleness at all; but, contrariwise, redness about the cheeks and gills, which is by the sending forth of spirits in an appetite to revenge. Bacon's Natural History.
Like the long bag of flesh hanging down from the gills of the people in Piedmont. Swift.

4. [Gilla, barbarous Latin.] A measure of liquids, containing the fourth part of a pint.
Every bottle must be rince'd with wine: some, out of mistaken thrift, will rince a dozen with the same: change the wine at every second bottle: a gill may be enough. Swift.

5. A kind of measure among the tinner.
They measure their block-tin by the gill, which containeth a pint. Carew.

6. In the northern counties it is half a pint of liquid measure.

7. [From gillian, the old English way of writing Julian, or Juliana.] The appellation of a woman in ludicrous language.
I can, for I will,
Here at Burley o' th' Hill,
Give you all your fill,
Each Jack with his Gill. Ben Jonson's Gypsies.

8. [Chelidonium.] The name of a plant; ground-ivy.

9. Malt liquor medicated with ground-ivy.

GILLHOUSE. n. f. [gill and house.] A house where a gill is sold.
Thee shall each alehouse, thee each gillhouse mourn,
And answer'ing ginshops sourer sighs return. Pope.

GILLYFLOWER. n. f. [Either corrupted from Julyflower, or from girefle, French.] Gillyflowers or rather Julyflowers, so called from the month they blow in, may be reduced to these sorts; red and white, purple and white, scarlet and white. Mortimer's Husbandry.
In July come gillyflowers of all varieties. Bacon.
Fair is the gillyflower of gardens sweet,
Fair is the marygold, for pottage meet. Gay's Past.

GILT. n. f. [from gild.] Golden show; gold laid on the surface of any matter.
Now obsolete.
Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd,
With rainy marching in the painful field. Shakespeare.
When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mockt thee for too much curiosity: in thy rags thou know'st none, but art despised for the contrary. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.

GILT. The participle of GILD, which see.

GILT HEAD. n. f. [gilt and head.]

1. A sea fish. Diet.

He blended together the livers of giltheads, the brains of pheasants and peacocks, tongues of phenicopters, and the melts of lampres. Hakewill.

GILT-TAIL. n. f. [gilt and tail.] A worm so called from his yellow tail.

GIM. adj. [An old word.] Neat; spruce; well dressed.

GIMCRACK. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner to be ludicrously formed from gin, derived from engine.] A slight or trivial mechanism.
For though these gimcracks were away,
However, more reduc'd and plain,
The watch would still a watch remain;
But if the horal orb ceases,
The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.
What's the meaning of all these trigrams and gimcracks? Jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cross his grounds? Arbutnot.

G I N

GIMLET. n. f. [gibelet, guimbelet, French.] A borer with a screw at its point.
The gimlet hath a worm at the end of its bit. Maxon.

GIMMAL. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner and Ainsworth to be derived from gimellus, Latin, and to be used only of something consisting of correspondent parts, or double. It seems rather to be gradually corrupted from geometry or geometrical. Any thing done by occult means is vulgarly said to be done by geometry.] Some little quaint devices or pieces of machinery. Hammer.
I think by some odd gimmals or device
Their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on,
Else they could not hold out so as they do. Shakespeare.

GIMMER. n. f. [See GIMMAL.] Movement; machinery.
The holding together of the parts of matter has so confounded me, that I have been prone to conclude with myself, that the gimmers of the world hold together not so much by geometry as some natural magicke. Moor's Divine Dialogues.

GIMP. n. f. [See GIM. Gimp, in old English, is neat, spruce.] A kind of silk twist or lace.

GIN. n. f. [from engine.]

1. A trap; a snare.
As the day begins,
With twenty gins we will the small birds take,
And pastime make. Sidney.
Which two, through treason and deceitful gin,
Hath slain sir Mordant. Spenser.
So strives the woodcock with the gin;
So doth the coney struggle in the net. Shakespeare.
Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty.
If those, who have but sense, can thum
The engines that have them annoy'd?
Little for me had reason done,
If I could not thy gins avoid. Ben Jonson's Forest.
I know thy trains,
Thou dearly to my coil, thy gins and toils;
No more on me have pow'r, their force is null'd. Milton.

He made a planetary gin,
Which rats would run their own heads in,
And come on purpose to be taken,
Without th' expence of cheese and bacon. Hudibras.
Keep from slaying fougere thy skin,
And ancle free from iron gin. Hudibras.

2. Any thing moved with screws, as an engine of torture, Typhæus' joints were stretched on a gin. Spencer.

3. A pump worked by rotatory sails.
The delis would be so flown with waters, it being impossible to make any adits or foughs to drain them, that no gins or machines would suffice to lay and keep them dry. Ray.
A bituminous plate, alternately yellow and black, formed by water drivelling on the outside of the gin, pump of Mostyn coalpits. Woodward on Fossils.

4. [Contracted from GENEVA, which see.] The spirit drawn by distillation from juniper berries.
This calls the church to deprecate our sin,
And hurls the thunder of our laws on gin. Pope.
And answer'ing ginshops sourer sighs return. Pope.

GINGER. n. f. [zinziber, Latin; gingero, Italian.]
The flower consists of five leaves, shaped somewhat like those of the Iris; these are produced in the head or club, each coming out of a separate leafy scale. The ovary becomes a triangular fruit, having three cells which contain seeds. Miller.
The root of ginger is of the tuberous kind, knotty, crooked, and irregular; of a hot, acrid, and pungent taste, though aromatick, and of a very agreeable smell. The Indians eat both the young shoots of the leaves and the roots themselves. Hill.

G I P

Or wasting ginger round the streets to go,
And visit alehouse where ye first did grow. Pope.

GINGERBREAD. n. f. [ginger and bread.] A kind of farinaceous sweetmeat made of dough, like that of bread or biscuit, sweetened with treacle, and flavoured with ginger and some other aromatick seeds. It is sometimes gilt.
An' I had but one penny in the world, thou should'st have it to buy gingerbread. Shakespeare.
Her currants there and gooseberries were spread,
With the inticing gold of gingerbread. King's Cook.
'Tis a loss you are not here, to partake of three weeks frost, and eat gingerbread in a booth by a fire upon the Thames. Swift.

GINGERLY. adv. [I know not whence derived.] Cautiously; nicely.
What is't that you
Took up so gingerly? Shakespeare.

GINGERNESS. n. f. Niceness; tenderness. Diet.

GINGIVAL. adj. [gingiva Latin.] Belonging to the gums.
Whilst the Italians strive to cut a thread in their pronunciation between D and T, so to sweeten it, they make the occlusæ appulse, especially the gingival, softer than we do, giving a little of perviousness. Holder's Elements of Speech.

To GINGLE. v. n.

1. To utter a sharp clattering noise; to utter a sharp noise in quick succession.
The foot goes black that was with dirt embrown'd,
And in thy pocket gingling halfpence found. Gay.
Once, we confest, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke,
And gingling down the backstairs, told the crew,
Old Cato is as great a rogue as you. Pope's Epistles.

2. To make an affected sound in periods or cadence.

To GINGLE. v. a. To shake, so that a sharp shrill clattering noise should be made.
Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew;
The bells the gingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

GINGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A shrill resounding noise.

2. Affectation in the sound of periods.

GINGLYMOID. adj. [γίγγυμοῖς, a hinge, and ἰδῖος.] Resembling a ginglymus; approaching to a ginglymus.
The Malleus lies along, fixed to the tympanum, and on the other end is joined to the incus by a double or ginglymoid joint. Haller.

GINGLYMUS. n. f. A mutual indenting of two bones into each other's cavity, in the manner of a hinge, of which the elbow is an instance. Wiseman.

GINNET. n. f. [γίννη.] A nag; a mule; a degenerated breed. Hence, according to some, hut, I believe, erroneously, a Spanish genet, improperly written for ginnet.

GINSENG. n. f. [I suppose Chinese.] A root brought lately into Europe, of a brownish colour on the outside, and somewhat yellowish within; and so pure and fine, that it seems almost transparent. It is of a very agreeable and aromatick smell, though not very strong. Its taste is acrid and aromatick, and has somewhat bitter in it. We have it from China and America. The Chinese value this root at three times its weight in silver. Hill.

To GIP. v. a. To take out the guts of herrings. Bailey.

GIPSY. n. f. [Corrupted from Egyptian; for when they first appeared in Europe, they declared, and perhaps, truly, that they they were driven from Egypt by the Turks. They are now mingled with all nations.]

1. A vagabond who pretends to foretell futurity, commonly by palmistry or physiognomy.

The butler, though he is sure to lose a knife a fork, or a spoon every time his fortune is told him, shuts himself up in the pantry with an old gipsy for above half an hour.

A frantick gipsy now, the house he haunts,
And in wild phrases speaks dissembled wants. Prior.

In this still labyrinth around her lie
Spells, philters, globes, and spheres of palmistry;
A sigil in his hand the gipsy bears,
In th' other a prophetick sieve and shears. Garth.

I, near you sit, three fallow gipsies met;
Upon my hand they cast a poring look,
Bid me beware, and thrice their heads they shook. Gay.

2. A reproachful name for a dark complexion.

Laura, to her lady, was but a kitchen-wench;
Dido a dowdy; Cleopatra a gipsy; Helen and Hero hildings and harlots. Shakef. Romeo and Juliet.

3. A name of slight reproach to a woman.

The widow play'd the gipsy, and so did her confident too, in pretending to believe her. L'Esfrange.

A slave I am to Clara's eyes:
The gipsy knows her power, and flies. Prior.

- GIRASOLE. n. f. [girafol, French.]

Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day,
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way. Dryden.

6. To cover round as a garment.

These, with what skill they had, together sow'd,
To gird their waist: vain covering, if to hide
Their guilt, and dreaded shame! Milton's Par. Lost.

7. To furnish; to equip.

So to the coast of Jordan he directs
His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles. Milton.

8. To inclose; to incircle.

That Nyseian isle,
Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham
His Amalthea, and her florid son
Young Bacchus, from his stepdame Rhea's eye. Milton.

9. To reproach; to gibe.

Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the god. Shakef.

To GIRD. v. n. [Of this word in this sense I know not the original; it may be formed by a very customary transposition from gird or cut. To break a scornful jest; to gibe; to sneer.

This wondrous error growth
At which our critics gird. Drayton.

Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me:
The brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakef. Henry IV.

GIRD. n. f. [from the verb.] A twitch; a pang; it may come from the sensation caused by a bandage or girdle drawn hard suddenly. This word is now seldom used, unless the former etymology be admitted.

Sweet king! the bishop hath a kindly gird:
For shame, my lord of Winchester, relent. Shakef.

Conscience by this means is freed from many fearful girds and twinges which the Atheist feels. Tillotson.

He has the glory of his conscience, when he doth well, to set against the checks and girds of it when he doth amiss. Goodman.

GIRDERS. n. f. [from gird.] In architecture, the largest piece of timber in a floor. Its end is usually fastened into the summers, or breast summers, and the joists are framed in at one arm to the girders. Harris.

The girders are also to be of the same scantling the summers and ground-plates are of, though the back girder need not be so strong as the front girder. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.

These mighty girders which the fabric bind,
These ribs robust and vast in order join'd. Blackmore.

GIRDLE. n. f. [gyrde, Saxon.]

1. Any thing drawn round the waist, and tied or buckled.

There will I make thee beds of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies;
A cap of flowers, and a girdle,
Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle. Shakef.

Many conceive there is somewhat amiss, until they put on their girdle. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

On him his mantle, girdle, sword and bow,
On him his heart and soul he did bestow. Cowley.

Nor did his eyes less longingly behold
The girdlebelt, with nails of burnish'd gold. Dryd.

GIRDLER. n. f. [from girdle.] A maker of girdles.

GIRE. n. f. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing in motion. See GYRE.

GIRL. n. f. [About the etymology of this word there is much question: Meric Casanbon, as is his custom, derives it from sign of the same signification; Minsbeew from garrula, Latin, a prattler, or girella, Italian, a weathercock; Junius thinks that it comes from herlodes, Welch, from which, says he, barlot is very easily deduced. Skinner imagines that the Saxons, who used ceopl for a man, might likewise have ceopla for a woman, though no such word is now found. Dr. Hicke derives it most probably from the Islandick karlinna, a woman.] A young woman, or female child.

In those unscedg'd days was my wife a girl. Shak.
I will love thee ne'er the less, my girl. Shak.

The fool Amphimachus, to field brought gold to be his wracke, Proude girl like, that doth ever beare her dowre upoa her backe. Chapman.

A weather-beaten lover, but once known,
Is sport for every girl to practise on. Donne.

Tragedy should blush as much to stoop
To the low mimic follies of a farce,
As a grave matron would to dance with girls. Kofofcommon.

A boy, like thee, would make a kingly line;
But oh! a girl, like her, must be divine! Dryden.

GIRLISH. adj. [from girl.] Suiting a girl; youthful.

In her girlish age she kept sheep on the moor. Caveau.

GIRLISHLY. adv. [from girlish.] In a girlish manner.

3. To put into one's possession; to consign; to impart; to communicate.

Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out. Matt. xxv.

Nature gives us many children and friends, to take them away; but takes none away to give them us again. Temple.

Give me, says Archimedes, where to stand firm, and I will remove the earth. Temple.

If the agreement of men first gave a sceptre into any one's hands, or put a crown on his head, that almost must direct its conveyance. Locke.

4. To pay as a price or reward, or in exchange.

All that a man hath will he give for his life. Job, ii. 4.

If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
If you did know for whom I gave the ring,
And would conceive for what I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure. Shakespeare.

He would give his nuts for a piece of metal, and exchange his sheep for shells, or wool for a sparkling pebble. Locke.

5. To yield; not to withhold.

Philip, Alexander's father, gave sentence against a prisoner at a time he was drowsy, and seemed to give small attention. The prisoner, after sentence was pronounced, said, I appeal: the king, somewhat stirred, said, To whom do you appeal? The prisoner answered, from Philip, when he gave no ear, to Philip, when he shall give ear. Bacon's Apoph.

Constantia accused herself for having so tamely given an ear to the proposal. Addison's Spectator.

What can I refuse to a man so charitably given? Dryden.

21. To resign; to yield up.

Finding ourselves in the midst of the greatest wildness of waters, without victual, we gave ourselves for lost men, and prepared for death. Bacon.

Who say, I care not, those I give for lost;
And to instruct them will not quit the cost. Herbert.

Virtue giv'n for lost,
Deprest and overthrow'n, as seem'd;
Like that self-begot'n bird
From out her ashy womb now teem'd. Milton's Agon.

Since no deep within her gulph can hold
Immortal vigour, though oppress'd and fall'n,
I give not Heaven for lost. Milton's Paradise Lost.

For a man to give his name to Christianity in those days, was to list himself a martyr. Soub.

Ours gives himself for gone; you've watch'd your time,
He fights this day unarm'd, without his rhyme. Dryden.

The parents, after a long search for the body, gave him for drowned in one of the canals. Addison.

chiefly a discourse of his own voyage. Hakewill.

GLAND. n. f. [glans, Latin; gland, Fr.]

All the glands of a human body are reduced to two sorts, viz. conglobate and conglomerate. A conglobate gland is a little smooth body, wrapt up in a fine skin, by which it is separated from all the other parts, only admitting an artery and nerve to pass in, and giving way to a vein and excretory canal to come out: of this sort are the glands in the brain, the labial glands and testes. A conglomerate gland is composed of many little conglobate glands, all tied together, and wrapt up in the common tunicle or membrane. Quincy.

The abscess begun deep in the body of the glands.

The glands, which o'er the body spread,
Fine complicated clues of nervous thread,
Involv'd and twisted with th' arterial duct,
The rapid motion of the blood obstruct. Blackmore.

GLANDERS. n. f. [from gland.] In a horse is the running of corrupt matter from the nose, which differs in colour according to the degree of the malignity, being white, yellow, green, or black.

unto generation, but glandulous substances, that hold the nature of emunctories. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Such constitutions must be subject to glandulous tumours, and ruptures of the lymphaticks. Arbutn.

To GLARE. v. n. [glaren, Dutch.]

1. To shine so as to dazzle the eyes.

After great light, if you come suddenly into the dark, or, contrariwise, out of the dark into a glaring light, the eye is dazzled for a time, and the light confused. Bacon.

His glaring eyes with anger's venom swell,
And like the brand of soul Alecto flame. Fairfax.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatick wit, and gross hyperboles: he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines, but glares not;
and is stately without ambition. Dryden.

The court of Cæcus stands reveal'd to sight;
The cavern glares with new admitted light. Dryden.

Alas, thy dazzled eye
Beholds this man in a false glaring light,
Which conquest and success have thrown upon him. Addison.

2. To look with fierce piercing eyes.

Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,
Which thou dost glare with. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Look, how pale he glares? Shakespeare. Hamlet.

New friends no more, nor walking hand in hand;
But when they met they made a surly stand,
And glare'd, like angry lions, as they pass'd,
And with'd that ev'ry look might be their last. Dryden.

3. To shine ostentatiously, or with too much laboured lustre.

The most glaring and notorious passages are none of the finest, or most correct. Felton on the Classics.

To GLARE. v. a. 'To shoot such splendour
as the eye cannot bear.

One spirit in them rul'd, and every eye
Glare'd lightning, and shot forth pernicious fire
Among th' accurs'd, that wither'd all their strength. Milton.

GLARE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Overpowering lustre; splendour, such as dazzles the eye.

The frame of burnish'd steel that cast a glare
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryden. Enb.

I have grieved to see a person of quality gliding by me in her chair at two o'clock in the morning, and looking like a spectre amidst a glare of flam-beaux. Addison's Guardian.

Here in a grotto, shelter'd close from air,
And screen'd in shades from day's detested glare,
She sighs for ever. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

2. A fierce piercing look.

About them round
A lion now he stalks with fiery glare. Milton.

GLAREOUS. adj. [glaireux, Fr. glareosus, Latin; from glaire.] Consisting of vis-cous transparent matter, like the white of an egg.

GLARING. adj. Applied to any thing notorious; as, a glaring crime.

GLASS. n. f. [glaz, Saxon; glas, Dutch, as Pezon imagines from glās, British, green. In Erse it is called klānn, and this primarily signifies clean or clear, being so denominated from its transparency.]

1. An artificial substance made by fusing fixed salts and flint or sand together, with a vehement fire.

The word glass cometh from the Belgick and High Dutch: glasi, from the verb glansen, which signifies amongst them to shine; or perhaps from glacies in the Latin, which is ice, whose colour it resembles. Peacham on Drawing.

Glass is thought so compact and firm a body, that it is indestructible by art or nature, and is also of so close a texture that the subtle chymical spirits cannot pervade it. Boyle.

Show'rs of grenades rain, by sudden burst
Disploding murd'rous bowels, fragments of steel
And stones, and glasi and nitrous grain adust. Philips.

2. A glass vessel of any kind.

I'll see no more
And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glasi
Which shews me many more. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

3. A looking-glass; a mirror.

He was the mark and glasi, copy and book,
That fashion'd others. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

He spreads his subtle nets from sight,
With tinkling glases, to betray
The larks that in the meshes light. Dryden. Horace.

4. An Hour GLASS. A glass used in measuring time by the flux of sand.

Were my wife's liver
Infected as her life, the would not live
The running of one glasi. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

5. The destined time of man's life.

No more his royal self did live, no more his noble
sonne,
The golden Meleager now, their glasses all were run. Chapman.

6. A cup of glass used to drink in.

To this last costly treaty,
That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glasi
Did break i' th' ringing. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

When thy heart
Dilates with fervent joys, and eager soul
Prompts to pursue the sparkling glasi, be sure
'Tis time to shun it. Philips.

7. The quantity of wine usually contained in a glass; a draught.

While a man thinks one glasi more will not make him drunk, that one glasi hath disabled him from well discerning his present condition. Taylor's Rule of living body.

The first glasi may pais for health, the second for good-humour, the third for our friends; but the fourth is for our enemies. Temple.

8. A perspective glass.

The moon whose orb
Through optick glasi the Tuscan artist-views. Mik.

Like those who survey the moon by glasses, I tell of a shining world above, but not relate the glories of the place. Dryden.

GLASS. adj. Vitreous; made of glass.

Get thee glasi eyes. Add.

And, like a scurvy politician, seem
To see the things thou do'st not. Shak. King Lear.
Glass bottles are more fit for this second sining than those of wood. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GLASS. v. a.

1. To see as in a glass; to represent as in a glass or mirror. Not in use.

Methinks I am partaker of thy passion,
And in thy case do glass mine own debility. Sidney.

2. To case in glass.

Methought all his senses were lockt in his eye,
As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy;
Who tend'ring their own worth, from whence they were *glass*ed,

Did point out to buy them, along as you pass. Shak.

3. To cover with glass; to glaze.

I have observed little grains of silver to lie hid in the small cavities, perhaps *glass*ed over by a vitrifying heat, in crucibles wherein silver has been long kept in fusion. Boyle.

GLASSFURNACE. n. f. [glass and furnace.]

A furnace in which glass is made by liquefaction.

If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glass-furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his hand into it, he may perhaps be awakened into a certainty that it is something more than bare imagination. Locke.

GLASSGAZING. adj. [glass and gazing.]

Finical; often contemplating himself in a mirror.

A whorson, glassgazing, finical rogue. Shakesp.

GLASSGRINDER. n. f. [glass and grinder.]

One whose trade is to polish and grind glass.

The glassgrinders complain of the trouble they meet with. Boyle.

GLASSHOUSE. n. f. [glass and house.]

A house where glass is manufactured.

I remember to have met with an old Roman Mosaic, composed of little pieces of clay half vitrified, and prepared at the glasshouses. Addison.

GLASSMAN. n. f. [glass and man.]

One who sells glass.

The profit of glasses consists only in a small present made by the glassman. Swift.

GLASSMETAL. n. f. [glass and metal.]

Glass in fusion.

Let proof be made of the incorporating of copper or brass with glassmetal. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

GLASSWORK. n. f. [glass and work.]

Manufactory of glass.

The crystalline Venice glass is a mixture, in equal portions, of tones brought from Pavia, and the ashes of a weed called kali, gathered in a desert between Alexandria and Rosetta; by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians for their glassworks. Bacon's Natural History.

GLASSWORT. n. f. [salicornia, or saltwork.]

It hath an apetalous flower, wanting the empalement; for the stamina, or chives, and the embryos grow on the extreme part of the leaves; these embryoes afterward become pods or bladders, which, for the most part, contain one seed. The inhabitants near the sea-coast cut the plants up toward the latter end of Summer; and, having dried them in the sun, they burn them for their ashes, which are used in making of glass and soap. These herbs are by the country people called kelp. From the ashes of these plants is extracted the salt called sal kali, or alkali, by the chymists. Miller.

For the fine glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chali or glasswort; and for the coarser or green sort, the ashes of brake or other plants. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

GLASSY. adj. [from glass.]

1. Made of glass; vitreous.

In the valley near mount Carmel in Judæa there is a sand, which of all others, hath most affinity with glass; in so much as other minerals laid in it turn to a glassy substance. Bacon.

2. Resembling glass, as in smoothness or lustre, or brittleness.

Man! proud man!

Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd
His glassy essence; like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastick tricks before high heav'n,
As make the angels weep. Shak. Meas. for Meas.
There is a willow grows aslant a brook,
That shows his hoar leaves in the glassy stream.

Shakspere.

The magnet attracteth the shining or glassy powder brought from the Indies, usually employed in writing dust. Brown.

Whose womb produc'd the glassy ice? Who bred
The hoary frosts that fall on Winter's head? Sandys.
The glassy deep. Dryden's Æn.

GLASTONBURY THORN. n. f. A species of MEDLAR.

This species of thorn produces some bunches of flowers in Winter, and flowers again in the Spring.
Miller.

GLAUCOMÁ. n. f. [γλαύκωμα; glaucoma,
Fr.] A fault in the eye, which changes the crystalline humour into a greyish colour, without detriment of sight, and therein differs from what is commonly understood by suffusion. Quincy.

The glaucoma is no other disease than the cataract.
Sharp.

GLAIVE. n. f. [glaiive, French; glais, a hook, Welsh.] A broad sword; a falchion.

Two hundred Greeks came next in fight well try'd,
Not surely arm'd in steel or iron strong,
But each a glaiive hath pendant by his side. Fairfax.

When zeal with aged clubs and glaiives,
Gave chase to rockets and white flaves. Hudibras.

To GLAVER. v. n. [glave, Welsh, flattery; ghlan, Saxon, to flatter. It is still retained in Scotland.] To flatter; to wheel. A low word.

Kingdoms have their dittempers, intermissions, and paroxysms, as well as natural bodies; and a glavering council is as dangerous as a wheedling priest, or a flattering physician. L'Estrange.

To GLAZE. v. a. [To glass, only accidentally varied.]

1. To furnish with windows of glass.

Let there be two delicate cabinets daintily paved, richly hanged, and glazed with crystalline glass.

Bacon's Essays.

2. To cover with glass, as potters do their earthen ware; [from the French glâze argilla.]

3. To overlay with something shining and pellucid.

Sorrow's eye, glaz'd with brining tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects. Shaksp.

The reason of one man operates on that of another in all true oratory; wherein though with other ornaments he may glaze and brandish the weapons, yet is it found reason that carries the stroke home. Grew's Cofin, Sac.

White, with other strong colours, with which we paint that which we intend to glaze, are the life,
the spirit, and the lustre of it. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

GLAZIER. n. f. [corrupted from glazier, or glazier, of glass.] One whose trade is to make glass windows. Other manufacturers of glass are otherwise named.

Into rabbits the several panes of glasswork are set,
and fastened by the glazier. Moxon's Mech. Ex.

The dextrous glazier strong returns the bound,
And jingling lasses on the penthouse found. Gay.
And then, without the aid of neighbour's art,
Perform'd the carpenter's and glazier's part. Harve.

GLEAM. n. f. [gehoma, Saxon.] Sudden shoot of light; lustre; brightness.

Then was the fair Dodonian tree far seen
Upon seven hills to spread his gladsome gleam;

And conquerors bedecked with his green,
Along the banks of the Ausonian stream. Spenser.

At last a gleam

Of dawning light turn'd thitherward in haste
His travel'd steps. Milton's Paradise L. 8.

As I bent down to look just opposite,
A shape within the wat'ry gleam appear'd,
Bending to look on me. Milton's Paradise Lest.

Mine is a gleam of bliss, too hot to last;
Wat'ry it shines, and will be soon o'erca'd. Dryden.

We ken them from afar; the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms and burnish'd helmets,
And covers all the field with gleams of fire. Addison.

To the clear azure gleam the flocks are green,
And floating forests paint the waves with green. Pope.

Nought was seen, and nought was heard,
But dreadful gleams,
Fires that glow. Pope's St. Cecilia.

To GLEAM. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine with sudden conflagration.

Observant of approaching day,
The meek-ey'd morn appears, mother of dews,
At first faint gleaming in the dappled East. Thomson.

2. To shine.

On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade white dashing fall,
Or gleam in lengthen'd vistas through the trees. Thomson.

GLEAMY. adj. [from gleam.] Flushing;
darting sudden conflagrations of light.

In brazen arms, that cast a gleamy ray,
Swift through the town the warrior bends his way. Pope.

To GLEAN. v. a. [glaner, French, as skinner thinks, from granum, Lar.]

1. To gather what the gatherers of the harvest leave behind.

She came and gleaned in the field after the reapers. Ruib. ii.

Cheap conquest for his following friends remain'd;
He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd. Dryden.

The precept of not gathering their land clean, but that something should be left to the poor to glean, was a secondary offering to God himself. Nelson.

She went, by hard necessity compell'd,
To glean Palæmon's fields. Thomson's Autumn.

2. To gather any thing thinly scattered.

Gather

So much as from occasions you may glean,
If aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus. Shak.
That goodness

Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, Cardinal, by extortion. Shak.
They gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men. Judges, xx. 45.

But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,
When his refulgent arms flash'd through the shady plain,

Fled from his well-known face with wonted fear;
As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear Drove headlong to their ships, and glean'd the } routed rear. Dryden's Æn.

In the knowledge of bodies we must be content to glean what we can from particular experiments;
since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together. Locke.

GLEAN. n. f. [from the verb.] Collection made laboriously by slow degrees.

Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he plies;
The gleans of yellow thyme distend his thighs;
He spoils the fashion. Dryden's Virgil.

GLEANER. n. f. [from glean.]

1. One who gathers after the reapers.

For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,
Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,
Should his heart own a gleaner in the field. Thomson.

2. One who gathers any thing slowly and laboriously.

An ordinary coffee-house gleaner of the city is an arrant blackman. Locke.

GLEANING.

GLEANING. n. s. [from glean.] The act of gleaning, or thing gleaned.

There shall be as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleaning of grapes when the vintage is done.

Bible.

The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleanings of the rich man's harvest.

Atterbury.

GLEBE. n. s. [gleba, Latin.]

1. Turf; soil; ground.

This, like the moory plots, delights in feggy bowers,

The grassy garlands loves, and oft air'd with flowers
Of rank and mellow glebe.

Drayton.

Fertile of corn the glebe of oil and wine,
With herds the pastures throng'd, with flocks the hills.

Milton.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,

The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign,
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain.

Dryden.

Sleeping vegetables lie,
Till the glad summons of a genial ray

Unbinds the glebe, and calls them out to day.

Garib.

2. The land possessed, as a part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The ordinary living or revenue of a parsonage is of three sorts: the one in land, commonly called The glebe; another in tythe, which is a set part of our goods rendered to God; the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church by the people.

Spelman.

A trespass done on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be tried in a spiritual court.

Ayliffe's Paragon.

Many parishes have not an inch of glebe.

Swift.

GLEBOUS. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy.

Dick.

GLEBY. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy; perhaps in the following passage fat or fruitful, if it has indeed any meaning.

Pericious flatter'd thy malignant seeds
In an ill hour, and by a fatal hand

Sadly diffus'd o'er virtuous gleby land,
With rising pride amidst the corn appear,

Aod choke the hopes and harvest of the year.

Prior.

GLEDE. n. s. [gludaglibe, Saxon.] A kind of hawk.

Ye shall not eat the glede, the kite, and the vulture.

Deut.

GLEE. n. s. [gligge, Saxon.] Joy; merriment; gayety. It anciently signified musick played at feasts. It is not now used, except in ludicrous writing, or with some mixture of irony and contempt.

She marcheth home, and by her takes the knight,
Whom all the people follow with great glee.

Fairy Queen.

Many wayfarers make themselves glee, by venting the inhabitants; who again foreflew not to bargain them with perfume.

Carrov.

Is Blouzeinda dead? Farewell my glee!

No happiness is now reserved for me.
The poor man then was rich, and liv'd with glee;

Each barley-head untaxt, and day-light free.

Hart.

GLED. n. s. [from glopan, Saxon, to glow.] A hot glowing coal. A provincial and obsolete word.

GLEEFUL. adj. [glee and full.] Gay; merry; cheerful. Not used.

My lovely Aaron, therefore look't thou sad,
When every thing doth make a gleeful boast?

Shakespeare.

GLEEK. n. s. [gligge, Saxon.] Musick; or musician.

GLEE. n. s. [from glopan, Saxon, to glow.] A hot glowing coal. A provincial and obsolete word.

GLEEFUL. adj. [glee and full.] Gay; merry; cheerful. Not used.

My lovely Aaron, therefore look't thou sad,
When every thing doth make a gleeful boast?

Shakespeare.

GLEEK. n. s. [gligge, Saxon.] Musick; or musician.

What will you give us?—No money, but the gleek; I will give you the minstrel.

Shakespeare.

GLEEK. v. n. [glizman, in Saxon, is a mimic or a droll.]

1. To sneer; to gibe; to droll upon.

I can gleek upon occasion.

Shakespeare.

I have seen you gleeking or galling at this gentleman twice or thrice.

Shakespeare.

2. In Scotland it is still retained, and signifies to fool or spend time idly, with something of mimicry or drollery.

TO GLEEN. v. n. To shine, with heat or polish. I know, not the original notion of this word: it may be of the same race with gloze or with gleam. I have not remarked it in any other place.

Those who labour

The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythe,
Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleeing armour,

Acknowledge Vulcan's aid.

Prior.

GLEET. n. s. [It is written by Skinner glitt, and derived from gliban, Saxon, to run softly.] A sanious ooze; a thin ichor running from a sore.

A hard dry eschar, without either matter of gleet.

Wifeman's Subg.

TO GLEET. v. n. [from the noun.]

To drip or ooze with a thin sanious liquor.

His thumb being inflamed and swelled, I made an incision into it to the bone: this not only bled, but gleeted a few drops.

Wifeman.

2. To run slowly.

Vapours raised by the sun make clouds, which are carried up and down the atmosphere, 'till they hit against the mountainous places of the globe, and by this concussion are condensed, and so gleet down the caverns of these mountains, whose inner parts, being hollow, afford them a passage.

Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

GLEETY. adj. [from gleet.] Ichory; thinly sanious.

If the flesh lose its ruddiness, and the matter change to be thin and gletty, you may suspect it corrupting.

Wifeman.

GLEEN. n. s. [gleann, Erse.] A valley; a dale; a depression between two hills.

From me his madding mind is start,
And woos the widow's daughter of the gleen.

Spenser.

GLEW. n. s. [gluten, Latin.] A viscous cement made by dissolving the skins of animals in boiling water, and drying the gelly. See GLUE.

GLIB. adj. [from glis, Skinner.]

1. Smooth; slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.

Liquid bodies have nothing to sustain their parts, nor any thing to cement them; the parts being glib and continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way soever gravity inclines them.

Byrnett's Theory.

Habbakkuk brought him a smooth strong rope, compactly twisted together with a noose that slip as glib as a birdcatcher's gin.

Arabianot.

2. Smooth; voluble.

I want that glib and oily art
To speak and purpose not, since what I well intend,
I'll do't before I speak.

There was never so much glib nonsense put together in well sounding English.

Now cut his shop from rubbish drains,
Three genuine tomes of Swift's remains,
And then, to make them pass the gibberish,
Revis'd by Tibbald, More, and Cibber.

Be sure he's a fine spoken man,
Do but hear on the clergy how glib his tongue ran.

Swift.

GLIE. n. s.

The Irish have from the Scythians mantles and long glies, which is a thick curled bust of hair

Shakespeare.

hanging down over their eyes, and monstiously disgusting them.

Spenser on Ireland.

TO GLIB. v. a. [from the adjective.] To castrate.

I'll geld them all: fourteen they shall, not see,
To bring false generations; they are coheirs,
And I had rather glib myself, than they Should not produce fair issue.

Shakespeare.

GLIBLY. adv. [from glib.] Smoothly; volubly.

Many who would startle at an oath, whose stomachs as well as conscience recoil at an obscenity, do yet slide glibly into a detraction.

Government of the Tongue.

GLIBNESS. n. s. [from glib.] Smoothness; slipperiness.

A polish'd ice-like glibness doth enseld
The rock.

The tongue is the most ready for motion of any member, needs not so much as the flexure of a joint, and by access of humours acquires a glibness too, the more to facilitate its moving.

Government of the Tongue.

TO GLIDE. v. n. [gliban, Saxon; glidz, Dutch.]

1. To flow gently and silently.

By East, among the dusty vallies glide the
The silver streams of Jordan's crystal flood.

Fairfax.

Broke by the jutting land on either side,
In double stream, the briny waters glide.

Just before the confines of the wood,
The gliding Lethe leads her silent flood.

Where stray the Muses, in what lawn or grove?
In those fair fields where sacred glides,
Or else where Cam his winding vales divides.

Pope.

2. To pass on without change of step.

Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate
The mystick wonders of your silent state.

3. To move swiftly and smoothly along.

If one of mean affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I
Glide thither in a day?

Shoals of fish, with fins and shining scales,
Glide under the green wave.

He trembl'd every limb, and felt a smart
As if cold steel had glided through his heart.

All things are beheld as in a hasty motion, where the objects only glide before the eye and disappear.

GLIDE. n. s. [from the verb.] Lapse; act or manner of passing smoothly.

About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who, with her head nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush.

GLIDER. n. s. [from glide.] One that glides.

The glance into the heart did glide;
Hey ho the glider;
Therewith my soul was sharply gride,
Such wounds soon waxen wider.

GLIRE. n. s. [gliz, Saxon. See GLEEK.] A snar; a scoff; a flout. Not now in use.

Where's the bastard's braves, and Charles his glires.

TO GLIMMER. v. n. [glimmer, Danish, to shine; glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]

1. To shine faintly.

The West yet glimmers, with some streaks of day.

The truth appears so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out.
—And on my side it is so well appareld;
So clear, so shining, and so evident,
That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.

Shakespeare.

GLIMMER. n. s.

The Irish have from the Scythians mantles and long glies, which is a thick curled bust of hair

Shakespeare.

GLIE. n. s.

Shakespeare.

GLIE. n. s.

The Irish have from the Scythians mantles and long glies, which is a thick curled bust of hair

Shakespeare.

GLIE. n. s.

For there no twilight of the sun's dull ray Glimmers upon the pure and native day. Cowley.
Oft to glimmering bowers and gladca
He met her. Milton.

See'ft thou yon dreary plain, forlorn and wild,
The feat of defolation, void of light,
Save what the glimmering of these livid flames
Casts pale and dreadful? Milton's Paradise Lost.
The sacred influence
Of light appears, and from the walls of Heav'n
Shoots far into the bosom of dim night
A glimmering dawn. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Through these sad shades this chaos in my soul,
Some seeds of light at length began to roll;
The rising motion of an infant ray,
Shot glimmering through the cloud, and promis'd day. Prior.

Oft by the winds, extinct the signal lies;
Or smother'd in the glimmering socket dies.
Gay's Trivia.

When rosy morning glimmer'd o'er the dales,
He drove to pasture all the fusty males. Pope.
2. To be perceived imperfectly; to appear faintly.

On the way the baggage post-boy, who had been at Court, got a glimmering who they were. Wotton.
The Pagan priesthood was always in the drudges;
and there was a perceivable glimmering of the Jewish rites in it; though much corrupted. Swift.

GLIMMER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Faint splendour; weak light.
2. A kind of fossil.
The lesser masses that are lodged in sparry and stony bodies, dispersedly, from their shining and glimmering, were an inducement to the writers of fossils to give those bodies the name of mica and glimmer. Woodward on Fossils.
Stones which are composed of plates, that are generally plain and parallel, and that are flexible, and elastic: talc, catiliver, or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black. Woodward.

GLIMPSE. n. f. [glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]
1. A weak faint light.
Such vast room in nature,
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far
Down to this habitable, which returns
Light back to them. Milton.
Thousands of things, which now either wholly escape our apprehensions, or which our short-sighted reason having got some faint glimpse of, we, in the dark, grope after. Locke.

2. A quick flashing light.
Light as the lightning glimpse they ran. Milton.
My thoughtless youth was wiog'd with vain desires;
My Manhood, long misled by wand'ring fires,
Follow'd false lights; and when their glimpse was gone,
My pride struck out new spangles of her own. Dryden.

3. Transitory lustre.
There no dear glimpse of the sun's lovely face
Strikes through the soild darkness of the place.
Cowley.
If I, celestial fire, in aught
Have serv'd thy will, or gratified thy thought,
One glimpse of glory to my issue give;
Grac'd for the little time he has to live. Dryden.

4. Short fleeting enjoyment.
If while this wearied flesh draws fleeting breath,
Not fatisht with life, afraid of death,
It haply be thy will that I should know
Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe;
From now, from instant now, great fire, dispel
The clouds that press my soul. Prior.

5. A short transitory view.
O friends! I hear the tread of nimble feet
Hasting this way, and now by glimpse discern Ithuriel, and Zephon, through the shade. Milton.
Sometimes God punisheth exemplarily in this world, that we might have a taste or glimpse of his present justice. Hakewill.
A man us'd to such sort of reflections sees as much at one glimpse as would require a long discourse to lay before another, and make out in one entire and gradual deduction. Locke.

What should I do! while here I was enchain'd.
No glimpse of godlike liberty remain'd. Dryden.
6. The exhibition of a faint resemblance.
No man hath a virtue that he has not a glimpse of.
Shakespeare.

To GLISTEN. v. n. [glittan, German.]
To shine; to sparkle with light.
The beating kind
Eye the bleak heaven, and next the glistening earth,
With looks of dumb despair. Thompson's Winter.
The ladies eyes glistened with pleasure.
Richardson's Pamela.

To GLISTER. v. n. [glittan, German;
glisteren, Dutch.] To shine; to be bright.
The wars flame most in Summer, and the helmets glister brightest in the fairest sunshine. Spenser.
'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glistening grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shakespeare.
The golden sun
Callops the zodjack in his glist'ring coach. Shakespeare.

All that glisters is not gold. A
You were more the eye, and talk
Of the court to-day than all Else that glister'd in Whitehall. Ben Jonson.
When the sun shone upon the shields of gold and brass, the mountains glistered therewith, and shined like lamps of fire. Mac. vi. 39.
It consisted not of rubies, yet the small pieces of it were of a pleasant redish colour, and glistered prettily.
Boyle.

GLISTER. n. f. [Properly written clyster, from κλύζω.] See CLYSTER. It is written wrong even by Brown.
Now enters Bush with new state airs,
His lordship's premier minister;
And whp, in all profound affairs,
Is held as needful as his glister. Swift.
Choler is the natural glister, or one excretion whereby nature excludeth another; which, descending daily into the bowels, extimulates those parts, and excites them unto expulsion. Brown.

To GLITTER. v. n. [glutman, Saxon.]
To shine; to exhibit lustre; to gleam.
Steel glosses are more resplendent than the like plates of brass, and so is the glittering of a blade.
Bacon's Phys. Rem.
Before the battle joins from far
The field yet glitters with the pomp of war.
Dryden's Virgil.
Scarce had'st thou time t' unsheath thy conqu'ring blade; and the rebels fled. Granville.

2. To be specious; to be striking.
On the one hand set the most glittering temptations to discord, and on the other the dismal effects of it.
In glittering scenes, o'er her own heart severe;
In crowds collected; and in courts sincere. Young.
GLITTER. n. f. [from the verb.] Lustre;
bright show; splendour.
Clad
With what permissive glory since his fall
Was left him; or false glitter. Milton.
Flourish not too much upon the glitter of fortune,
for fear there should be too much alloy in it.
Collier on Pride.

Take away this measure from our drefs and habits, and all is turned into such paint and glitter, and ridiculous ornaments, as are a real shame to the wearer. Lavo.
GLITTERAND. Shining; sparkling.
A participle used by Chaucer and the old English poets. This participial termination is still retained in Scotland.
GLITTERINGLY. adv. [from glitter.]
With shining lustre.

Latin.]

1. A sphere; a ball; a round body: a body of which every part of the surface is at the same distance from the centre.

2. The terraqueous ball.
The youth, whose fortune the vast globe obey'd,
Finding his royal enemy betray'd,
Wept at his fall. Stepney.
Where God declares his intention to give dominion, he meant that he would make a species of creatures that should have dominion over the other creatures of this terrestrial globe. Locke.

3. A sphere in which the various regions of the earth are geographically depicted, or in which the constellations are laid down according to their places in the sky.
The Astrologer who spells the stars,
Mistakes his globe, and in her brighter eye
Interprets heaven's physiognomy. Cleveland.
These are the stars,
But raise thy thought from sense, nor think to find
Such figures as are in the globes design'd. Creech.

4. A body of soldiers drawn into a circle.
Him round
A globe of fiery seraphim inclos'd,
With bright imblazoning, and horrent arms.
Milton.

plant. Miller.

GLOBOSE. adj. [globosus Latin.] Spherical; round.
Regions, to which
All thy dominion, Adam, is no more
Than what this garden is to all the earth,
And all the seas; from one entire globe.
Stretch'd into longitude. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Then formed the moon
Globose, and ev'ry magnitude of star. Milton.

GLOBOSITY. n. f. [from globose.] Sphericity; sphericness.
Why the same eclipse of the sun, which is seen to them that live more easterly, when the sun is elevated six degrees above the horizon, should be seen to them that live one degree more westerly, when the sun is but five degrees above the horizon, and so lower and lower proportionably, till at last it appear not at all: no account can be given, but the globosity of the earth. Ray on the Creation.

GLOBOUS. adj. [globosus, Latin. When the accent is intended to be on the last syllable, the word should be written globose, when on the first globous: I have transferred hither a passage of Milton, in which this rule has been neglected.] Spherical; round.
Wide over all the plain, and wider far
Than all this globose earth in plain outspread;
Such are the courts of God! Milton.
The brazen instruments of earth discharge
Horrible flames, and turpid streaming clouds;
Large globous irons fly, or dreadful hiss,
Singing the air. Philips.

GLOBULAR.

GLOBULAR. adj. [globulus, Latin.] Having the form of a small sphere; round; spherical.

The figure of the atoms of all visible fluids seemeth to be globular, there being no other figure so well fitted to the making of fluidity. Crew.

GLOBULARIA. n. f. [Latin; globulaire, French.] A fuscous flower. Miller.

GLOBULE. n. f. [globule, French; globulus, Latin.] Such a small particle of matter as is of a globular or spherical figure; as the red particles of the blood, which swim in a transparent serum, and are easily discovered by the microscope. These will attract one another when they come within a due distance, and unite like the spheres of quicksilver.

The hailstones have opaque globules of snow in their centre, to intercept the light within the halo. Quincy.

Blood consists of red globules, swimming in a thin liquor called serum; the red globules are elastic, and will break; the vessels which admit the smaller globule, cannot admit the greater without a disease. Newton's Optics.

GLOBULOUS. adj. [from globule.] In form of a small sphere; round.

The whiteness of such globulous particles proceeds from the air included in the froth. Boyle.
TO GLOMERATE. v. a. [glomera, Latin.] To gather into a ball or sphere. A filamentous substance gathered into a ball is said to be glomerated, but discontinuous particles are conglobated.

GLOMERATION. n. f. [glomeratio, Latin.]
1. The act of forming into a ball or sphere.
2. A body formed into a ball.

The rainbow consisteth of a glomeration of small drops, which cannot fall but from the air that is very low. Bacon.

1. Want of light; obscurity; imperfect light; dismalness.

2. Want of cheerfulness; cloudiness of look; heaviness of mind; melancholy.

Neglect spreads gloominess upon their humor, and makes them grow sullen and inconvertible. Collier of the Spleen.

The gloominess in which sometimes the minds of the best men are involv'd, very often stands in need of such little incitements to mirth and laughter, as are apt to disperse melancholy. Addison.

GLOOMY. adj. [from gloomy.]

1. Obscure; imperfectly illuminated; almost dark; dismal for want of light.

These were from without
The growing miseries, which Adam saw
Already in part, though hid in gloomiest shade,
To sorrow abandon'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Deep in a cavern dwells the drowsy god,
Whose gloomy mansion nor the rising sun,
Nor setting visits, nor the lightsome noon.

The surface of the earth is clearer or gloomier, just as the sun is bright or more overcast. Dryden's Fables.

2. Dark of Complexion.
That fair field
Of Enna, where Proserpine gathering flowers,
Herself a fairer flow'r, by gloomy Dis
Was gather'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Sullen; melancholy; cloudy of look; heavy of heart.

GLO'RIED. adj. [from glory.] Illustrious; honourable; decorated with glory; dignified with honours. Not in use.

As I suppose, toward your once glory'd friend,
My son, now captive, hither hath inform'd
Your younger set, while mine cast back with age Came lagging after. Milton's Argonistes.

GLORIFICATION. n. f. [glorification, French, from glorify.] The act of giving glory.
At opening your eyes, enter upon the day with thanksgiving for the preservation of you the last night, with the glorification of God for the works of the creation. Taylor.

TO GLO'RIFY. v. a. [glorifier, French; glorifico, Latin.]
1. To procure honour or praise to one.
Two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in. Shakesp.
Justice is their virtue: that alone
Makes them fit sure, and glorifies the throne. Daniel.

2. To pay honour or praise in worship.
God is glorified when such his excellency, above all things, is with due admiration acknowledged. Hooker.

This form and manner of glorifying God was not at that time first begun; but received long before, and alledged at that time as an argument for the truth. Hooker.

Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,
That we for thee may glorify the Lord. Shakesp.
All nations shall glorify thy name. Pf. lxxxix. 9.
Our bodies with which the apostle commands us to glorify God, as well as with our souls. Duty of Man.

This is the perfection of every thing, to attain its true and proper end: and the end of all these gifts and endowments, which God hath given us, is to glorify the giver. Tillotson.

3. To praise; to honour; to extol.
Whomsoever they find to be most licentious of life, desperate in all parts of disobedience and rebellious disposition, him they set up and glorify. Spenser.

No chymist yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befall,
Some odoriferous thing, or medicinal. Donne.

4. To exalt to glory in heaven; to raise to celestial beatitude.

If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself and shall straightway glorify him. Jo. xiii. 32.

Whom he justified, them he also glorified. Rom. viii. 30.

The members of the church remaining, being perfectly sanctified, shall be eternally glorified; then shall the whole church be truly and perfectly holy. Pearson.

The soul, being immortal, will, at some time or other, resume its body again in a glorified manner. Ayliffe's Parergon.

GLO'RIOUS. adj. [gloriosus, Latin; glorieux, French.]

1. Boastful; proud; haughty; ostentatious.
Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy. Bacon.

They that are glorious must needs be factious; for for all bravery stands upon comparisons. Bacon.

2. Noble; illustrious; excellent. It is frequently used by theological writers, to express the brightness of triumphant sanctity rewarded in heaven.

Let them know that thou art Lord, the only God, and glorious over the whole world. Dan. iii. 22.

He is glorious in respect of the brightness and splendour of his celestial body still made more glorious and majestic by the authority which his father hath committed to him of the universal Judge. Nelson.

Impartial justice holds here equal scales,
'Till stronger virtue does the weight incline;
If over thee thy glorious foe prevails,
He aow defends the cause that once was thine, Prior.

Let us remember we are Cato's friends,
And act like men who claim that glorious title. Addis. Cato.

She must stand amongst the first servants of God and be glorious amongst those that have fought the good fight. Law.

If there be nothing so glorious as doing good, if there is nothing that makes us so like to God, then nothing can be so glorious in the use of our money, as to use it all in works of love and goodness. Law.

GLO'RIOUSLY. adv. [from glorious.] Nobly; splendidly; illustriously.

They inspire with those celestial flames which shine so gloriously in their works. Dryden.

Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend.
And rise to faults true critics dare not mend. Pope.

GLO'RY. n. f. [gloire, French; gloria, Latin.] Among the old poets it was used sometimes as one syllable, glorie.]

1. Praise paid in adoration.
Glory to God in the highest. Luke. ii. 14.

2. The felicity of heaven prepared for those that please God.
Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me into thy glory. Psal. lxxviii. 24.

Then enter into glory, and resume His seat at God's right hand, exalted high Above all names in heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.

It is hardly possible for you to beseech and intreat God to make any one happy in the highest enjoyments of his glory to all eternity, and yet be troubled to see him enjoy the much smaller gifts of God, in this short and low state of human life. Law.

3. Honour; praise; fame; renown; celebrity.
Think it no glory to swell in tyranny. Sidney.
Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,
'Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought. Shak. H. VI.

And with that word and warning soon was dight,
Each soldier longing for near coming glory. Fairfax.

Israel's bright sceptre far less glory brings,
There have been fewer friends on earth than kings. Cowley.

5 R 2

Can we imagine that neither the ambition of princes, or interest, or gain in private persons, or curiosity and the desire of knowledge, or the glory of discoveries, could ever move them in that endless time to try their fortunes upon the sea. Burnet.

Your sex's glory 'tis to shine unknown
Of all applause, be fondest of your own. Young.

4. Splendour; magnificence.

Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these. Matt. vi. 29.

Treated so ill chas'd from your Throat,
Returning, you adorn the town;
And with a brave revenge do show
Their glory went and came with you. Waller.

Aristotle says that should a man under ground converse with works of art, and be afterwards brought up into the open day, and see the several glasses of the heaven and earth, he would pronounce them the works of God. Addison's Spectator.

5. Lustre; brightness.

Now sleeping flocks on their soft fleeces lie;
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope.
From opening skies may streaming glories shine,
And fairs embrace thee with a love like mine. Pope.

6. A circle of rays which surrounds the heads of saints in picture.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace; such an one as irradiates, and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends. Soub.

A smile plays with a surprising agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distinction, and fits like a glory upon the countenance. Collier of the Aspect.

7. Pride; boastfulness; arrogance.

By the vain glory of men they entered into the world, and therefore shall they come shortly to an end. Wisd. xiv. 14.

On death-beds some, in conscious glory lie,
Since of the doctor in the mode they die. Young.

8. Generous pride.

The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears, to which all worthy fame hath glory to come unto. Sidney.

To GLORY. v. n. [glorior, Latin.] To boast in; to be proud of.

With like judgement glorying when he had happened to do a thing well, as when he had performed some notable mischief. Sidney.

They were wont, in the pride of their own proceedings, to glory, that whereas Luther did but blow away the roof, and Zuinglius batter but the walls of popish superstition, the last and hardest work of all remained, which was to raze up the very ground and foundation of popery. Hooker.

Let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them, Shakespeare.

Your glorying is not good. 1 Cor. v. 6.

Thou hast seen mount Atlas,
While storms and tempests thunder on its brow,
And oceans break their billows at its feet,
It stands upmov'd, and glories in its height. Addis. Cato.

This title of Freeholder is what I most glory in, and what most effectually calls to my mind the happiness of that government under which I live. Addison's Freeholder.

If others may glory in their birth, why may not we, whose parents were called by God to attend on him at his altar? Aterbury.

No one is out of the reach of misfortune; no one therefore should glory in his prosperity. Clarissa.

To GLOSE. v. a. To flatter; to colligue. Hanmer

See To GLOZE.

GLOSS. n. f. [γλῶσσα; glose, French.]

1. A scholium; a comment.

They never hear sentence, which mentioneth the word or scripture, but forthwith their glosses upon it are the word preached, the scripture explained, or delivered unto us in sermons. Hooker.

If then all souls, both good and bad, do teach,
With general voice, that souls can never die;
'Tis not man's flatter'ing gloss, but nature's speech,
Which, like God's oracles, can never lie. Davies.

Some mutter at certain passages therein, by putting ill glosses upon the text, and taking with the left hand what I offer with the right. Hosvel.

All this, without a gloss or comment,
He could unriddle in a moment. Hudibras.
In many places, he has perverted my meaning by his glosses, and interpreted my words into blasphemy and bawdry, of which they were not guilty. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

They give the scandal, and the wise discern
Their glosses teach an age too apt to learn. Dryden.
Explaining the text in short glosses, was Accursius's method. Baker on Learning.

Indentures, covenants, articles they draw,
Large as the fields themselves, and larger far
Than civil codes with all their glosses are. Pope.

2. Superficial lustre. In this sense it seems to have another derivation; it has perhaps some affinity to glosu.

His iron coat all over-grown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Whose glittering gloss dark'ned with filthy dust. Spenser.

You are a sectary,
That's the plain truth: your painted gloss discovers,
To men that understand you, words and weaknesses. Shakespeare.

Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which should be worn now in their newest glosses. Shakespeare.

The doubt will be whether it will polish so well; for steel glosses are more resplendent than plates of brass. Bacon.

Weeds that the wind did toss
The virgins' warts: the youths, woyen coats, that cast a faint dim gloss, Like that of oil. Chapman's Illads.

It was the colour of devotion, giving a lustre to reverence, and a gloss to humility. Soub.

Groves, fields, and meadows, are at any season pleasant to look upon; but never so much as in the opening of the Spring, when they are all new and fresh, with their first gloss upon them. Addison's Spectator.

3. An interpretation artfully specious; a specious representation. This sense seems to partake of both the former.

Poor painters oft with silly poets join,
To fill the world with strange but vain conceit;
One brings the stuff, the other stamps the coin,
Which breeds nought else but glosses of deceit. Sidney.

It is no part of my secret meaning to draw you hereby into hatred, or to set upon the face of this cause any fairer gloss than the naked truth doth afford. Hooker, Preface.

He seems with forged quaint conceit
To set a gloss upon his bad intent. Shakespeare.

The common gloss
Of theologians. Milton.

To GLOSS. v. n. [gloser, French from the noun.]

1. To comment.

Thou detain'st Briseis in thy bands,
By priestly glossing on the god's commands. Dryd.

2. To make sly remarks.
Her equals first observ'd her growing zeal,
And laughing gloss'd, that Abra serv'd so well. Prior.

To GLOSS. v. a.

1. To explain by comment.

In parchment then, large as the fields, he draws,
Assurances, big as gloss'd civil laws. Donne.

2. To palliate by specious exposition or representation.

Is this the paradise, in description whereof so much glossing and deceiving eloquence hath been spent? Hooker's Sermons.

Do I not reason wholly on your conduct?
You have the art to gloss the foulest cause. Philips.

3. To embellish with superficial lustre.

But thou, who lately of the common train
Wert one of us, if full thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Gloss'd over only with a saint-like show,

Then I resume the freedom which I gave,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden's Pers.

GLOSSARY. n. f. [glossarium, Latin; glos-saire, French.] A dictionary of obscure or antiquated Words.

According to Varro, when delubrum was applied to a place; it signified such a one, in quo dei simulacrum dedicatum est; and also in the old glossaries. Stillingfleet.

GLOSSATOR. n. f. [glossateur French, from gloss.] A writer of glosses; a commentator.

The reason why the assertion of a single judge does not prove the existence of judicial acts, is because his office is to pronounce judgment, and not to become an evidence; but why may not the same be said of two judges? Therefore, in this respect, the glossator's opinion must be false. Ayliffe.

GLOSSER. n. f. [glossarius, Latin.]

1. A scholiast; a commentator.

2. A polisher.

GLOSSINESS. n. f. [from glossy.] Smooth polish; superficial lustre

A scholiast; a commentator.

GLOSSOGRAPHY. n. f. [γλῶσσα and γραφω.]

The writing of commentaries.

GLOSSY. adj. [from gloss.] Shining; smoothly polished.

There came towards us a person of place; he had on him a gown with wide sleeves; of a kind of water camblet, of an excellent azure colour, far more glossy than ours. Bacon.

The rest entire Shone with a glossy scurf. Milton.

His furcoat was a bearskin on his back;
His hair hung long behind, and glossy raven black. Dryden.

Myself will search our planted grounds at home,
For downy peaches and the glossy plum. Dryden.

GLOVE. n. f. [glope, Saxon; klaffue, Danish, to divide.] Cover of the hand.

They flew about like chaff in the wind;
For haste some left their masks behind,
Some could not stay their gloves to find. Dryden.

White gloves were on his hands, and on his head
A wreath of laurel. Dryden.

To GLOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover as with a glove.

My limbs,
Weaken'd with grief, being now enrag'd with grief,
Are thrice themselves; hence therefore, thou nice crutch;
A sealy gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

The next he preys on is her palm,
That alm'ner of transpiring balm;
So soft, 'tis air but once remov'd;
Tender as 'twere a jelly glow'd. Cleveland.

GLOVER. n. f. [from glove.] One whose trade is to make or sell gloves.

Does he not wear a great round beard like a glover's paring knife. Shakespeare.

To GLOUT. v. n. [A low word of which I find no etymology.] To pout; to look fullen. It is still used in Scotland.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks,
Where, glouting round her rock, to fish she falls. Chapman.

Glouting with fullen spight, the fury strook
Her clotted locks, and blasted with each look. Garth.

To GLOW. v. n. [glopan, Saxon; glayen, Dutch.]

1. To be heated so as to shine without flame.

But

But sithence silence lesseath not my fire,
But, told it flames, and hidden it does glow,
I will reveal what ye so much desire. Spenser.

His goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend,
Their office upon a tawny iron. Shakef.

Kunigund, wife to the Emperor Henry II, to show her innocency, did take seven glowing irons, one after another, in her bare hands, and had thereby no harm. Hakewill.

Not all parts like, but all alike inform'd,
With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire. Milton.

2. To burn with vehement heat.

Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettled steeds, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison's Ovid.

How opening heav'n's their happy regions show,
And yawning gulphs with flaming vengeance glow. Smith.

Fires that glow,
Shrieks of woe. Pope.

3. To feel heat of body.

Did not his temples glow
In the same sultry winds and scorching heats?
The cord slides swiftly through his glowing hands. Add. Cato.

4. To exhibit a strong bright colour.

With smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue.
Clad in a gown that glows with Tyrian rays. Milton.

A malicious joy,
Whose red and fiery beams cast through your visage
A glowing pleasure. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

From the mingled strength of shade and light,
A new creation rises to my sight;
Such heav'nly figures from his pencil flow,
So warm with life his blended colours glow,
Amidst the soft variety I'm lost. Addison.

Like th' ethereal glow'd the green expanse. Savage.

Fair ideas flow,
Strike in the sketch, or in the picture glow. Pope.

Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,
With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows,
Can move the god. Pope.

Each pleasing Blount shall endless smiles bestow,
And fair Belinda's blush for ever glow. Pope.

Here clearer stars glow round the frozen pole. Pope.

5. To feel passion of mind, or activity of fancy.

You strive in vain
To hide your thoughts from him, who knew too well
The inward glowings of a heart in love. Addison's Cato.

Forc'd compliments and formal bows
Will shew thee just above neglect;
The fire with which thy lover glows,
Will settle into cold respect. Prior.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire
To weary tortures, and rejoice in here. Prior.

Let the gay conscience of a life well spent Calm ev'ry thought, inspire ev'ry grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.

With furies surrounded,
Despairing, confounded,
He trembles, he glows,
Amidst Rhodope's frowns. Pope.

So perish all, whose breasts ne'er learn'd to glow
For others good, or melt at others woe.
To praise is always hard. Pope.

When real virtue fires the glowing bard. Lewis.

6. To rage or burn as a passion.

A fire which every windy passion blows;
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Dryden.

When crept into aged veins,
Love slowly burns, and long remains;
It glows, and with a sullen heat,
Like fire in logs, it warms us long. Shadwell.

To Glow. v. a. To make hot so as to shine. Not in use.

On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shakef.

GLOW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Shining heat.
2. Vehemence of passion.
3. Brightness or vividness of colour.

The pale complexion of true love,
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain. Shakef.

A waving glow his bloomy beds display.
Blushing in bright diversities of day. Pope.

Such as, suppose that the great stile might happily be bleeded with the ornamental, that the simple, grave, and majestic dignity of Raffaele could unite with the glow and bustle of a Paulo, or Tintoret, are totally mistaken. Reynolds.

GLOWWORM. n. f. [glow and worm.]

A small creeping grub with a luminous tail.
The honey bags steal from the humble bees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes. Shakef.

The glowworm shews the matten to be near,
And 'gins to pale his ineffedual fire. Shakef.

A great light drowneeth a smaller that it cannot be seen; as the sun that of a glowworm. Bacon.

The man, who first upon the ground
A glowworm spy'd, supposing he had found
A moving diamond, a breathing stone;
For life it had, and like those jewels shone:
He held it dear, 'till by the springing day
Informed, he threw the worthless worm away. Waller.

To GLOZE. v. n. [glezan, Saxon.]

1. To flatter; to wheedle; to insinuate; to fawn.

Man will hearken to his glozing lies,
And easily transgress. Milton's Paradise Lost.

So gloz'd the tempter, and his poem tun'd:
Into the heart of Eve his words made way. Milton.

A false glozing parasite would call his soft-hardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly, and by mistaking himself for a lion, come to perish like an ass. South.

Now for a glozing speech,
Fair protestations, specious marks of friendship. Philips.

2. To comment. This should be glose.

Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze
To be the realm of France. Shakef.

GLOZE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Flattery; insinuation.

Now to plain dealing; lay these glozes by. Shakef.

2. Specious show; glose. Not used.

Precious couches full oft are shaken with a fever;
If then a bodily evil in a bodily gloze be not hidden,
Shall such morning dews be an ease to the heat of a lover's fire? Sidney.

GLOZER. n. f. [from gloze.] A flatterer.

GLUE. n. f. [glu, French, gluten, Latin, glud, Welsh.] A viscous body commonly made by boiling the skins of animals to a gelly; any viscous or tenacious matter by which bodies are held one to another; a cement.

Water and all liquors, do hastily receive dry and more terrestrial bodies proportionable; and dry bodies, on the other side, drink in waters and liquors:
so that, as it was well said by one of the ancients of earthly and watery substances, one is a glue to another. Bacon's Natural History.

The driest and most transparent glue is the best. Maxon.

To build the earth did chance materials chuse,
And through the parts cementing glue diffuse. Blackmore.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbusnos on Aliments.

To GLUE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To join with a viscous cement.

I fear thy overthrow
More than my body's parting with my soul:
My love and fear glu'd many friends to thee. Shakef. Henry VI.

Whoso teacheth a fool is as one that glues a potsher'd together. Eccles. xxii. 7.

The custom of crowning the Holy Virgin is so much in vogue among the Italians, that one often sees in their churches a little tinzel crown, or a circle of stars, glued to the canvass over the head of the

Most wounds, if kept clean, and from the air,
the flesh will glue together with its own native balm. Derham.

2. To hold together.

The parts of all homogeneal hard bodies, which fully touch one another, stick together very strongly; and for explaining how this may be, some have invented hooked atoms, which is begging the question; and others tell us their bodies are glued together by rest; that is, by an occult quality, or rather by nothing. Newton's Opt.

3. To join; to unite; to inviscate.

Those wasps in a honeyopt are sensual men plunged in their lusts and pleasures; and when they are once glued to them, 'tis a very hard matter to work themselves out. L'Esfrange.

Intemperance, sensuality, and fleshy lusts, do debase mens minds and clog their spirits; sink us down into sense, and glue us to those low and inferior things. Tillotson.

She curb'd a groan, that else had come;
And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb:
Then to the heart ador'd devoutly glu'd
Her lips, and, raising it, her speech renew'd. Dryden.

I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,
And round thy phantom glue my clasping arms. Pope.

GLUEBOILER. n. f. [glue and boil.] One whose trade is to make glue.

GLUER. n. f. [from glue.] One who ce-ments with glue.

GLUM. adj. [A low cant word formed by corrupting gloom.] Sullen; stubbornly grave.

The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the King and Queen, as was enough to glut the hearers. Bacon.

Love breaks friendship,
Feed, but not glut our appetites. Denham.

What way remove
His settled hate, and reconcile his love,
That he may look propitious on our toils,
And hungry graves no more be glutted with our spoils. Dryden.

No more, my friend;
Here let our glutted execution end. Dryden's Æn.

The sickle ear soon glutted with the sound,
Condemn'd eternal changes to pursue,
Tir'd with the last, and eager of the new. Pope.

3. To feast or delight even to satiety.

With death's carcass glut the grave.
His faithful heart, a bloody sacrifice,
Torn from his breast, to glut the tyrant's eyes. Dryden.

A sylvan scene, which, rising by degrees,
Leads up the eye below, nor gluts the sight
With one full prospect; but invites by many,
To view at last the whole. Dryden.

4. To overflow; to load.

He attributes the ill success of either party to their glutting the market, and retailing too much of a bad commodity at once. Arbusnos.

5. To

Dilgorged soul
Their devilish glut, chain'd thunderbolts, and hail
Of iron globes. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Plenty even to loathing and satiety.

So death
Shall be deceiv'd his glut; and with us two
Be forc'd to satisfy his rav'nous maw. Milton.
Let him but set the one in balance against the other, and he shall find himself miserable, even in the very glut of his delights. L'Esrange.

A glut of study and retirement in the first part of my life, cast me into this; and this will throw me again into study and retirement. Pope to Swift.

3. More than enough; overmuch.

If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

4. Any thing that fills up a passage.

The water some suppose to pass from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs, through certain subterranean conduits or channels, until they were by some glut, stop, or other means, arrested in their passage. Woodward.

GLUTINOUS. adj. [glutineux, French; from gluten, Latin.] Gluy; viscous; tenacious.

The cause of all vivification is a gentle and proportional heat, working upon a glutinous and yielding substance; for the heat doth bring forth spirit in that substance, and the substance being glutinous, produceth two effects; the one that the spirit is detained, and cannot break forth; the other, that the matter, being gentle and yielding, is driven forwards by the motion of the spirits, after some swelling, into shape and members. Bacon.

Next this marble venom'd feat,
Smear'd with gums of glutinous heat. Milton.
Nourishment too viscid and glutinous to be subdued
by the vital force. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GLUTINOUSNESS. n. f. [from glutinous.]

Viscosity; tenacity.
There is a resistance in fluids, which may arise from their elasticity, glutinousness, and the friction of their parts. Cbeyne.

GLUTTON. n. f. [glutton, French; from glutio, Latin, to swallow.]

1. One who indulges himself too much in eating.

The Chinese eat horseflesh at this day, and some gluttons have used to have catsfish baked. Bacon.
Through Macer's gullet she runs down
While the vile glutton dines alone;
And, void of modesty and thought,
She follows Bibo's endless draught. Prior.

If a glutton was to say in excuse of his gluttony, that he only eats such things as it is lawful to eat, he would make as good an excuse for himself as the greedy, covetous, ambitious tradesman, that should say, he only deals in lawful business. Larv.

2. One eager of any thing to excess.

The rest bring home in state the happy pair
To that last scene of bliss, and leave them there;
All those free joys insatiably to prove,
With which rich beauty tealts the glutton love. Covely.

Gluttons in murder, wanton to destroy,
Their fatal arts so impiously employ. Granville.

To GLUTTONISE. v. n. [from glutton.]

To play the glutton; to be luxurious.

GLUTTONOUS. adj. [from glutton.] Given to excessive feeding; delighted overmuch with food.

When they would smile and fawn upon his debts,
And take down th' interest in their glut'nous maws. Shakespeare.

The exceeding luxuriousness of this gluttonous age, wherein we prefs nature with overweighty burdens, and finding her strength defective, we take the work out of her hands, and commit it to the artificial help of strong waters. Raltrigh.

Well observe

The rule of not too much, by temperance taught
In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence Due nourishment, no gluttonous delight. Milton.

GLUTTONOUSLY. adv. [from gluttonous.]
With the voracity of a glutton.

GLUTTONY. n. f. [glutonie, French; from glutton.] Excess of eating; luxury of the table.

Gluttony, a vice in a great fortune, a curse in a small. Holiday.

Their sumptuous gluttonies and gorgeous feasts,
On citron tables or Atlantick stone. Milton.
Well may they fear some miserable end,
Whom gluttony and want at once attend. Dryden.

The inhabitants of cold moist countries are generally more fat than those of warm and dry; but the most common cause is too great a quantity of food, and too small a quantity of motion; in plain English, gluttony and laziness. Arbutnot.

GLUY. adj. [from gluc.] Viscous; tenacious; glutinous.

It is called balsamick mixture, because it is a gluy spumous matter. Harvey on Conf.
With gluy wax some new foundations lay
Of virgin combs. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

Whatever is the composition of the vapour let it have but one quality of being very gluy or viscous, and it will mechanically solve all the phenomena of the grotto. Addison.

GLYN. n. f. [Irish; gleann, glyn, plur. Erse; glenn, Scottish.] A hollow between two mountains.

in the days of Saul. 1 Sa. xvii. 12.
A kind imagination makes a bold man have vigour and enterprise in his air and motion : it stamps value upon his face, and tells the people he is to go for so much. Collier.
Clipping should be finally stopped, and the money which remains should go according to its true value. Locke.
28. To move by mechanism.
This pope is decrepid, and the bell goes to him. Bacon.
Clocks will go as they are set ; but man,
Irregular man's never constant, never certain. Orway.
'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go just alike, yet each believes his own. Pope.
29. To be in motion from whatever cause.
The weyward sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Clipt and washed money goes about, when the entire and weighty lies hoarded up. Waller.
30. To move in any direction.
Doctor, he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies : if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions. Shakespeare.
Shall the thadow go forward ten degrees, or go back ten degrees ? 2 Kings xx. 9.

Athenians, know
Against right reason all your counsels go;
This is not fair, nor profitable that,
Nor 't'other question proper for debate. Dryden.

33. To be in a state of compact or partnership.

As a lion was bestriding an ox that he had newly plucked down, a robber passing by cried out to him, half shares: you should go your snip, says the lion,
if you were not so forward to be your own carver.

There was a hunting match agreed upon betwixt a lion, an ass, and a fox, and they were to go equal shares in the booty. L'Esfrange.

33. To be regulated by any method; to proceed upon principles.

Where the multitude beareth sway, laws that shall tend to the preservation of that state must make common smaller offices to go by lot, for fear of strife and divisions likely to arise. Hooker.

We are to go by another measure. Spratt.
The principles I there went on, I see no reason to alter. Locke.

The reasons that they went upon were very specious and probable. Bensley.

35. To be pregnant.

Great bellied women,
That had not half a week to go. Shakespeare.

The fruit she goes with,
I pray that it good time and life may find.
Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Of living creatures some are a longer time in the womb, and some shorter: women go commonly nine months, the cow and the ewe about six months. Bacon.

Some do go with their young the sixth part of a year or two over or under, that is, about six or nine weeks: and the whelps of these see not till twelve days. Brown.

And now with second hopes she goes,
And calls Lucina to her throws. Milton.

36. To pass; not to remain.

She began to afflict him, and his strength went from him. Judges, xvi. 19.

When our merchants have brought them, if our commodities will not be enough, our money must go to pay for them. Locke.

37. To pass, or be loosed; not to be retained.

Then he lets me go,
And, with his head over his shoulder turn'd,
He seem'd to find his way without his eyes. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

Let go the hand of that arch heretick. Shakespeare.

not willing to let any go for ornament, if they will not serve for use. Felton.

39. To be in order of time or place.

We must enquire farther what is the connexion of that sentence with those that go before it, and those which follow it. Watts.

40. To reach or be extended to any degree.

Can another man perceive that I am conscious of any thing, when I perceive it not myself? No man's knowledge here can go beyond his experience. Locke.

41. To extend to consequences.

It is not one master that either directs or takes notice of these: It goes a great way barely to permit them. L'Esfrange.

42. To reach by effects.

Considering the cheapness, so much money might go farther than a sum ten times greater could do now. Wilkins.

43. To extend in meaning.

His amorous expressions go no further than virtue may allow. Dryden's Ovid, Preface.

44. To spread; to be dispersed; to reach.

Whose flesh, torn off by lumps, the rav'nous foe
In morsels cut, to make it farther go. Tate.

45. To have influence; to be of weight; to be of value.

I had another reason to decline it, that ever uses to go far with me upon all new inventions or experiments: which is, that the best trial of them is by time, and observing whether they live or no. Temple.

'Tis a rule that goes a great way in the government of a sober man's life, not to put any thing to hazard that may be secured by industry, consideration, or circumspection. L'Esfrange.

Whatever appears against their prevailing vice goes for nothing, being either not applied, or passing for libel and slander. Swift.

46. To be rated one with another; to be considered with regard to greater or less worth.

I think, as the world goes, he was a good sort of man enough. Arbutnot.

47. To contribute; to conduce; to concur; to be an ingredient.

The medicines which go to the ointments are so strong, that, if they were used inwards, they would kill those that use them. Bacon.

More parts of the greater wheels go to the making one part of their lines. Glanville's Scepis.

There goes a great many qualifications to the completing this relation; there is no small share of honour and conscience and sufficiency required. Celtier of Friar's Ship.

I give the sex their revenge, by laying together the many vicious characters that prevail in the male world, and shewing the different ingredients that go to the making up of such different humours and constitutions. Addison.

Something better and greater than high birth and quality must go toward acquiring those demonstrations of publick esteem and love. Swift to Pope.

48. To fall out, or terminate; to succeed.

Your strong possession much more than your right,
Or else it must go wrong with you and me. Shakespeare.

Howe'er the business goes, you have made fault,
I th' boldness of your speech. Shakespeare.

I will send to thy father, and they shall declare unto him how things go with thee. Tob. s. 8.

In many armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory shall go on the one side; and yet, if it be tried by the grols, it would go on the other side. Bacon.

It has been the constant observation of all, that if a minister had a cause depending in the court, it was ten to one but it went against him. South.

At the time of the prince's landing, the father, easily foreseeing how things would go, went over,
like many others, to the prince. Swift.

Whether the cause goes for me or against me, you must pay me the reward. Watts's Logic.

49. To be in any state. This sense is im-

cle. Job, xv.

He called his name Beriah, because it went evil with his house. 1 Chron. vii. 23.

50. To proceed in train or consequence.

How goes the night, boy?
—The moon is down: I have not heard the clock
And she goes down at twelve. Shakespeare.

I had hope,
When violence was ceased, and war on earth,
All would have then gone well. Milton.

Duration in itself is to be considered as going on in one constant, equal, uniform course. Locke.

51. To go about. To attempt; to endeavour; to set one's self to any business.

O dear father,
It is thy business that I go about. Shakespeare.

I lost him; but so found, as well I saw
He could not lose himself, but went about His father's business. Milton.

Which answer exceedingly united the vulgar minds to them, who concurred only with them as they saw them like to prevail in what they went about. Clarendon.

Some men, from a false persuasion that they cannot reform their lives, and root out their old vicious habits, never so much as attempt endeavour, or go about it. South.

Either my book is plainly enough written to be rightly understood by those who peruse it with attention and indifference, or else I have writ miscé obscurely that it is in vain to go about to mend it. Locke.

They never go about, as in former times, to hide or palliate their vices; but expose them freely to view. Swift.

52. To Go aside. To err; to deviate from the right.

If any man's wife go aside, and commit a trespass against him. Numb. v. 12.

53. To Go between. To interpose; to moderate between two.

I did go between them, as I said; but more than that, he loved her; for, indeed, he was mad for her. Shakespeare.

54. To Go by. To pass away unnoticed.

Do not you come my tardiness to chide,
That laps'd in time and passion, lets go by
Th' important acting of your dread command. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

So much the more our carver's excellent,
Which lets go by, some sixteen years, and makes her
As she liv'd now. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

What's that to us? The time goes by; away. Shakespeare.

55. To Go by. To find or get in the conclusion.

In argument with men a woman ever
Goes by the worst, whatever be her cause. Milton.

He's sure to go by the worst, that contends with an adversary that is too mighty for him. L'Esfrange.

56. To Go by. To observe as a rule.

'Tis not to be supposed, that by searching one can positively judge of the size and form of a stone; and indeed the frequency of the fits, and violence of the symptoms, are a better rule to go by. Sharp's Surgery.

57. To Go down. To be swallowed; to be received, not rejected.

Nothing so ridiculous, nothing, so impossible, but it goes down whole with him for truth and earnest. L'Esfrange.

Folly will not easily go down in its own natural form with discerning judges. Dryden.

If he be hungry, bread will go down. Locke.

Ministers are so wise to leave their proceedings to be accounted for by reasoners at a distance, who often mould them into the systems that do not only go down very well in the coffee-house, but are supplies for pamphlets in the present age. Swift.

58. To Go in and out. To do the business of life.

The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in. Pf.

59. To Go in and out. To be at liberty.

He shall go in and out, and find pasture. Jobn.

60. To Go off. To die; to go out of life; to de cease.

I would the friends we miss were safe arrived,
Some must go off; and yet, by these I see,
So great a day as this is cheaply bought. Shakespeare.

In this manner he went off, not like a man that departed out of life, but one that returned to his abode. Tatler.

61. To Go off. To depart from a post.

The leaders having charge from you to stand,
Will not go off until they hear you speak. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

62. To Go on. To make attack.

Dryden's Æn.

GO'DLESS. adj. [from god.] Without fence of duty to God : atheistical ; wicked ; irrereligious ; impious.

Of these two sorts of men, both godless, the one has utterly no knowledge of God, and the other studies how to persuade themselves that there is no such thing to be known. Hooker.

That godless crew Rebellious. Milton.

For faults not his, for guilt and crimes
Of godless men, and of rebellious times,
Him his ungrateful country sent,
Their best Camillus, into banishment. Dryden.

GO'DLIKE. adj. [god and like.] Divine ; resembling a divinity ; supremely excellent.

Thus Adam his illustrious guest besought,
And thus the godlike angel answer'd mild. Milton.
Musing and much revolving in his breast,
How best the mighty work he might begin
Of Saviour to mankind, and which way first Publish his godlike office now mature. Milton.

That prince shall be so wise and godlike, as, by established laws of liberty, to secure protection and encouragement to the honest industry of mankind. Locke.

GO'DLING. n. f. [from god.] A little divinity ; a diminutive god.

Thy pony godlings of inferior race,
Whose humble statues are content with brass. Dryden.

GO'DLINESS. n. f. [from godly.]

1. Piety to god.

2. General observation of all the duties prescribed by religion.

Virtue and godliness of life are required at the hands of the minister of God. Hooker.

GO'DLY. adj. [from god.]

1. Pious towards God.

Grant that we may hereafter live a godly, righteous, and sober life. Common Prayer.

2. Good ; righteous ; religious.

Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, for the faithful fail among the children of men. Pf. xii. 1.

The same church is really holy in this world, in relation to all godly persons contained in it, by a real infused sanctity. Pearson.

GODLY. adv. Piously ; righteously. By analogy it should be godlily, but the repetition of the syllable is too harsh.

The apostle St. Paul teacheth, that every one that will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution. Hooker.

GO'DLYHEAD. n. f. [from godly.] Goodness ; righteousness. An old word.

For this, and many more such outrage,
I crave your godlyhead to affuage
The rancorous rigour of his might. Spenser.

GO'DSHIP. n. f. [from god.] The rank or character of a god ; deity ; divinity.

Discouraging largely on this theme,
O'er hills and dales their godships came. Prior.

GO'DSON. n. f. [god and son.] One for whom one has been sponsor at the font.

What, did my father's godson seek your life ?
He whom my father named ? your Edgar ? Shakespeare.

GO'DWARD. adj. To Godward is toward God. So we read, Hac Aresbusa tenus, for hæthenus Aresbusa.

And such trust have we through Christ to Godward. 2 Cor.

GO'DWIT. n. f. [gob, good, and wit, an animal.] A bird of particular delicacy.

Nor ortolans nor godwits crown his board. Cowley.

GO'DYELD. } adv. [corrupted from God
GO'DYIELD. } shield or protect.] A term of thanks. Now not used.

Herein I teach you,
How you should bid godyield us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

GOEL. adj. [golen, Saxon.] Yellow. An old word.

In March, at the furthest, dry season or wet,
Hop roots so well chosen let skilful go set ;
The goeler and younger, the better I love ;
Well gutted and pared, the better they prove. Tusser.

GO'ER. n. f. [from go.]

1. One that goes : a runner.

I would they were in Africk both together,
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The goer back. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Such a man

Might be a copy to these younger times;
Which, follow'd well, would now demonstrate them
But goers backward. Shakef. All's well.
Nothing could hurt either of us so much as the intervening officious impertinence of those goers between us, who in Erland pretend to intimacies with you, and in Ireland to intimacies with me. Pope to Swift.

2. A walker; one that has a gait or manner of walking good or bad.
The earl was so far from being a good dancer,
that he was no graceful goer. Watson.

3. The foot. Obsolete.

A double mantle, cast
Athwart his shoulders, his faire goers grac'd
With fitted shoes. Chapman.

To GOGGLE. v. n. To look askint.

Inflam'd all over with disgrace,
To be seen by her in such a place,
Which made him hang his head, and scowl,
And wink and goggle like an owl.
Nor sighs, nor groans, nor goggling eyes did want. Hudibras.

GOGGLE-EYED. adj. [*rægl*egen, Saxon.]
Squint-eyed; not looking straight.

They are deformed, unnatural, or lame; and very unfeemly to look upon, except to men that be goggle-eyed themselves. Ascbam.

GO'ING. n. s. [from go.]

1. The act of walking.

When nobles are their taylor's tutors,
No heretics burnt, but wenchers suitors,
Then comes the time, who lives to see't,
That going shall be us'd with feet. Shakespeare.

2. Pregnancy.

The time of death has a far greater latitude than that of our birth; most women coming, according to their reckoning, within the compass of a fortnight; that is, the twentieth part of their going. Grew's Cosmol. Sacra.

3. Departure.

Thy going is not lonely; with thee goes
Thy husband; him to follow thou art bound. Milton.

GOLA. n. s. The same with CYMATIUM.

In a cornice the gola, or cymatium of the corona,
the coping, the modillions or dentelli, make a noble show. Spectator.

GOLD. n. s. [guld, Saxon; golud, riches, Welsh. It is called gold in our English tongue, either of geel, as Scaliger says, which is in Dutch to shine; or of another Dutch word, which is gelden, and signifies in Latin valere, in English to be of price or value: hence cometh their ordinary word gelt, for money. Peacham on Drawing.]

1. Gold is the heaviest, the most dense, the most simple, the most ductile, and most fixed of all bodies, not to be injured either by air or fire, and seeming incorruptible. It is soluble by means of sea-salt; but is injured by no other salt.
Gold is frequently found native, and very rarely in a state of ore. Pure Gold is so fixed, that Boerhaave informs us of an ounce of it set in the eye of a glass furnace for two months, without losing a single grain. Hill on Fossils.

Gold hath these natures: greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, plantness or softness, immunity from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow. Bacon's Natural History.

Ah! Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shakef.

We readily say this is a gold, and that a silver goblet, only by the different figures and colours represented to the eye by the pencil. Locke.

The gold fraught vessel which mad tempests beat,
He sees now vainly make to his retreat. Dryden.

Money.
For me, the gold of France did not seduce,

Although I did admit it as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended. Shakef.

Thou that so stoutly had resisted me,
Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;
For I have bought it with an hundred blows. Skak.

3. It is used for any thing pleasing or valuable. So among the ancients χρυσή ἀφροδίτη; and animamque moreſque aureos educit in astra. Horace.

The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakef. Henry V.

GOLD of Pleasure. n. s. [myagramm.] A plant.
GO'LD BEATER. n. s. [gold and beat.] One whose occupation is to beat or foliate gold to gold other matter.

Our goldbeaters, though, for their own profit sake, they are wont to use the finest gold they can get, yet they scruple not to employ coined gold; and that the mint-masters are wont to alloy with copper or silver, to make the coin more stiff, and less subject to be wasted by attrition. Boyle.

GO'LD BEATER'S Skin. n. s. The intestinum rectum of an ox, which goldbeaters lay between the leaves of their metal while they beat it, whereby the membrane is reduced thin, and made fit to apply to cuts or small fresh wounds, as is now the common practice. Quincy.

When your gillyflowers blow, if they break the pod, open it with a penknife at each division, as low as the flower has burst it, and bind it about with a narrow slip of goldbeater's skin, which moisten with your tongue, and it will stick together. Mortimer.

GO'LD BOUND. adj. [gold and bound.] Encompassed with gold.

Thy air,
Thou other goldbound brow is like the first. Shakef.

GO'LDEN. adj. [from gold.]

1. Made of gold; consisting of gold.

Of golden metal, that mult found my brow,
Were red hot steel to fear me to the brain. Shakef.

Nine royal knights in equal rank succeed,
Each warrior mounted on a fiery steed,
In golden armour glorious to behold;
The rivets of their arms were nail'd with gold. Dryd.

2. Shining; bright; splendid; resplendent.

So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Through the transparent bosom of the deep. Shakef.

'Tis better to be lowly born

Than wear a golden sorrow. Shakef. Henry VIII.

Heaven's golden winged herald late he saw
To a poor Galilean virgin sent. Craslow.

To her hard yoke you must hereafter bow,
How'er she shines all golden to you now. Dryden.

And fee the guardian angels of the good,
Reclining soft on many a golden cloud. Rowe.

3. Yellow; of the colour of gold.
Golden rustling hath a gold coloured coat under a rustlet hair, and its flesh of a yellow colour. Mortimer.

4. Excellent; valuable.

speaks goldenly of his profit. Shakef. As you like it.

GO'LD FINCH. n. s. [goldfinc, Saxon.] A singing bird, so named from his golden colour. This is called in Staffordshire proud taylor.

Of singing birds they have linnets, goldfinches, ruddocks, Canary-birds, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers others. Carew.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes that hopp'd from side to side. Dryden.

GO'LD FINDER. n. s. [gold and find.] One who finds gold. A term ludicrously applied to those that empty jakes.

His empty paunch that he might fill,
He suck'd his vittels through a quill;
Untouch'd it pass'd between his grinders,
Or't had been happy for goldfinders. Swift.
