cessive bigness. Bacon.

People were surpris'd at the bigness and uncouth deformity of the camel. L'Éstrange's Fables.

The brain of man, in respect of his body, is much larger than any other animal's; exceeding in bigness three oxen's brains. Ray on the Creation.

2. Size, whether greater or smaller; comparative bulk.

Several sorts of rays make vibrations of several bignesses, which, according to their bignesses, excite sensations of several colours; and the air, according to their bignesses, excites sensations of several sounds. Newton's Opticks.

BIGOT. n. f. [The etymology of this word is unknown; but it is supposed, by Camden and others, to take its rise from some occasional phrase.] A man devoted unreasonably to a certain party, prejudiced in favour of certain opinions; a blind zealot. It is used often with to before the object of zeal; as, a bigot to the Cartesian tenets.

Religious spite and pious spleen bred first
This quarrel, which so long the bigots nurs'd. Tate.

In philosophy and religion, the bigots of all parties are generally the most positive. Watts.

BIGOTED. adj. [from bigot.] Blindly pre-possessed in favour of something; irration-ally zealous; with to.

Bigoted to this idol, we disclaim
Rest, health, and ease, for nothing but a name.

Presbyterian merit, during the reign of that weak, bigoted, and ill-advised prince, will easily be computed. Swift.

BIGOTRY. n. f. [from bigot.]

1. Blind zeal; prejudice; unreasonable warmth in favour of party or opinions;
with the particle to.

Were it not for a bigotry to our own tenets,
we could hardly imagine, that so many absurd, wicked, and bloody principles, should pretend to support themselves by the gospel. Watts.

2. The practice or tenet of a bigot.

Our silence makes our adversaries think we persist in those bigotries, which all good and sensible men despise. Pope.

BIGSWOLN. adj. [from big and swollen.]

Turgid; ready to burst.
Might my bigswoln heart
Vent all its griefs, and give a loose to sorrow.

BIG-UDDERED. adj. [from big and udder.]

Having large udders; having dugswelled with milk.

Now, driv'n before him through the arching rock,

Came tumbling heaps on heaps th' unnumber'd fleck,

Big-udder'd ewes, and goats of female kind. Pope.

BILANDER. n. f. [belandre, Fr.] A small vessel of about eighty tons burden, used for the carriage of goods. It is a kind of hoy, manageable by four or five men, and has masts and sails after the manner of a hoy. They are used chiefly in Holland, as being particularly fit for the canals. Savary. Trevoux.

Like bilanders to creep
Along the coast, and land in view to keep. Dryd.

BILBERRY. n. f. [from bilg, Sax. a bladder, and berry, according to Skinner;
and berri, according to Skinner;
and berri, according to Skinner;
and a sweet berry of that shrub; whortleberry.

Cricket, to Windsor's chimneys shalt thou leap;
There pinch the maids as blue as bilberries. Shak.

BILBO. n. f. [corrupted from Bilboa, where the best weapons are made.] A rapier; a sword.

To be compass'd like a good bilbo, in the circumference of a peck; hilt to point, beel to head.

BILBOES. n. f. A sort of stocks, or wooden shackles for the feet, used for punishing offenders at sea.

Methought I lay
Worse than the mutines in the bilboes. Shaksp.

BILE. n. f. [bilis, Lat.] A thick, yellow, bitter liquor; separated in the liver, collected in the gall-bladder, and discharged into the lower end of the duodenum, or beginning of the jejunum, by the common duct. Its use is to sheathe or blunt the acids of the chyle, because they, being entangled with its sulphurs, thicken it so, that it cannot be sufficiently diluted by the succus pancreaticus, to enter the lacteal vessels. Quincy.

In its progression, soon the labour'd chyle
Receives the confluent rills of bitter bile;
Which, by the liver fever'd from the blood,
And striving through the gall-pipe, here unload
Their yellow stream. Blackmore.

BILE. n. f. [bile, Sax. perhaps from bilis, Lat. This is generally spelt boil; but,
I think, less properly.] A fore angry feeling.

But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter;

Or rather a disease that's in my flesh;
Thou art a bile in my corrupted blood. Shaksp.

Those biles did run—say so—did not the general run? were not that a botchy sore? Shaksp.

A furunculus is a painful tubercle, with a broad basis, arising in a cone. It is generally called a bile, and is accompanied with inflammation, pulsation, and tension. Wifeman.

BILGE. n. f. The compass or breadth of a ship's bottom. Skinner.

BILGE. v. n. [from the noun.] To spring a leak; to let in water, by striking upon a rock: a sea term; now bilge.

BILIARY. adj. [from bilis, Lat.] Belonging to the bile.

Voracious animals, and such as do not chew, have a great quantity of gall; and some of them have the biliary duct inserted into the pylorus.

Bi'LINGSGATE. n. f. [A cant word, borrowed from Bilingate in London, a place where there is always a crowd of low people, and frequent brawls and foul language.] Ribaldry; foul language.

There stript, fair rhetorick languish'd on the ground,

And shameful bilingate her robes adorn. Pope.
BILINGUOUS. adj. [bilinguis, Lat.] Having, or speaking, two tongues.

Bi'LIOUS. adj. [from bilis, Lat.] Consisting of bile; partaking of bile.

Why bilious juice a golden light puts on,
And floods of chyle in silver currents run. Garth.

When the taste of the mouth is bitter, it is a sign of a redundancy of a bilious alkali. Arbutnot.

To BILK. v. a. [derived by Mr. Lye from the Gothick bilaican.] To cheat; to defraud, by running in debt and avoiding payment.

Bilk'd rationsers for yeomen stood prepar'd. Dryden.

What comedy, what farce can more delight,
Than grinning hunger, and the pleasing sight
Of your bilk'd hopes? Dryden.

BILL. n. f. [bile, Sax. See BALL.] The beak of a fowl.

Their bills were thwarted crossways at the end, and with these they would cut an apple in two at one snap. Carew.

It may be tried, whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer bills, or greater or longer talons. Bacon.

In his bill
An olive leaf he brings, pacifick sign! Milton.
No crowing cock does there his wings display,
Nor with his horny bill provoke the day. Dryden.

BILL. n. f. [bille, Sax. tribille, a two-edged axe.]

1. A kind of hatchet with a hooked point, used in country work, as a bedging bill; so called from its resemblance in form to the beak of a bird of prey.

Standing troops are servants armed, who use the lance and sword, as other servants do the fiddle or the bill, at the command of those who entertain them. Temple.

2. A kind of weapon anciently carried by the foot; a battle axe.

Yea d. staff women manage rusty bills;
Against rly feat both young and old rebel. Shak.

BILL. n. f. [billet, Fr.]

1. A written paper of any kind.

Particular addition from the bill
That writes them a'l alike. Shakespeare.

2. An account of money.

Ordinary expence ought to be limited by a man's estate, and ordered to the best, that the bills may be less than the estimation abroad. Bacon.

3. A law presented to the parliament, not yet made an act.

No new laws can be made, nor old laws abrogated or altered, but by parliament; where bills are prepared, and presented to the two houses. Bacon.

How now for mitigation of this bill,
Urg'd by the commons? doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no? Shakespeare.

4. An act of parliament.

There will be no way left for me to tell you that I remember you, and that I love you, but that one, which needs no open warrant, or secret conveyance; which no bills can preclude, nor no kings prevent. Atterbury.

5. A physician's prescription.

Like him that took the doctor's bill,
And swallow'd it instead o' th' pill. Hudibras.
The medicine was prepared according to the bill. L'Estrange.

Let them, but under your superiors, kill,
When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill.
Dryden.

6. An advertisement.

And in despair, their empty pit to fill,
Set up some foreign monster in a bill. Dryden.

7. [In law.]

1. An obligation, but without condition or forfeiture for non-payment. 2. A declaration in writing, that expresseth either the grief and the wrong that the complainant hath suffered by the party complained of; or else some fault that the party complained of hath committed against some law. This bill is sometimes offered to justices errants in the general assizes; but most to the lord chancellor. It containeth the fact complained of, the damages thereby suffered, and petition of process against the defendant for redress. Cowell.

The fourth thing very maturely to be consulted by the jury, is, what influence their finding the bill may have upon the kingdom. Swift.

8. A bill of mortality. An account of the numbers that have died in any district.

Most who took in the weekly bills of mortality, made little other use of them, than to look at the foot, how the burials encreas'd or decreas'd. Graunt.

So liv'd our fires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,
And multiply'd with theirs the weekly bill. Dryden.

9. A bill of fare. An account of the season of provisions, or of the dishes at a feast.

It may seem somewhat difficult to make out the bills of fare for some of the forementioned suppers. Arbutnot.

10. A bill of exchange. A note ordering the payment of a sum of money in one place, to some person assigned by the drawer or remitter, in consideration of the value paid to him in another place.

The comfortable sentences are bills of exchange, upon the credit of which we lay our cares down, and receive provisions. Taylor.

All that a bill of exchange can do, is to direct to whom money due, or taken up upon credit, in a foreign country, shall be paid. Locke.

To BILL. v. n. [from bill, a beak.] To carefs, as doves by joining bills; to be fond.

Doves, they say, will bill, after their pecking, and their murmuring. Ben Jonson's Cataline.

Still amorous, and fond, and billing,
Like Philip and Mary on a shilling. Hudibras.
They bill, they tread; Alcyone compress'd
Seven days sits brooding on her floating nest. Dryden.

He that bears th' artillery of Jove,
The strong pounc'd eagle, and the billing dove. Dryden.

To BILL. v. a. [from bill, a writing.] To publish by an advertisement: a cant word.

His masterpiece was a composition that he billed about under the name of a sovereign antidote. L'Estrange.

Bi'LLET. n. f. [billet, French.]

1. A small paper; a note.

When he found this little billet, in which was only written Remember Caesar, he was exceedingly confounded. Clarendon.

2. A ticket directing soldiers at what house to lodge.

3. Billet-doux, or a soft billet; a love letter.

'Twas them, Belinda! if report say true,
Thy eyes first open'd on a billet-doux. Pope.

4. [Bilot, Fr.] A small log of wood for the chimney.

Let us then calculate, when the hulk of a faggot or billet is dilated and rarified to the degree of fire, how vast a place it must take up. Digby on Bodies.
Their billet at the fire was found. Prior.

To Bi'LLET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To direct a soldier by a ticket, or note, where he is to lodge.

Retire thee; go where thou art billeted: Away, I say. Shakespeare.

2. To quarter soldiers.

They remembered him of charging the kingdom, by billeting soldiers. Raleigh.

The counties throughout the kingdom were so incensed, and their affections poisoned, that they refused to suffer the soldiers to be billeted upon them. Clarendon.

Bi'LLIARDS. n. f. without a singular. [billard, Fr. of which that language has no etymology; and therefore they probably derived from England both the play and the name, which is corrupted from balyards, yards or sticks with which a ball is driven along a table. Thus Spenser:

Balyards much unfit,
And shuttlecocks misceming manly wit. Hubberd's Tale.

A game at which a ball is forced against another on a table.

Let it alone; let 's to billiards. Shakespeare.

Even nose and cheek withal,
Smooth as is the billiard ball. Ben Jonson.

Some are forced to bound or fly upwards, almost like ivory balls meeting on a billiard table. Boyle.

When the ball obeys the stroke of a billiard stick, it is not any action of the ball, but bare passion. Locke.

Bi'LLOW. n. f. [bilge, Germ. bolg, Dan. probably of the same original with bilg, Sax. a bladder.] A wave swollen, and hollow.

From whence the river Dee, as silver clear,
His tumbling billows rolls with gentle roar. Spenser.
Billows sink by degrees, even when the wind is down that first stirr'd them. Wotton.

Chafing Nereus with his trident thaws
The billows from the bottom. Denham.

To Bi'LLOW. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell, or roll, as a wave.

The billowing snow, and violence of the snow'r,
That from the hills disperseth their dreadful store,
And o'er the vales collected ruin pour. Prior.

Bi'LLOWY. adj. [from billow.] Swelling; turgid; wavy.

And whitening down the mossy-tinctur'd stream,
Descends the billowy foam. Thomson.

BiN. n. f. [binne, Sax.] A place where bread, or corn, or wine, is reposit.

The most convenient way of picking hops, is into a long square frame of wood, called a bin. Mortimer.

As when, from rooting in a bin,
All powder'd o'er from tail to chin,
A lively maggot sallies out,
You know him by his hazel snout. Swift.

BiNARY. adj. [from binus, Lat.] Two; dual; double.

BiNARY Arithmetick. A method of computation proposed by Mr. Leibnitz, in which, in lieu of the ten figures in the common arithmetick, and the progression from ten to ten, he has only two figures, and uses the simple progression from two to two. This method appears to be the same with that used by the Chinese four thousand years ago. Chambers.

To BIND. v. a. pret. I bound; particip. pass. bound, or bounden. [bindan, Sax.]

1. To confine with bonds; to enchain.

Wilt thou play with him as with a bird? or wilt thou bind him for thy maidens? Job.

Who hath bound the waters in a garment?
Proverbs.
3. To fasten to any thing; to fix by circumvolution.
Thou shalt bind this line of scarlet thread in the window, which thou didst let us down by. Jysua.
Keep my commandments, and live; and my law, as the apple of thine eye. Bind them upon thy fingers, write them upon the table of thine heart. Proverbs.
4. To fasten together.
Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles, to burn them. Matthew.
5. To cover a wound with dressings and bandages: with up.
When he saw him, he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds. Luke.
Having filled up the bared cranium with our dressings, we bound up the wound. Wifeman.
6. To oblige by stipulation, or oath.
If a man vow a vow, or swear an oath, to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word. Numbers.
Swear by the solemn oath that binds the gods. Pope.
7. To oblige by duty or law; to compel; to constrain.
Though I am bound to every act of duty, I am not bound to that all slaves are free to. Shak.
Duties expressly required in the plain language of Scripture, ought to bind our consciences more than those which are but dubiously inferred. Watts.
8. To oblige by kindness.
9. To confine; to hinder: with in, if the restraint be local; with up, if it relate to thought or act.
Now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in
To fancy doubts and fears. Shakespeare.
You will sooner, by imagination, bind a bird from singing, than from eating or flying. Bacon.
Though passion be the most obvious and general, yet it is not the only cause that binds up the understanding, and confines it, for the time, to one object, from which it will not be taken off. Locke.
In such a dismal place,
Where joy ne'er enters, which the sun ne'er cheers.
Bound in with darkness, overspread with damps. Dryden.
10. To hinder the flux of the bowels; to make costive.
Rhubarb hath manifestly in it parts of contrary operations; parts that purge, and parts that bind the body. Bacon.
The whey of milk doth loose, the milk doth bind. Herbert.
11. To restrain.
The more we are bound up to an exact narration, we want more life, and fire, to animate and inform the story. Felton.
12. To bind a book. To put it in a cover.
Was ever book, containing such vile matter,
So fairly bound? Shakespeare.
Those who could never read the grammar,
When my dear volumes touch the hammer,
May think books best, as richest bound. Prior.
13. To bind to. To oblige to serve some one.
If still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryd.
14. To bind to. To contract with any body.
Art thou bound to a wife, seek not to be loosed. Corinthians.
15. To bind over. To oblige to make appearance.
Sir Roger was ffiggered with the reports concerning this woman, and would have bound her over to the county sessions. Addison.

BIRD-LIME. n. f. [from bird and lime.] A glutinous substance, which is spread upon twigs, by which the birds that light upon them are entangled.

Birdlime is made of the bark of holly: they pound it into a tough paste, that no fibres of the wood be left; then it is washed in a running stream, till no motes appear, and put up to ferment, and scummed, and then laid up for use; at which time they incorporate with it a third part of nut oil, over the fire. But the bark of our lantern, or wayfaring shrub, will make very good birdlime.

Cwambers.
Holly is of so viscous a juice, as they make birdlime of the bark of it. Bacon's Natural History.

With stores of gather'd glue contrive
To stop the vents and crannies of their hive;
Not birdlime, or Idean pitch, produce
A more tenacious mass of clammy juice. Dryden.
I'm ensnar'd;

Heav'n's birdlime wraps me round, and glues my wings, Dryden.

The woodpecker, and other birds of this kind, because they prey upon flies which they catch with their tongue, have a couple of bags filled with a viscous humour, as if it were a natural birdlime, or liquid glue. Grewo.

BIRDMAN. n. f. [from bird and man.] A birdcatcher; a fowler.

BIRTH. n. f. [beoþ, Sax.]

1. The act of coming into life.

But thou art fair, and at thy birth, dear boy,
Nature and fortune join'd to make thee great.

Shakespeare's King John.
In Spain, our springs like old men's children be,
Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy;
No kindly showers fall on our barren earth,
To hatch the seasons in a timely birth. Dryden.

2. Extraction; lineage.

Most virtuous virgin, born of heavenly birth. Spens.
All truth I shall relate: nor first can I Myself to be of Grecian birth deny. Denbam.

3. Rank which is inherited by descent.

He doth object, I am too great of birth. Skak.
Be just in all you say and all you do;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden.

4. The condition or circumstances in which any man is born.

High in his chariot then Hæfusus came,
A foe by birth to Troy's unhappy name. Dryden.

5. Thing born; production: used of vegetables, as well as animals.

The people fear me; for they do observe Unfather'd heirs, and loathly births of nature. Shakespeare.

That poets are far rarer births than kings,
Your noblest father prov'd. Ben Jonson.

Who of themselves
Abhor to join; and, by imprudence mix'd,
Produce prodigious births of body or mind. Milt.

She, for this many thousand years,
Seems to have practis'd with much care
To frame the race of woman fair;
Yet never could a perfect birth
Produce before, to grace the earth. Waller.

His eldest birth
Flies, mark'd by heav'n, a fugitive o'er earth. Prior.
The vallics smile, and with their flow'ry face,
And wealthy births, confess the flood's embrace. Blackmore.

Others hatch their eggs, and tend the birth, till it is able to shift for itself. Addison.

6. The act of bringing forth.

That fair Syrian shepherdess
Who, after years of barrenness,
The highly favour'd Joseph bore
To him that serv'd for her before;
And at her next birth, much like thee,
Through paags fled to felicity. Milton.

7. The seamen call a due or proper distance between ships lying at an anchor, or under sail, a birth. Also the proper place on board for the masts to put their chests, &c. is called the birth of that masts. Also a convenient place to moor a ship in, is called a birth. Harris.

coined by the emperours of Constantinople. Camden.

To BLAB. v. a. [blabberhen, Dutch.]
1. To tell what ought to be kept secret:
it usually implies rather thoughtlessness than treachery; but may be used in either sense.
The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day
Is crept into the bosom of the sea. Shakespeare.
Thy dues be done, and none left out,
Ere the blabbing eastern scout,
The nice morn on the Indian steep,
From her cabin'd loophole peep. Milton.
Nature has made man's breasts no windows,
To publish what he does within doors;
Nor what dark secrets there inhabit,
Unless his own rash folly blab it. Hudibras.
Sorrow nor joy can be disguis'd by art,
Our forehead blab the secrets of our heart. Dryd.
It is unlawful to give any kind of religious worship to a creature; but the very indices of the fathers cannot escape the index expurgatorius, for blabbing so great a truth. Stilllingfleet.
Nor whisper to the tattling reeds
The blackest of all female deeds;
Nor blab it on the lonely rocks,
Where echo fits, and lifting mocks. Swift.

2. To tell: in a good sense: not used.
That delightful engine of her thoughts,
That blab'd them with such pleasing eloquence,
Is torn from forth that pretty hollow cage. Shak.

To BLAB. v. n. To tattle; to tell tales.
Your mute I'll be;
When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not see. Shakespeare.

BLAB. n. f. [from the verb.] A telltale;
a thoughtless babbler; a treacherous betrayor of secrets.
The secret man heareth many confessions; for who will open himself to a blab, or babbler? Bacon.
To have reveal'd
Secrets of man, the secrets of a friend,
Contempt and scorn of all, to be excluded
All friendship, and avoided as a blab. Milton.
Whoever shews me a very inquisitive body, I'll shew him a blab, and one that shall make privacy as publick as a proclamation. L'Estrange.
I should have gone about shewing my letters, under the charge of secrecy, to every blab of my

make black; to blacken.

Blackening over the paper with ink, not only the ink would be quickly dried up, but the paper, that I could not burn before, we quickly set on fire. Boyle.

Then in his fury black'd the raven o'er,

And bid him peep in his white plumes no more.

Addison.

BLACKAMOOR. n. f. [from black and Moor.] A man by nature of a black complexion; a negro.

They are no more afraid of a blackamoor, or a lion, than of a nurse or a cat. Locke.

BLACKBERRIED Heath. [empetrum, Lat.]

The name of a plant.

BLACKBERRY Bush. n. f. [rubus, Lat.]

A species of bramble.

BLACKBERRY. n. f. The fruit of the bramble.

The policy of these crafty sneering rascals, that stale old mouse-eaten cheese Nestor, and that same dog-fox Ulysses, is not proved worth a blackberry.

Shakespeare.

Then sad he sung the Children in the Wood;

How blackberries they pluck'd in deserts wild;

BLACKBIRD. n. f. [from black and bird.]

The name of a bird.

Of singing birds, they have linnets, gold-finches, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers others.

Carew.

A schoolboy ran unto't, and thought

The crib was down, the blackbird caught. Swift.

To BLACKEN. v. a. [from black.]

1. To make of a black colour.

Bless'd by aspiring winds, he finds the strand

Blacken'd by crowds. Prior.

While the long sun's rays blacken all the way. Pope.

2. To darken; to cloud.

That little cloud that appeared at first to Elijah's servant no bigger than a man's hand, but presently after grew, and spread, and blackened the face of the whole heaven. South.

3. To defame, or make infamous.

Let us blacken him what we can, said that miscreant Harrison of the blessed king, upon the wording and drawing up his charge against his approaching trial. South.

The morals blacken'd, when the writings scape,

The libell'd person, and the pictur'd shape. Pope.

To BLACKEN. v. n. To grow black, or dark.

The hollow sound

Sung in the leaves, the forest shook around,

Air blacken'd, roll'd the thunder, gran'd the ground. Dryden.

BLACKISH. adj. [from black.] Somewhat black.

Part of it all the year continues in the form of a blackish oil. Boyle.

BLACKMOOR. n. f. [from black and Moor.]

A negro.

The land of Chus makes no part of Africa;

nor is it the habitation of blackmoors; but the country of Arabia, especially the Happy and Stony.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

More to west

The realm of Bacchus to the blackmoor sea. Milton.

BLACKNESS. n. f. [from black.]

1. Black colour.

Blackness is only a disposition to absorb, or reflect, without reflection, most of the rays of every sort that fall on the bodies. Locke.

There would emerge one or more very black spots, and, within those, other spots of an intenser blackness. Newton.

His tongue, his prating tongue, had chang'd him quite

To sooty blackness from the purest white. Addison.

2. Darknets.

His faults in him seem as the spots of heav'n,

More fiery by night's blacknets. Shakespeare.

3. atrociousness; horribleness; wickedness.

BLACKSMITH. n. f. [from black and smith.] A smith that works in iron; so called from being very smutty,

The blacksmith may forge what he pleases. Howel.

Shut up thy doors with bars and bolts; it will be impossible for the blacksmith to make them so fast, but a cat and a whoremaster will find a way through them. Spectator.

BLACKTAIL. n. f. [from black and tail.]

A fish; a kind of perch, by some called ruffs, or popes. See POPE. Diët.

BLACKTHORN. n. f. [from black and thorn.] The same with the sloe. See

PLUM, of which it is a species.

BLADDER. n. f. [blabbne, Saxon; blader,

Dutch.]

1. That vessel in the body which contains the urine.

The bladder should be made of a membranous substance, and extremely dilatable, for receiving and containing the urine till an opportunity of emptying it. Ray.

2. It is often filled with wind, to which allusions are frequently made.

That huge great body which the giant bore

Was vanquish'd quite, and of that monstrous mass

Was nothing left, but like an empty bladder was.

Spenser.

A bladder but moderately filled with air, and strongly tied, being held near the fire, grew exceeding turgid and hard; but being brought nearer to the fire, it suddenly broke, with so loud a noise

as made us for a while after almost deaf. Boyle.

3. It is usual for those, that learn to swim, to support themselves with blown bladders.

I have ventur'd,

Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,

These many summers in a sea of glory,

But far beyond my depth: my highblown pride

At length broke under me. Shakespeare.

4. A blister; a pustule.

BLADDER-NUT. n. f. [Raphyloendron,

Lat.] A plant.

BLADDER-SENA. n. f. [colutea, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BLADE. n. f. [blæd, bléd, Sax. bled,

Fr.] The spine of grass before it grows to seed; the green shoots of corn which rise from the seed. This seems to me the primitive signification of the word

blade; from which, I believe, the blade

of a sword was first named, because of its similitude in shape; and, from the blade of a sword, that of other weapons or tools.

There is hardly found a plant that yieldeth a red juice in the blade or ear, except it be the tree that beareth sanguis draconis. Bacon.

Send in the feeding flocks betimes, t' invade

The rising bulk of the luxuriant blade. Dryden.

If we were able to dive into her secret recesses,

we should find that the smallest blade of grass, or most contemptible weed, has its particular use.

Swift.

Hung on every spray, on every blade

Of grass, the myriad dewdrops twinkle round.

Thomson.

BLADE. n. f. [blatte, Germ. blad, Dutch.]

1. The sharp or striking part of a weapon or instrument, distinct from the handle.

It is usually taken for a weapon, and so called probably from the likeness of a sword

Sword blade to a blade of grass. It is commonly applied to the knife.

He fought all round about, his thirsty blade
To bathe in blood of faithless enemy. Fairy Qu.

She knew the virtue of her blade, nor would Pollute her fabre with ignoble blood. Dryden.

Be his this sword, whose blade of brass displays
A ruddy gleam, whose hilt a silver blaze. Pope.

2. A brisk man, either fierce or gay, called for in contempt. So we say mettle for courage.

You'll find yourself mistaken, Sir, if you'll take upon you to judge of these blades by their garbs, looks, and outward appearance. L'Esfrange.
Then, turning about to the hangman, he said,
Dispatch me, I pri'thee, this troublesome blade.
Prior.

BLADE of the Shoulder. } n. f. The bone BLADEBONE. } called by ana-tomists the scapula, or scapular bone.

He fell most furiously on the broiled relics of a shoulder of mutton, commonly called a bladebone.
Pope.

To BLADE. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish or fit with a blade.

BLADED. adj. [from blade.] Having blades or spires.

Her silver visage in the wat'ry glass,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass. Shak.

As where the lightning runs along the ground,
Nor bladed grass, nor bearded corn succeeds,
But scales of scurf and putrefaction breeds. Dryd.

BLAIN. n. f. [blezene, Sax. bleyne.
Dutch.] A pustule; a botch; a blister.

Sow all th' Athenian bosoms, and the crop
Be general leprosy. Shakespeare.

Botches and blains must all his flesh imbuss,
And all his people. Milton.

When'er I hear a rival nam'd,
I feel my body all inflam'd;
Which breaking out in boils and blains,
With yellow sith my linen stains. Swift.

BLAMABLE. adj. [from blame.] Culpable; faulty.

Virtue is placed between two extremes, which are on both sides equally blamable. Dryden.

BLAMABLENESS. n. f. [from blamable.] Fault; the state of being liable to blame; culpableness; faultiness.

BLAMABLY. adv. [from blamable.] Culpably; in a manner liable to censure.

A process may be carried on against a person, that is maliciously or blamably absent, even to a definitive sentence. Ayliffe.

To BLAME. v. a. [blamer, Fr.]

1. To censure; to charge with a fault:
it generally implies a slight censure.

Our pow'r
Shall do a court'ry to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not controul. Shakespeare.

Porphyrius, you too far did tempt your fate;
'Tis true, your duty to me it became;
But, praising that, I most your conduct blame.
Dryden.

Each finding, like a friend,
Something to blame, and something to commend.
Pope.

2. To blame has usually the particle for before th' fault.

The reader must not blame me for making use here all along of the word sentiment. Locke.

3. Sometimes, but rarely, of.

Tomorrow he blamed of inconsiderate rashness, for that he would busy himself in matters not belonging to his vocation. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

BLAME. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Imputation of a fault.
In arms, the praise of success is shared among many; yet the blame of misadventures is charged upon one. Hayward.

They lay the blame on the poor little ones, sometimes passionately enough, to divert it from themselves. Locke.

2. Crime; that which produces or deserves censure.

Who would not judge us to be discharged of all blame, which are confess to have no great fault, even by their very word and testimony, in whose eyes no fault of ours hath ever hitherto been accustomed to seem small. Hooker.

I unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. Shakespeare.

3. Hurt. Not now in use.

Therewith upon his crest
With rigour to outrageous he smit,
That a large share it hew'd out of the rest,
And glancing down his shield, from blame him fairly blit. Fairy Queen.

4. There is a peculiar structure of this word, in which it is not very evident whether it be a noun or a verb, but I conceive it to be the noun. To blame, in French a tort; culpable; worthy of censure.

You were to blame, I must be plain with you,
To part so slightly with your wife's first gift.
Shakespeare.

I do not ask whether they were mistaken; but,
whether they were to blame in the manner.
Stillingfleet.

Now we should hold them much to blame,
If they went back before they came. Prior.

BLAMEFUL. adj. [from blame and full.] Criminal; guilty; meriting blame.

Is not the causer of these timeleis deaths
As blameful as the executioner? Shakespeare.

Bluntwitted lord, ignoble in demeanour,
If ever lady wrong'd her lord in much,
Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl. Shakespeare.

BLAMELESS. adj. [from blame.]

1. Guiltless; innocent; exempt from censure or blame.

She found out the righteous, and preserved him blameless unto God. Wisdom, x. 5.

The flames ascend on either altar clear,
While thus the blameless maid address'd her pray'r.
Dryden.

Such a lessening of our coin will deprive great numbers of blameless men of a fifth part of their estates. Locke.

2. Sometimes it is used with of.
We will be blameless of this thine oath.
Josua, ii. 17.

BLAMELESSLY. adv. [from blameless.]
Innocently; without crime.

It is the wilful opposing explicit articles, and not the not believing them when not revealed, or not with that conviction, against which he cannot blamelessly, without pertinacy, hold out, that will bring danger of ruin on any. Hammond.

BLAMELESSNESS. n. f. [from blameless.]
Innocence; exemption from censure.

Having resolved; with him in Homer, that all is chargeable on Jupiter and fate, they infer, with him, the blamelessness of the inferiour agent. Hammond.

BLAMER. n. f. [from blame.] One that blames or finds fault; a censurer.

In me you've hallow'd a pagan muse,
And deniz'd a stranger, who mistaught
By blamers of the times they marr'd, hath sought Virtues in corners. Donne.

BLAMEWORTHY. adj. [from blame and worthy.] Culpable; blamable; worthy of blame or censure.

Although the same should be blameworthy, yet this age hath forborn to incur the danger of any such blame. Hooker.

To BLANCH. v. n. [blanchir, Fr.]

1. To whiten; to change from some other colour to white.

You can behold such fights,
And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,
When mine is blanch'd with fear. Shakespeare.

A way of whitening wax cheaply may be of use;
and we have set down the practice of tradesmen who blanch it. Boyle.

And sin's black dye seems blanch'd by age to virtue. Dryden.

2. To strip or peel such things as have husks.

Their suppers may be bisket, raisins of the sun,
and a few blanched almonds. Wise man.

3. To slur; to balk; to pass over; to shift away. Not now in use.

The judges thought it dangerous to admit ifs and ands, to qualify treason; whereby every one might express his malice, and blanch his danger.
Bacon.

You are not transported in an action that warms the blood, and is appearing holy, to blanch, or take for admitted, the point of lawfulness. Bacon.

To BLANCH. v. n. To evade; to shift;
to speak soft.

Optimi consilarii mortui; books will speak plain,
when counsellors blanch. Bacon.

whitener. Diçt.

BLAND. adj. [blandus, Lat.] Soft; mild; gentle.

In her face excuse
Came prologue, and apology too prompt;
Which, with bland words at will, she thus address'd.
Milton.

An even calm
Perpetual reign'd, save what the zephyrs bland
Breath'd o'er the blue expanse. Thomson.

To BLANDISH. v. a. [blandior, Lat.]

To smooth; to soften. I have met with this word in no other passage.

Must'ring all her wiles,
With blandish'd parleys, feminine assaults,
Tongue-batteries, the forceas'd not day nor night
To storm me over-watch'd, and weary'd out. Milt.

BLANDISHMENT. n. f. [from blandish;
blanditiæ, Lat.]

1. Act of fondness; expression of tenderness by gesture.

The little babe up in his arms he hent,
Who, with sweet pleasure and bold blandishment,

Each bird and beast, behold Approaching two and two; these caw'ring low
With blandishment. Milton.

2. Soft words; kind speeches.

He was both well and fair spoken, and would use strange sweetness and blandishment of words, where he desired to effect or persuade any thing that he took to heart. Bacon.

3. Kind treatment; caress.

Him Dido now with blandishment detains;
But I suspect the town where Juno reigns. Dryd.

In order to bring those infidels within the wide circle of whiggish community, neither blandish- ments nor promises are omitted. Swift.

BLANK. adj. [blanc, Fr. derived by Menage from Albianus, thus: Albianus, albianicus, bianicus, biancus, bianco, lancicus, blancus, blanc; by others, from blanc, which, in Danish, signifies shin- ing; in conformity to which, the Germans have blancker, to shine; the Saxons, blæcan; and the English, bleach, to whiten.]

1. White.

To the blank moon
Her office they prescrib'd; to th' other five,
Their planetary motions. Milton.

Without

2. Without writing; unwritten; empty of all marks.

Our tabulatures at home shall have blank charters, Whereto, when they know that men are rich, They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold.

Upon the debtor side, I find innumerable articles; but, upon the creditor side, little more than blank paper.

3. Pale; confused; crushed; dispirited; subdued; depressed.

There without such boast, or sign of joy, Solicitous and blank, he thus began.

The fatal trespass done by Eve, amaz'd, Astonish'd stood, and blank, while horrible chill Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd.

But now no face divine contentment wears; 'Tis all blank sadness, or continual fears.

4. Without rhyme; where the rhyme is blanch'd, or missed.

The lady shall say her mind freely, or the blank verse shall halt for it.

Long have your ears been fill'd with tragick parts; Blood and blank verse have harden'd all your hearts.

Our blank verse, where there is no rhyme to support the expression, is extremely difficult to such as are not masters in the tongue.

BLANK, n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A void space on paper.

I cannot write a paper full as I used to do; and yet I will not forgive a blank of half an inch from you.

2. A lot, by which nothing is gained; which has no prize marked upon it.

If you have heard your general talk of Rome, And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks My name hath touch'd your ears.

A heap of blanks, like this, for one small prize.

The world the coward will despise, When life 's a blank, who pulls not for a prize.

3. A paper from which the writing is effaced.

She has left him The blank of what he was; I tell thee, eunuch, she has quite unmann'd him.

4. A paper unwritten; any thing without marks or characters.

For him, I think not on him; for his thoughts, Would they were blanks, rather than fill'd with me.

Objection to do what is necessary, Seals a commission to a blank of danger.

Presented with an universal blank Of nature's works, to me expung'd and ras'd.

Life may be one great blank, which, though not blotted with sin, is yet without any characters of grace or virtue.

5. The point to which an arrow is directed; so called, because, to be more visible, it was marked with white.

Whose whisper o'er the world's diameter, As level as the cannon to his blank, Transports its poison'd shafts.

6. Aim; shot. Not used.

I quite beyond my aim; out of the blank And level of my brain.

I have spoken for you all my best, And stood with a blank of his displeasure, For my free speech.

7. Object to which any thing is directed.

See better, Lear, and let me still remain The true blank of thine eye.

To BLANK, v. a. [from blank; blanchir, Fr.]

1. To damp; to confuse; to dispirit.

Each opposite, that blanks the face of joy, Meet what I would have well, and it destroy. Dagon must stoop, and shall ere long receive Such a discomfit, as shall quite despoil him Of all these boasted trophies won on me,

And with confusion blank his worshippers.

If the atheist, when he dies, should find that his soul remains, how will this man be amazed and blank'd!

2. To efface; to annul.

All former purposes were blank'd, the government at a bay, and all that charge lost and cancelled.

BLANKET, n. f. [blanchette, Fr.]

1. A woollen cover, soft, and loosely woven, spread commonly upon a bed, over the linen sheet, for the procurement of warmth.

Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark, To cry, hold! hold!

The abilities of man must fall short on one side or other, like too scanty a blanket when you are a-bed; if you pull it upon your shoulders, you leave your feet bare; if you thrust it down upon your feet, your shoulders are uncovered.

Himself among the storied chiefs he spies, As from the blanket high in air he flies.

2. A kind of pear, sometimes written blanguit.

To BLANKET, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with a blanket.

To BLARE, v. n. [blaren, Dutch.] To bel- low; to roar.

To BLASPHEME, v. a. [blaspheme, low Lat.]

1. To speak in terms of impious irreverence of God.

2. To speak evil of.

The trust issue of thy throne By his own interdiction stands accus'd, And does blaspheme his breed.

Those who from our labours reap their boar, Blaspheme their reeder, and forget their lord.

To BLASPHEME, v. n. To speak blasphemously.

Liver of blaspheming Jew. I punish'd them oft in every synagoge, and compel'd them to blaspheme.

BLASPHEMER, n. f. [from blaspheme.] A wretch that speaks of God in impious and irreverent terms.

Who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious.

Even that blasphemer himself would inwardly reverence his reprover, as he in his heart really despises him for his cowardly base silence.

Deny the curst blasphemer's tongue to rage, And turn God's fury from an impious age.

Should each blasphemer quite escape the rod, Because the infidel's net to man, but God?

BLASPHEMOUS, adj. [from blaspheme. It is usually spoken with the accent on the first syllable, but used by Addison with it on the second.] Impiously irreverent with regard to God.

O man, take heed how thou the gods dost move, To cause full wrath, which thou dost not resist;

Blasphemous words the speaker vain do prove. And dost thou to the Son of God propound To worship thee accur'd; now more accur'd For this attempt, bolder than that on Eve,

And more blasphemous?

A man can hardly pass the streets, without having his ears grated with horrid and blasphemous oaths and curses.

That any thing that wears the name of a christian, or but of man, should venture to own such a villainous, impudent, and blasphemous affront in the face of the world, as this!

BLASPHEMOUSLY, adv. [from blaspheme.] Impiously; with wicked irreverence.

Where is the sight of his reason, while he would blasphemously let up to control the commands of the Almighty?

BLASPHEMY, n. f. [from blaspheme.]

Blasphemy, strictly and properly, is an offering of some indignity, or injury, unto God himself, either by words or writing.

But that my heart's on future mischief set, I would speak blasphemy, ere bid you fly;

Intrinsic goodness consists in accordance, and sin in contrariety, to the secret will of God; or else God could not be defined good, so far as his thoughts and secrets, but only superficially good, as far as he is pleas'd to reveal himself, which is perfect blasphemy to imagine.

BLAST, n. f. [from blæst, Sax. blasen, Germ. to blow.]

1. A gust or puff of wind.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them; And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.

Welcome, then, Thou unsubstantial air, that I embrace; The wretch that thou hast blown unto the worst Owe's nothing to thy blasts.

Perhaps thy fortune eath control the winds, Doth loose or bind thy blasts in secret cave.

Three ships were hurry'd by the southern blast, And on the secret shelves with fury cast.

2. The sound made by blowing any instrument of wind music.

In peace there's nothing so becomes a man, As modest stillness and humility; But when the blast of war blows in our ears, Then imitate the action of the tiger.

He blew his trumpet—the angelick trump Fild all the regions.

The Veline fountains, and sulphurous Nar, Shake at the hateful blast, the signal of the war.

Whether there be two different goddesses, and Fame, or one goddess founding two different trumpets, it is certain villainy has as good a title to a blast from the proper trumpet, as virtue has from the former.

3. The stroke of a malignant plague; the infection of any thing pestilential. [from the verb To blast.]

By the blast of God they perish.

To BLAST, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To strike with some sudden plague or calamity.

You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames Into her scornful eyes! Infect her beauty, You fenock'd fogs, drawn by the powerful sun, To fall and blast her pride.

Oh! Portius, is there not some chosen cane, Some hidden thunder, in the store of heaven, Red with uncommon wrath, to blast the man Who owes his greatness to his country's ruin?

2. To make to wither.

Upon this blasted herb you set your way.

2. To dim the eyes.

This may stand for a pretty superficial argument, to blear our eyes, and lull us asleep in security.

BLE'AREDNES. n. f. [from bleared.] The state of being bleared, or dimmed with rheum.

The defluxion falling upon the edges of the eyelids, makes a blearedness.

To BLEAT. v. n. [blatan, Saxon.] To cry as a sheep,

We were as twinn'd lambs, that did frisk i' th' sun,

And bleat the one at th' other.

You may as well use question with the wolf, Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb.

While on sweet grafs her bleating charge does lie,

Our happy lover feeds upon her eye.

What bull dares bellow, or what sheep dares bleat,

Within the lion's den?

BLEAT. n. f. [from the verb.] The cry of a sheep or lamb.

Set in my ship, mine ear reach'd, where we rode,

The bellowing of oxen, and the bleat

Of fleecy sheep.

BLER. n. f. [blaen, to swell. Germ.] A blister.

BLATE. } Scotland, and the bordering counties.

To BLE'MISH. v. a. [from blame, Junius; from blème, white, Fr. Skinner.]

1. To mark with any deformity.

Likelier that my outward face might have been disguised, than that the face of so excellent a mind could have been thus blemish'd.

2. To defame; to tarnish, with respect to reputation.

Not that my verse would blemish all the fair;

But yet if some be bad, 'tis wisdom to beware.

Those, who, by concerted defamations, endeavor to blemish his character, incur the complicated guilt of slander and perjury.

BLE'MISH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A mark of deformity; a scar; a diminution of beauty.

As he hath caused a blemish in a man, so shall it be done to him again.

Open it so from the eye-lid, that you divide not that; for, in so doing, you will leave a remnant blemish.

2. Reproach; disgrace; imputation.

That you have been earnest, should be no blemish or discredit at all unto you.

And if we shall neglect to propagate these blessed dispositions, what others can undertake it, without some blemish to us, some reflection on our negligence?

None more industriously publish the blemishes of an extraordinary reputation, than such as lie open to the same censures; raising applause to themselves, for resembling a person of an exalted reputation, though in the blameable parts of his character.

3. A foil; turpitude; taint; deformity.

First shall virtue be vice, and beauty be counted a blemish,

Ere that I leave with song of praise her praise to solemnize.

Live thou, and to thy mother dead attest,

That clear fire died from blemish criminal.

Is consistency with Rome a blemish unto the church of England, and unto churches abroad an ornament?

Not a hair perish'd:

On their sustaining garments not a blemish,

But fresher than before.

Evadne's husband! 'tis a fault

To love, a blemish to my thought.

That your duty may no blemish take,

I will myself your father's captive make.

Such a mirth as this is capable of making a beau, as well as a blemish, the subject of derision,

He who now to sense, in new nonsense leaning,
Means not, but blunders round about a meaning.

Pope.

To BLUNDER. v. a. To mix foolishly or blindly.

He seems to understand no difference between titles of respect and acts of worship; between expressions of esteem and devotion; between religious and civil worship: for he blunders and con-founds all these together; and whatever proves one, he thinks, proves all the rest. Stillingfleet.

BLUN'DER. n. f. [from the verb.] A gross or shameful mistake.

It was the advice of Schomberg to an historian, that he should avoid being particular in the drawing up of an army, and other circumstances in the day of battle; for that he had observed notorious blunders and absurdities committed by writers not conversant in the art of war. Aldison.

It is our own ignorance that makes us charge
those works of the Almighty as defects or blunders, as ill-contrived or ill-made. Derbam.

Now board to board the rival vessels row,
The billows lave the skies, and ocean groans below.
Dryden.

Our captain thought his ship in so great danger, that he confessed himself to a capuchin who was on board. Addison.

He ordered his men to arm long poles with sharp hooks, wherewith they took hold of the tackling which held the mainyard to the mast of their enemy's ship; then, cowing their own ship, they cut the tackling, and brought the mainyard by the board. Arbutnot on Coint.

To BOARD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To enter a ship by force; the same as to storm, used of a city.

I boarded the king's ship: now on the beak,
Now in the wattle, the deck, in every cabin,
I flam'd amazement. Shakespeare.

He, not inclin'd the English ship to board,
More on his guns relies than on his sword,
From whence a fatal volley we receiv'd;
It mis'd the duke, but his great heart it griev'd.
Waller.

Arm, arm, she cry'd, and let our Tyrians board
With ours his fleet, and carry fire and sword. Denb.

The bodkin, comb, and essence to prepare:
For this your locks in paper durance bound.

Pope.

BO'DY. n. f. [bodiz, Saxon; it originally signified the height or stature of a man.]

1. The material substance of an animal, opposed to the immaterial soul.

All the valiant men arose, and went all night, and took the body of Saul, and the bodies of his sons, from the wall.

Samuel.

Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on.

Matthew.

By custom, practice, and patience, all difficulties and hardships, whether of body or of fortune, are made easy.

L'Esrange.

2. Matter; opposed to spirit.

3. A person; a human being; whence somebody and nobody.

Surely, a wife body's part it were not to put out his fire, because his foolish neighbour, from whom he borrowed wherewith to kindle it, might say, were it not for me thou wouldst freeze.

Hooker.

A deserv'd maid!

And by an eminent body, that enforce'd
The law against it!

'Tis a passing shame,

Shakespeare.

That I, unworthy body as I am,
Should censure thus on lovely gentlemen.

Shak.

No body seeth me; what need I to fear? the Most High will not remember my sins.

Reclus.

All civility and reason oblig'd every body to submit.

Clarendon.

Good may be drawn out of evil, and a body's life may be saved without having any obligation to his preserver.

L'Esrange.

4. Reality; opposed to representation: a scriptural sense.

A shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ.

Colossians.

5. A collective mass; a joint power.

There is in the knowledge both of God and man this certainty, that life and death have divided between them the whole body of mankind.

Hooker.

There were so many disaffected persons of the nobility, that there might a body start up for the king.

Clarendon.

When pigmies pretend to form themselves into a body, it is time for us, who are men of figure, to look about us.

Addison's Guardian.

6. The main army; the battle: distinct from the wings, van, and rear.

The van of the king's army was led by the general and Wilmot; in the body was the king and the prince; and the rear consisted of one thousand foot, commanded under colonel Thel-well.

Clarendon.

7. A corporation; a number of men united by some common tie.

I shall now mention a particular wherein your whole body will be certainly against me; and the laity, almost to a man, on my side.

Swift.

Nothing was more common, than to hear that reverend body charged with what is inconsistent; despised for their poverty, and hated for their riches.

Swift.

8. The main part; the bulk: as, the body, or hull, of a ship; the body of a coach;
the body of a church; the body, or trunk,
of a man; the body, or trunk, of a tree.

Thence sent rich merchandizes by boat to Babylon; from whence, by the body of Euphrates, as far as it bended westward; and, afterward, by a branch thereof.

Raleigh.

This city has navigable rivers, that run up into the body of Italy; they might supply many countries with fish.

Addison.

9. A substance; matter, as distinguished from other matter.

Even a metalline body, and therefore much more a vegetable or animal, may, by fire, be turned into water.

Boyle.

10. [In geometry.] Any solid figure.

11. A pandect; a general collection: as, a body of the civil law; a body of divinity.

12. Strength; as, wine of a good body.

BODY-CLOTHES. n. f. [from body and clothes.] Clothing for horses that are drieted.

I am informed that several asses are kept in body-cloths, and sweated every morning upon the heath.

Addison.

To BO'DY. v. a. [from the noun.] To produce in some form.

As imagination bodies forth
The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen
Turns them to shape.

Shakespeare.

BOG. n. f. [bog, soft, Irish; bague, Fr.]
A marsh; a morass; a ground too soft to bear the weight of the body.

Through fire and through flame, through ford and whirlpool, o'er bog and quagmire.

Shakespeare.

A gulf profound! as that Serbionian bog,
Betwixt Damiatia and mount Casius old.

Milton.

He walks upon bogs and whirlpools; where-soever he treads, he sinks.

South.

Learn from so great a wit, a land of bogs
With ditches fence'd, a heaven fat with fogs.

Dryd.

He is drawn, by a sort of ignis fatuus, into bogs and mire almost every day of his life.

Watts.

BOG-TROTTER. n. f. [from bog and trot.]
One that lives in a boggy country.

To BO'GGLE. v. n. [from bogil, Dutch,
a spectre, a bugbear, a phantom.]

1. To start; to fly back; to fear to come forward.

You boggle-shrewdly; every feather starts you.

Shakespeare.

We start and boggle at every unusual appearance,
and cannot endure the sight of the bugbear.

Granville.

Nature, that rude, and in her first essay,
Stood boggling at the roughness of the way;
Us'd to the road, unknowing to return,
Goes boldly on, and loves the path when worn.

Dryden.

2. To hesitate, to be in doubt.

And never boggle to restore
The members you deliver o'er,
Upon demand.

Hudibras.

The well-shaped changeling is a man that has a rational soul, say you? Make the ears a little longer, and more pointed, and the nose a little flatter than ordinary, and then you begin to boggle.

Locke.

3. To play fast and loose; to dissemble.

When summoned to his last end, it was no time for him to boggle with the world.

Howel.

BO'GGLER. n. f. [from boggle.] A doubter;
a timorous man.

You have been a boggler ever.

Shakespeare.

BO'GGY. adj. [from bog.] Marshy; swampy.

Their country was very narrow, low, and boggy, and, by great industry and expences, defended from the sea.

Arbutnot.

BO'GHOUSE. n. f. [from bog and house.]
A house of office.

BOHE'A. n. f. [an Indian word.] A species of tea, of higher colour, and more astringent taste, than green tea.

Coarse pewter, consisting chiefly of lead, is part of the bales in which bohea tea was brought from China.

Woodward.

As some frail cup of China's fairest mold
The tumults of the boiling bohea braves,
And holds secure the coffee's fable waves.

Tickell.

She went from opera, park, assembly, play,
To morning walks, and pray'rs three hours a day;
To part her time 'twixt reading and bohea,
To muse, and spill her solitary tea.

Pope.

To BOIL. v. n. [bouiller, Fr. bullio, Lat.]

1. To be agitated by heat; to fluctuate with heat.

He saw there boil the fiery whirlpools.

Chapman.

Suppose the earth removed, and placed nearer to the sun, in the orbit of Mercury, there the whole ocean would boil with extremity of heat.

Bentley.

2. To be hot; to be fervent, or effervescent.

That strength with which my boiling youth was fraught,
When in the vale of Balafor I fought.

Dryden.

Well I knew
What perils youthful ardour would pursue,
That boiling blood would carry thee too far.

Dryd.

3. To move with an agitation like that of boiling water.

Then headlong shoots beneath the dashing tide,
The trembling fins the boiling waves divide.

Gay.

4. To be in hot liquor, in order to be made tender by the heat.

Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake.

Shakespeare.

If you live in a rich family, roasting and boiling are below the dignity of your office, and which it becomes you to be ignorant of.

Swift.

6. To boil over. To run over the vessel with heat.

A few soft words and a kiss, and the good man melts; see how nature works and boils over in him.

Congreve.

This

This hollow was a vast cauldron, filled with melted matter, which, as it boiled over in any part, ran down the sides of the mountain. Addis. on Italy.

To BOIL. v. a. To heat, by putting into boiling water; to seeth.

To try whether seeds be old or new, the sense cannot inform; but if you boil them in water, the new seeds will sprout sooner. Bacon.

In eggs boiled and roasted, into which the water entereth not at all, there is scarce any difference to be discerned. Bacon.

BOIL. n. s. See BILE.

BOILARY. n. s. [from To boil.] A place at the salt works where the salt is boiled.

BOILER. n. s. [from boil.]

1. The person that boils any thing.

That such alterations of terrestrial matter are not impossible, seems evident from that notable practice of the boilers of salt-petre. Boyle.

2. The vessel in which any thing is boiled.

This coffee-room is much frequented; and there are generally several pots and boilers before the fire. Woodward.

BOISTEROUS. adj. [byster, furious, Dutch.]

1. Violent; loud; roaring; stormy.

By a divine instinct, men's minds mistrust ensuing danger; as by proof we see

The waters wild before a boisterous storm. Shakspeare.
As when loud winds a well-grown oak would read

Up by the roots, this way and that they bend
His recling trunk, and with a boist'rous sound Scatter his leaves, and strew them on the ground. Waller.

2. Turbulent; tumultuous; furious.

Spirit of peace,

Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war? Shak.

His sweetness won a more regard

Unto his place, than all the boist'rous moods
That ignorant greatness praefieth. Ben Jonson.
God into the hands of their deliverer

Puts invincible might,
To quell the mighty of the earth, th' oppressor,
The brute and boist'rous force of violent men. Milton.

Still must I beg thee not to name Sempronius:
Lucia, I like not that loud boisterous man. Addison.

3. Unwieldy; clumsily violent.

His boisterous club, so buried in the ground,
He could not rearen up again so light,
But that the knight him at advantage found. Fairy Queen.

4. It is used by Woodward of heat; violent.

When the sun hath gained a greater strength,
the heat becomes too powerful and boisterous for them. Natural History.

BOISTEROUSLY. adv. [from boisterous.]

Violently; tumultuously.

A sceptre, snatch'd with an unruly hand,
Must be as boisterously maintain'd as gain'd. Shak.

Those are all remains of the universal deluge,
when the water of the ocean, being boisterously turned upon the earth, bore along with it all moveable bodies. Woodward.

Another faculty of the intellect comes boisterously
in, and wakes me from so pleasing a dream. Swift.

BOISTEROUSNESS. n. s. [from boisterous.]

The state or quality of being boisterous;
tumultuousness; turbulence.

BOILARY. adj. [from bole.] Partaking of the nature of bole, or clay.

BOLD. adj. [balb, Saxon.]

1. Daring; brave; stout; courageous; magnanimous; fearless; intrepid.

The wicked see when no man pursueth; but the righteous are bold as a lion. Proverbs.

I have seen the councils of a noble country grow bold, or timorous, according to the fits of his good or ill health that managed them. Temple.

2. Executed with spirit, and without mean caution.

These, nervous, bold; those, languid and remiss. Roscommon.

The cathedral church is a very bold work, and a master-piece of Gothick architecture. Addis. on Italy.

3. Confident; not scrupulous; not timorous.

We were bold in our God to speak unto you the gospel of God with much contention. 1 Thess.

I can be bold to say, that this age is adorned with some men of that judgment, that they could open new and undiscovered ways to knowledge. Locke.

4. Impudent; rude.

In thy prosperity he will be as thyself, and will be bold over thy servants. If thou be brought low, he will be against thee. Ecclesi.

5. Licentious; such as shew great liberty of fiction, or expression.

The figures are bold even to temerity. Cowley.

Which no bold tales of gods or monsters swell,
But human passions, such as with us dwell. Waller.

6. Standing out to the view; striking to the eye.

Catachreses and hyperboles are to be used judiciously, and placed in poetry, as heightenings and shadows in painting, to make the figure bolder, and cause it to stand off to fight. Dryden.

7. Open; smooth; even; level: a sailor's term.

Her dominions have bold accessible coasts. Howel.

8. To make bold. To take freedoms: a phrase not grammatical, though common.

To be bold is better; as, I was bold to tell the house, that scandalous livings make scandalous ministers. Rudgerd.

I have made bold to send to your wife;

My suit is, that she will to Desdemona

Procure me some access. Shakspeare.

My fears forgetting manners, to unseal

Their grand commission. Shakspeare.

And were y' as good as George a Green,

I shall make bold to turn agen. Hudibras.

I durst not make thus bold with Ovid, lest some future Milbourn should arise. Dryden.

Some men have the fortune to be esteemed wits, only for making bold to scoff at these things, which the greater part of mankind reverence. Tillotson.

To BO'LOEN. v. a. [from bold.] To make bold; to give confidence.

Quick inventors, and fair ready speakers, being boldened with their present abilities to say more, and perchance better too, at the sudden for that present, than any other can do, use less help of diligence and study. Afsham's Schoolmaster.

I am much too vent'rous

In tempting of your patience, but am bolden'd

Under your promis'd pardon. Shakspeare.

BO'LDFACE. n. s. [from bold and face.]

Impudence; sauciness; a term of reproach and reprehension.

How now, boldface! cries an old trot: firrah,

we eat our own hens, I'd have you know; what you eat, you steal. L'Estrange.

BO'LDFACED. adj. [from bold and face.]

Impudent.

I have seen those silliest of creatures; and,

seeing their rare works, I have seen enough to confute all the boldfaced atheists of this age. Bramhall against Illobes.

BO'LDLY. adv. [from bold.]

1. In a bold manner; with courage; with spirit.

Thus we may boldly speak, being strengthened with the example of so reverend a prelate. Hooker.

I speak to subjects, and a subject speaks,
Stirr'd up by heav'n, thus boldly for his king. Shakspeare.

2. It may perhaps be sometimes used, in a bad sense, for impudently.

BO'LDNESS. n. s. [from bold.]

1. Courage; bravery; intrepidity; spirit; fortitude; magnanimity; daringness.

Her horse she rid so, as might shew a fearful boldness, daring to do that which she knew not how to do. Sidney.

2. Exemption from caution and scrupulous nicety.

The boldness of the figures is to be hidden sometimes by the address of the poet, that they may work their effect upon the mind. Dryden.

3. Freedom; liberty.

Great is my boldness of speech toward you; great is my glorying in you. 2 Corinthians.

4. Confident trust in God.

Our fear excludeth not that boldness which becometh saints. Hooker.

We have boldness and access with confidence, by the faith of him. Ephesians.

Having therefore boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus. Hebrews.

5. Assurance; freedom from bashfulness; confident mien.

Wonderful is the case of boldness in civil business: what first? Boldness. What second and third? Boldness. And yet boldness is a child of ignorance and baseness, far inferior to other parts. Bacon.

Sure, if the guilt were theirs, they could not charge thee

With such a gallant boldness; if 'twere thine,

Thou couldst not hear 't with such a silent scorn. Denham.

His distance, though it does not instruct him to think wiser than other princes, yet it helps him to speak with more boldness what he thinks. Temple.

Boldness is the power to speak or do what we intend, before others, without fear or disorder. Locke.

6. Impudence.

That moderation, which useth to suppress boldness, and to make them conquer that suffer. Hooker.

BOLE. n. s.

1. The body or trunk of a tree.

All fell upon the high-hair'd oaks, and down their curied brows

Fell bustling to the earth; and up went all the boles and boughs. Chapman.

But when the smoother bole from knots is free,

We make a deep incision in the tree. Dryden.

View well this tree, the queen of all the grove;

How vast her bole, how wide her arms are spread,

How high above the rest she shoots her head! Dryd.

2. A kind of earth.

Bole Armeniac is an astringent earth, which takes its name from Armenia, the country from which we have it. Woodward.

3. A measure of corn, containing six bushels.

Of good barley put eight boles, that is, about six English quarters, in a stone trough. Mortimer.

BO'LLIS. n. s. [Latin.]

Bollis is a great fiery ball, swiftly hurried through the air, and generally drawing a tail after it. Aristotle calls it capra. There have often been immense balls of this kind. Muschenbroeck.

BOLL. n. s. A round stalk or stem; as, a boll of flax.

To BOLL. v. n. [from the noun.] To rise in a stalk.

And the flax and the barley was smitten: for the barley was in the ear, and the flax was boll'd. Exodus.

BO'LLSTER. n. s. [bolstere, Sax. bolster, Dutch.]

B O L

B O L

B O M

1. Something laid on the bed, to raise and support the head; commonly a bag filled with down or feathers.

Perhaps some cold bank is her bolster now,
Or 'gainst the rugged bank of some broad elm
Leans her unpillow'd head. Milton.

This arm shall be a bolster for thy head;
I'll fetch clean straw to make a soldier's bed. Gay.

2. A pad, or quilt, to hinder any pressure, or fill up any vacuity.

Up goes her hand, and off the slips
The bolsters that supply her hips. Swift.

3. A pad, or compress, to be laid on a wound.

The bandage is the girt, which hath a bolster in the middle, and the ends tacked firmly together. Wife-man.

4. [In horsemanship.]

The bolsters of a saddle are those parts raised upon the bows, to hold the rider's thigh. Farrier's Dict.

To B O L S T E R. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To support the head with a bolster.

2. To afford a bed to.

Mortal eyes do see them bolster,
More than their own. Shakespeare's Othello.

3. To hold wounds together with a compress.

The practice of bolstering the cheeks forward, does little service to the wound, and is very uneasy to the patient. Sparp.

4. To support; to hold up; to maintain.

This is now an expression somewhat coarse and obsolete.

We may be made wiser by the publick persuasions grafted in men's minds, so they be used to further the truth, not to bolster error. Hooker.

The lawyer sets his tongue to sale for the bolstering out of unjust causes. Hakewill.

It was the way of many to bolster up their crazy doating consciences with confidences. South.

B O L T. n. f. [boult, Dutch; βόλις.]

1. An arrow; a dart shot from a crossbow.

Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell;
It fell upon a little western flower,
Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound. Shakespeare.

The blunted bolt against the nymph he drest;
But with the sharp transfix'd Apollo's breast. Dryden.

2. Lightning; a thunderbolt.

Sing'd with the flames, and with the bolts transfix'd,
With native earth your blood the monsters mix'd. Dryden.

3. Bolt upright; that is, upright as an arrow.

Brush inn, native or from the mine, consisteth of long striz, about the thickness of a small knitting needle, bolt upright, like the bristles of a stiff brush. Crew.

As I stood bolt upright upon one end, one of the ladies burst out. Addison.

4. The bar of a door, so called from being straight like an arrow. We now say, shoot the bolt, when we speak of fastening or opening a door.

'Tis not in thee, to oppose the bolt Against my coming in. Shakespeare.

5. An iron to fasten the legs of a prisoner.

This is, I think, corrupted from bought, or link.
Away with him to prison; lay bolts enough upon him. Shakespeare.

To B O L T. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut or fasten with a bolt.

The bolted gates flew open at the blast;
The storm rush'd in, and Arcite stood aghast. Dryden.

2. To blurt out, or throw out precipitantly.

I hate when vice can bolt her arguments,
And virtue has no tongue to check her pride. Milton.

3. To fasten, as a bolt or pin; to pin; to keep together.

That I could reach the axle, where the pins are
Which bolt this frame, that I might pull them out!
Ben Jonson.

4. To fetter; to shackle.

It is great
To do that thing that ends all other deeds,
Which shackles accidents, and bolts up change. Shakespeare.

5. To sift, or separate the parts of any thing with a sieve. [bluter, Fr.]

He now had boluted all the flour. Spenser.
In the bolting and sifting of fourteen years of power and favour, all that came out could not be pure meal. Wotton.

I cannot bolt this matter to the bran,
As Bradwardin and holy Austin can. Dryden.

6. To examine by sifting; to try out; to lay open.

It would be well boluted out, whether great refractions may not be made upon reflections, as upon direct beams. Bacon.

The judge, or jury, or parties, or the council, or attorneys, propounding questions, beats and bolts out the truth much better than when the witness delivers only a formal series. Hale.

Time and nature will bolt out the truth of things, through all disguises. L'Estrange.

7. To purify; to purge. This is harsh.

The fanned snow,
That's boluted by the northern blast twice o'er. Shakespeare.

To B O L T. v. n. To spring out with speed and suddenness; to start out with the quickness of an arrow.

This Puck seems but a dreaming dolt,
Still walking like a ragged colt,
And off out of a bush doth bolt,
Of purpose to deceive us. Drayton.

They erected a fort, and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest, sometimes into the forest, sometimes into the woods and fastnesses, and sometimes back to their den. Bacon.

As the house was all in a flame, out bolts a mouse from the ruins to save herself. L'Estrange.

I have reflected on those men who, from time to time, have shot themselves into the world. I have seen many successions of them; some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hissed off. Dryden.

The birds to foreign seats repair'd;
And beasts, that bolted out, and saw the forest bar'd. Dryden.

B O L T - R O P E. n. f. [from bolt and rope.]

The rope on which the sail of a ship is sewed and fastened. Sea Dict.

B O L T E R. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A sieve to separate meal from bran or husks; or to separate finer from coarser parts.

Dowlas, filthy dowlas: I have given them away to bakers wives, and they have made bolters of them. Shakespeare.

With a good strong chopping knife mince the two capons, bones and all, as small as ordinary minced meat; put them into a large neat bolter. Bacon's Natural History.

When superciliously he sits Through coarsest bolter others gifts. Hudibras.

2. A kind of net.

These hakes, and divers others of the forecited, are taken with threads, and some of them with the bolter, which is a speller of a bigger size. Carew.

B O L T H E A D. n. f. A long straight-necked glass vessel, for chymical distillations, called also a matrasi, or receiver.

This spirit abounds in salt, which may be separated, by putting the liquor into a bolthead with a long narrow neck. Boyle.

B O L T I N G - H O U S E. n. f. [from bolt and house.] The place where meal is sifted.

The jade is returned as white, and as powdered, as if she had been at work in a bolting-house. Dennir.

B O L T S P R I T. } n. f. A mast running out.

B O W S P R I T. } at the head of a ship, not standing upright, but aslope. The but end of it is generally set against the foot of the foremast; so that they are a stay to one another. The length without board is sufficient to let its sails hang clear of all incumbrances. If the bolt-sprit fail in bad weather, the foremast cannot hold long after. Bow-sprit is perhaps the right spelling. Sea Dict.

Sometimes I'd divide,
And burn in many places; on the topmast,
The yards, and bolt-sprit, would I flame distinctly. Shakespeare.

B O L U S. n. f. [βόλος.] A form of medicine, in which the ingredients are made up into a soft mass, larger than pills, to be swallowed at once.

Keep their bodies soluble the while by clysters, lenitive boluses of cassia and manna, with syrup of violets. Wife-man.

By poets we are well assur'd,
That love, alas! can ne'er be cur'd;
A complicated heap of ills,
Despising boluses and pills. Swift.

B O M B. n. f. [bombus, Lat.]

1. A loud noise.

An upper chamber being thought weak, was supported by a pillar of iron, of the bigness of one's arm in the midst; which, if you had struck, would make a little flat noise in the room, but a great bomb in the chamber beneath. Bacon.

2. A hollow iron ball, or shell, filled with gunpowder, and furnished with a vent for a fusee, or wooden tube filled with combustible matter, to be thrown out from a mortar, which had its name from the noise it makes. The fusee, being set on fire, burns slowly till it reaches the gunpowder, which goes off at once, bursting the shell to pieces with incredible violence: whence the use of bombs in besieging towns. The largest are about eighteen inches in diameter. By whom they were invented is not known, and the time is uncertain; some fixing it to 1588, and others to 1495. Chambers.

The loud cannon missive iron pours,
And in the slaughter bomb Gradivus roars. Rowe.

To B O M B. v. a. [from the noun.] To fall upon with bombs; to bombard.

Our king thus trembles at Namur, Whilst Villeroy, who ne'er afraid is,
To Bruxelles marches on secure,
To bomb the monks, and scare the ladies. Prior.

B O M B - C H E S T. n. f. [from bomb and chest.]

A kind of chest filled usually with bombs, and sometimes only with gunpowder, placed under ground, to tear and blow it up in the air; with those who stand on it. Chambers.

B O M B - K E T C H. } n. f. A kind of ship,

B O M B - V E S S E L. } strongly built, to bear the shock of a mortar, when bombs are to be fired into a town.

Nor could an ordinary fleet, with bomb-vessels, hope to succeed against a place that has in its arsenal gallees and men of war. Addison on Italy.

B O M B A R D.

BOMBARD. n. f. [bombardus, Latin.]

1. A great gun; a cannon: it is a word now obsolete.

They planted in divers places twelve great bombards, wherewith they threw huge stones into the air, which, falling down into the city, might break down the houses. Knolles.

2. A barrel. Obsolete.

TO BOMBARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To attack with bombs.

A medal is struck on the English sailing in their attempts on Dunkirk, when they endeavoured to blow up a fort, and bombard the town. Addison.

BOMBARDIER. n. f. [from bombard.]

The engineer whose employment it is to shoot bombs.

The bombardier tosses his ball sometimes into the midst of a city, with a design to fill all around him with terror and combustion. Tatler.

BOMBARDMENT. n. f. [from bombard.]

An attack made upon any city, by throwing bombs into it.

Genoa is not yet secure from a bombardment, though it is not so exposed as formerly. Addison.

BOMBASIN. n. f. [bombasin, Fr. from bombicinus, silken, Lat.] A slight silken stuff, for mourning.

BOMBAST. n. f. [A stuff of soft loose texture used formerly to swell the garment, and thence used to signify bulk or shew without solidity.] Fulian; big words, without meaning.

Not pedants motley tongue, soldiers bombast, Mountebanks drug-tongue, nor the terms of law, Are strong enough preparatives to draw Me to hear this. Donne.

Are all the flights of heroick poetry to be concluded bombast, unnatural, and mere madness, because they are not affected with their excellencies? Dryden.

BOMBAST. adj. [from the substantive.]

High sounding; of big sound without meaning.

He, as loving his own pride and purpose, Evades them with a bombast circumstance, Horribly stuff'd with epithets of war. Shakespeare.

BOMBILATION. n. f. [from bombus, Lat.]

Sound; noise; report.

How to abate the vigour, or silence the bombilation of guns, a way is said to be by borax and butter, mixt in a due proportion, which will almost take off the report, and also the force of the charge. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

BOMBYCINOUS. adj. [bombycinus, Lat.]

Silken; made of silk.

BOND. n. f. [bond. Sax. bound; it is written indifferently, in many of its senses, bond, or band. See BAND.]

1. Cords, or chains, with which any one is bound.

There left me, and my man, both bound together;

Till, gnawing with my teeth my bonds asunder, I gain'd my freedom. Shakespeare.

2. Ligament that holds any thing together.

Let any one fend his contemplation to the extremities of the universe, and see what conceivable hoops, what band he can imagine, to hold this mass of matter in so close a pressure, together. Locke.

3. Union; connexion: a workman's term.

Observe, in working up the walls, that on side of the hoase, nor any part of the walls, be brought up three feet above the other, before the next adjoining wall be wrought up to it, so that they may be all joined together, and make a good bond. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. [In the plural.] Chains; imprisonment; captivity.

Whom I perceived to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death, or of bonds. Acts, xxiii. 29.

5. Cement of union; cause of union; link of connexion.

7. Obligation; law by which any man is obliged.

Unhappy that I am! I cannot heave My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty According to my bond, no more nor less. Shakespeare.

Take which you please, it dissolves the bonds of government and obedience. Locke.

BOND. adj. [from bind, perhaps for bound; from gebonden. Saxon.] Captive; in a servile state.

Whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free. 1 Cor. xii. 13.

BONDAGE. n. f. [from bond.]

1. Captivity; imprisonment; state of restraint.

You only have overthrown me, and in my bondage consists my glory. Sidney.

Say, gentle princess, would you not suppose Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?

—To be a queen in bondage, is more vile Than is a slave in base servitude. Shakespeare.

We make a choir, as doth the prison'd bird, And sing our bondage freely. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

The king, when he design'd you for my guard, Resolv'd he would not make my bondage hard. Dryden.

2. Obligation; tie of duty.

If she has a struggle for honour, she is in a bondage to love; which gives the story its turn that way. Pope.

He must resolve by no means to be enslaved, and brought under the bondage of observing oaths, which ought to vanish when they stand in competition with eating and drinking, or taking money. South.

BONDMAID. n. f. [from bond, captive, and maid.] A woman slave.

Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong yourself, To make a bondmaid and a slave of me. Shakespeare.

BONDMAN. n. f. [from bond and man.]

A man slave.

Amongst the Romans, in making of a bondman free, was it not wondered wherefore so great ado should be made? the master to present his slave in some court, to take him by the hand, and not only to say, in the hearing of the publick magistrate, I will that this man become free; but, after those solemn words uttered, to strike him on the cheek, to turn him round, the hair of his head to be shaved off, the magistrate to touch him thrice with a rod; in the end, a cap and a white garment given him. Hooker.

O freedom! first delight of human kind; Not that which bondmen from their masters find. Dryden.

BONDSERVANT. n. f. [from bond and servant.] A slave; a servant without the liberty of quitting his master.

And if thy brother, that dwelleth by thee, be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bond-servant. Leviticus, xxv. 39.

My lords, the senators Are sold for slaves, and their wives for bondswomen. Ben Jonson's Cataline.

BONE. n. f. [ban, Saxon.]

1. The solid parts of the body of an animal, made up of hard fibres, tied one to another by small transverse fibres, as those of the muscles. In a foetus they are porous, soft, and easily discerned. As their pores fill with a substance of their own nature, so they increase, harden, and grow close to one another. They are all spongy, and full of little cells; or are of a considerable firm thickness, with a large cavity, except the teeth; and where they are articulated, they are covered with a thin and strong membrane, called the periosteum. Each bone is much bigger at its extremity than in the middle, that the articulations might be firm, and the bones not easily put out of joint. But, because the middle of the bone should be strong, to sustain its allotted weight, and resist accidents, the fibres are there more closely compacted together, supporting one another; and the bone is made hollow, and consequently not so easily broken, as it might have been had it been solid and smaller. Quincy.

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold. Macbeth.

There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone. Tatler.

2. A fragment of meat; a bone with as much flesh as adheres to it.

Like Aesop's hounds contending for the bone, Each pleaded right, and would be lord alone. Dryden.

3. To be upon the bones. To attack.

Puffs had a month's mind to be upon the bones of him, but was not willing to pick a quarrel. L'Estrange.

4. To

4. To make no bones. To make no scruple: a metaphor taken from a dog, who readily swallows meat that has no bones.

5. Bones. A sort of bobbins, made of trotter bones, for weaving bonelace.

6. Bones. Dice.
But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dextrously to throw the lucky dice:
To shun ames ace, that swept my stakes away;
And watch the box, for fear they should convey False bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryden.

To BONE. v. a. [from the noun.] To take out the bones from the flesh; as, the cooks boned the veal.

BO'NELACE. n. f. [from bone and lace; the bobbins with which lace is woven being frequently made of bones.] Flaxen lace, such as women wear on their linen.

The things you follow, and make songs on now, should be sent to knit, or sit down to bobbins or bonelace. Tatler.

We destroy the symmetry of the human figure, and foolishly contrive to call off the eye from great and real beauties, to childish gewgaw ribbands and bonelace. Spektator.

BO'NELESS. adj. [from bone.] Wanting bones.

I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluckt my nipple from his boneless gums,
And dash't the brains out. Shakespeare.

To BO'NESET. v. n. [from bone and set.] To restore a bone out of joint to its place; or join a bone broken to the other part.

A fractured leg set in the country by one pretending to bone-setting. Wifeman: Surgery.

BO'NESETTER. n. f. [from bone-set.] A chyrurgeon; one who particularly professes the art of restoring broken or luxated bones.

At present my desire is to have a good bone-setter. Denham.

BO'NFIRE. n. f. [from bon, good, Fr. and fire.] A fire made for some publick cause of triumph or exultation.

Ring ye the bells to make it wear away,
And bonfires make all day. Spenser.
How came so many bonfires to be made in queen Mary's days? Why, she had abused and deceived her people. South.

Full soon by bonfire, and by bell,
We learnt our liege was passing well. Gay.

BO'NGRACE. n. f. [bonne grace, Fr.] A forehead-cloth, or covering for the forehead. Not now used.

I have seen her beset all over with emeralds and pearls, ranged in rows about her cawl, her peruke, her bongrace, and chaplet. Halswell on Providence.

BO'NNET. n. f. [bonnet, Fr.] A covering for the head; a hat; a cap.

Go to them with this bonnet in thy hand;
And thus far having stretch'd it, here be with them,
Thy knee bussing the stones; for, in such business, Action is eloquence. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

They had not probably the ceremony of vailing the bonnet in their salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads. Addison.

BO'NNET. [In fortification.] A kind of little ravelin, without any ditch, having a parapet three feet high, anciently placed before the points of the salient angles of the glacis.

BO'NNET à prestre, or priest's cap, is an outwork, having at the head three salient angles, and two inwards.

BO'NNETS. [In the sea language.] Small sails set on the courses on the mizzen, mainfail, and forefail of a ship, when these are too narrow or shallow to clothe the malt, or in order to make more way in calm weather. Chambers.

BO'NNINESS. n. f. [from bonny.] Gayety; handsomeness; plumpness.

BO'NNY. adj. [from ban, bonne, Fr. It is a word now almost confined to the Scottish dialect.]

1. Handsome; beautiful.

Match to match I have encounter'd him,
And made a prey for carrion kites and crows
Ev'n of the bonny beast he lov'd so well. Shakespeare.
Thus wail'd the louts in melancholy strain;
Till bonny Susan sped across the plain. Gay.

2. Gay; merry; frolicksome; cheerful; blithe.

Then sigh not so, but let them go,
And be you blithe and bonny. Shakespeare.

3. It seems to be generally used in conversation for plump.

BONNY-CLABBER. n. f. A word used in Ireland for sour buttermilk.

We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber
Of parties o'er our bonny-clabber;
Nor are we studious to enquire,
Who votes for manors, who for hire. Swift.

BO'NUM MAGNUM. n. f. A species of plum.

BO'NY. adj. [from bone.]

1. Consisting of bones.
At the end of this hole is a membrane, fastened to a round bony limb, and stretched like the head of a drum; and therefore, by anatomists, called tympanum. Ray.

2. Full of bones.

BO'BY. n. f. [a word of no certain etymology. Henshaw thinks it a corruption of bull-beef, ridiculously; Skinner imagines it to be derived from bobo, foolish, Spanish. Junius finds bowbard to be an old Scottish word for a coward, a contemptible fellow; from which he naturally deduces booby: but the original of bowbard is not known.] A dull, heavy, stupid fellow; a lubber.

But one exception to this fact we find;
That booby Phaon only was unkind,
An ill-bred boatman, rough as waves and wind. Prior.

Young master next must rise to fill him wine,
And harve himself to see the booby dine. King.

BOOK. n. f. [hoc, Sax. supposed from boc, a beech, because they wrote on beechen boards; as liber, in Latin, from the rind of a tree.]

1. A volume in which we read or write.

See a book of prayer in his hand;
True ornaments to know a holy man. Shakespeare.
Receive the sentence of the law for sins,
Such as by God's book are adjudg'd to death. Shak.
In the coffin that had the books, they were found as fresh as if they had been but newly written; being written on parchment, and covered over with watch candles of wax. Bacon.
Books are a sort of dumb teachers; they cannot answer sudden questions, or explain present doubts: this is properly the work of a living instructor. Watts.

2. A particular part of a work.

The first book we divide into sections; whereof the first is these chapters part. Burner's Theory.

3. The register in which a trader keeps an account of his debts.

This life
Is nobler than attending for a bauble;

Prouder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk;
Such gain the cap of him that makes them fine,
Yet keeps his book uncross'd. Shakespeare.

4. In books. In kind remembrance.
I was so much in his books, that, at his decease, he left me the lamp by which he used to write his lucubrations. Addison.

5. Without book. By memory; by repetition; without reading.

Sermons read they abhor in the church; but sermons without book, sermons which spend their life in their birth, and may have public audience but once. Hooker.

To BOOK. v. a. [from the noun.] To register in a book.

I beseech your grace, let it be booked with the rest of this day's deeds; or I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top of it. Shakespeare.

He made wilful murder high treason; he caused the marchers to book their men, for whom they should make answer. Davies on Ireland.

BOOK-KEEPING. n. f. [from book and keep.] The art of keeping accounts, or recording pecuniary transactions, in such a manner, that at any time a man may thereby know the true state of the whole, or any part of his affairs, with clearness and expedition. Harris.

BOOKBINDER. n. f. [from book and bind.] A man whose profession it is to cover books.

BOOKFUL. adj. [from book and full.] Full of notions gleaned from books; crowded with undigested knowledge.

The bookful blockhead, ignorantly read,
With loads of learned lumber in his head,
With his own tongue still edifies his ears,
And always list'ning to himself appears. Pope.

BOOKISH. adj. [from book.] Given to books; acquainted only with books. It is generally used contemptuously.

I'll make him yield the crown,
Whose bookish rule hath pull'd fair England down. Shakespeare.

I'm not bookish, yet I can read waiting-gentlewoman in the 'scape. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Xantippe follows her namefake; being married to a bookish man, who has no knowledge of the world. Spektator.

BOOKISHNESS. n. f. [from bookish.] Much application to books; over-studiousness.

BOOKLEARNED. adj. [from book and learned.] Verfed in books, or literature: a term implying some slight contempt.

Whatever these booklearn'd blockheads say,
Solon 's the veriest fool in all the play. Dryden.
He will quote passages out of Plato and Pindar, at his own table, to some booklearned companion, without blushing. Swift.

BOOKLEARNING. n. f. [from book and learning.] Skill in literature; acquaintance with books: a term of some contempt.

They might talk of booklearning what they would, but he never saw more uneasy fellows than great clerks. Sidney.

Neither does it so much require booklearning and scholarship, as good natural sense, to distinguish true and false, and to discern what is well proved, and what is not. Burner's Theory.

BOOKMAN. n. f. [from book and man.] A man whose profession is the study of books.

This civil war of wits were much better us'd
On Navarre and his bookman; for here 'tis abus'd. Shakespeare.

BOOKMATE. n. f. [from book and mate.] Schoolfellow.

This Armado is a Spaniard that keeps here in court,

A phantasm, a monarch, and one that makes sport
To the prince and his bookmates. Shakespeare.

Bo'OKSELLER. n. f. [from book and sell.]
He whose profession it is to sell books.

He went to the bookfeller, and told him in anger,
he had sold a book in which there was false divinity. Walton.

Bo'OKWORM. n. f. [from book and worm.]

1. A worm or mite that eats holes in books, chiefly when damp.

My lion, like a moth or bookworm, feeds upon nothing but paper, and I shall beg of them to diet him with wholesome and substantial food. Guardian.

2. A student too closely given to books;
a reader without judgment.

Among those venerable galleries and solitary scenes of the university, I wanted but a black gown, and a salary, to be as mere a bookworm as any there. Pope's Letters.

Bo'OLY. n. f. [An Irish term.]

All the Tartarians, and the people about the Caspian Sea, which are naturally Scythians, live in herds; being the very same that the Irish boolies are, driving their cattle with them, and feeding only on their milk and white meats. Spenser.

BoOM. n. f. [from boom, a tree, Dutch.]

1. [In sea language.] A long pole used to spread out the clue of the studding sail; and sometimes the clues of the mainsail and foresail are boomed out.

2. A pole with bushes or baskets, set up as a mark to shew the sailors how to steer in the channel, when a country is over-flown. Sea Dictionary.

3. A bar of wood laid across a harbour, to keep off the enemy.

As his heroic worth struck envy dumb,
Who took the Dutchman, and who cut the boom. Dryden.

To Boom. v. n. [from the noun. A sea term.]

1. To rush with violence; as a ship is said to come booming, when she makes all the sail she can. DiA.

2. To swell and fall together.

Booming o'er his head
The billows clos'd; he's number'd with the dead. Young.

Forsook by thee, in vain I fought thy aid,
When booming billows clos'd above my head. Pope.

BoON. n. f. [from bene, Sax. a petition.]
A gift; a grant; a benefaction; a present.

Vouchsafe me for my meed but one fair look:
A smaller boon than this I cannot beg,
And less than this, I'm sure, you cannot give. Shakespeare.

That courtier, who obtained a boon of the emperor, that he might every morning whisper him in the ear, and say nothing, asked no unprofitable suit for himself. Bacon.

The blustering fool has satisfy'd his will;
His boon is giv'n; his knight has gain'd the day,
But lost the prize. Dryden's Fables.

What rhetoric didst thou use
To gain this mighty boon? she pities me!
Addison's Cato.

Boon. adj. [bon, Fr.] Gay; merry: as,
a boon companion.

Satiate at length,
And heighten'd as with wine, jocund and boon,
Thou to herself the pleasingly began. Par. Lost.

I know the infirmity of our family; we play the boon companion, and throw our money away in our cups. Arbutnot.

BOOR. n. f. [beer, Dutch; gebuné, Sax.]

A ploughman; a country fellow; a lout; a clown.

The bare sense of a calamity is called grumbling; and if a man does but make a face upon the boor, he is presently a malecontent. L'Estrange.

He may live as well as a boor of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer waste his life. Temple.

To one well-born, th' affront is worse and more,
When he's abus'd and baffled by a boor. Dryden.

Bo'ORISH. adj. [from boori.] Clownish;
rustick; untaught; uncivilized.

Therefore, you clown, abandon, which is, in the vulgar, leave the society, which, in the boorish, is, company of this female. Shakespeare. As you like it.

cow or an ox.

To BOOT. v. a. [baten, to profit, Dutch;
bot, in Saxon, is recompence, repentance, or fine paid by way of expiation;
botan is, to repent, or to compensate;
as,

He is þæt þæt bit and bote,
And bet þæt bænne bome.]

1. To profit; to advantage: it is commonly used in these modes, it boots, or what boots it.

It shall not boot them, who derogate from reading, to excuse it, when they see no other remedy;
as if their intent were only to deny that aliens and strangers from the family of God are won, or that belief doth use to be wrought, at the first in them, without sermons. Hooker.

For what I have, I need not to repeat;
And what I want, it boots not to complain. Shak.

If we shun
The purpos'd end, or here lie fixed all,
What boots it us these wars to have begun? Fairf.

What boots the regal circle on his head,
That long behind he trails his pompous robe? Pope.

2. To enrich; to benefit:
And I will boot thee with what gift beside,
That modesty can beg. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Boot. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Profit; gain; advantage; something given to mend the exchange.

Wherein, let no man hear me, I take pride,
Could I, with boot, change for an idle plume,
Which the air beats for vain. Shakespeare.

2. To boot. With advantage; over and above; besides.

Canst thou, O partial sleep, give thy repose
To the wet scaboy, in an hour's repose?
And, in the calmest and the stillest night,
With all appliances and means so boot,
Deny it to a king? Shakespeare.

Man is God's image; but a poor man is Christ's stamp to boot: both images regard. Herbert.

He might have his mind and manners formed,
and be instructed to boot in several sciences. Locke.

shoe, Welsh; botte, French.]

1. A covering for the leg, used by horsemen.

That my leg is too long—
—No; that it is too little.—
I'll wear a boot, to make it somewhat rounder. Shakespeare.

Shew'd him his room, where he must lodge that night,

Pull'd off his boots, and took away the light. Milt.
Bishop Wilkin says, he does not question but it will be as usual for a man to call for his wings, when he is going a journey, as it is now to call for his boots. Addison's Guardian.

2. A kind of rack for the leg, formerly used in Scotland for torturing criminals.

Boot of a Coach. The space between the coachman and the coach.

To Boot. v. a. [from the noun.] To put on boots.

Beat, boot, master Shallow; I know the young king is sick for me: let us take any man's horses. Shakespeare.

fair by the fall of a booth. Swift.

Bo'OTLESS. adj. [from boot.]

1. Useless; unprofitable; unavailing; without advantage.

When those accursed messengers of hell
Came to their wicked man, and 'gan to tell
Their bootless pains, and ill succeeding night. Spenser.

God did not suffer him, being desirous of the light of wisdom, with bootless expence of travel, to wander in darkness. Hooker.

Bootless speed,
When cowardice pursues, and valour flies. Shak.

Let him alone;
I'll follow him no more with bootless pray'rs:
He seeks my life. Shakespeare.

2. Without success.

Doth not Brutus bootless kneel?
Thrice from the banks of Wye,
And sandy bottom'd Severn, have I sent Him bootless home, and weather-beaten back. Shakespeare.

Bo'OTY. n. f. [buys, Dutch; bntiu, Fr.]

1. Plunder; pillage; spoils gained from the enemy.

One way a band select from forage drives
A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
Their booty. Milton.

His conscience is the hoe and cry that pursues him; and when he reckons that he has gotten a booty, he has only caught a Tartar. L'Estrange.

For, should you to extortion be inclin'd,
Your cruel guilt will little booty find. Dryden.

2. Things gotten by robbery.

If I had a mind to be honest, I see fortune would not suffer me; she drops booties in my mouth. Shakespeare.

To play booty. To play dishonestly, with an intent to lose. The French use, Je suis botté, when they mean to say, I will not go.

We understand what we ought to do; but when we deliberate, we play booty against ourselves: our consciences direct us one way, our corruptions hurry us another. L'Estrange.

I have set this argument in the best light, that the ladies may not think that I write booty. Dryden.
BOPE'EP. n. f. [from bo and peep.] The act of looking out, and drawing back as if frightened, or with the purpose to fright some other.

Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And I for sorrow sung,
That such a king should play bopeeps,
And go the fools among. Shakespeare.

Rivers,
That serve instead of peaceful barriers,
To part th' engagements of their warriors,
Where both from side to side may skip,
And only encounter at bopeep. Hudibras.

There the devil plays at bopeep, puts out his horns to do mischief, then shrinks them back for safety. Dryden.

They of those marches, gracious sovereign!
Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers. Shakespeare.

An ordinary horse will carry two sacks of sand; and, of such, the borderers on the sea do bestow sixty at least in every acre; but most husbands double that number. Corew.

The easiest to be drawn
To our society, and to aid the war:
The rather for their seat, being next borderers
On Italy; and that they abound with horse. Ben Jonson.

The king of Scots in person, with Perkin in his company, entered with a great army, though it chiefly consisted of borderers, being raised somewhat suddenly. Bacon.

Volga's stream
Sends opposite, in shaggy armour clad,
Her borderers; on mutual slaughter bent,
They rend their countries. Philips.

To Bo'RDRAE. v. n. [from border.] To plunder the borders. Not in use.

Long time in peace his realm established,
Yet oft annoy'd with sundry borderings
Of neighbour Scots, and foreign featherlings. Spenser.

To BORE. v. a. [boptan, Sax.]

1. To pierce in a hole.

I'll believe as soon,
This whole earth may be bor'd; and that the moon
May through the centre creep. Shakespeare.

His talk is of nothing but of his poverty, for fear belike left I should have proved a young borrower.
Sidney.

Neither a borrower nor a lender be;
For loan oft loses both itself and friend,
And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry. Shak.

Go not my horse the better,
I must become a borrower of the night
For a dark hour or twain. Shakespeare.

But you invert the cov'nants of her trust,
And harshly deal, like an ill borrower,
With that which you receiv'd on other terms.
Milton.

2. He that takes what is another's, and uses it as his own.

Some say, that I am a great borrower; however, none of my creditors have challenged me for it. Pope.

BO'SCAGE. n. f. [bofcage, Fr.]

1. Wood, or woodlands.

Each bouly farmer with his timp'ring dame. King.
BOUT. n. f. [botta, Ital.] A turn; as much of an action as is performed at one time, without interruption; a single part of any action carried on by successive intervals.

The play began: Pas durst not Cosma chace;
But did intend next bout with her to meet. Sidney.

Ladies, that have your feet
Unplagued with corns, we'll have a bout. Shakespeare.
When in your motions you are hot,
As make your bouts more violent to that end,
He calls for drink. Shakespeare.

If he chance to 'scape this dismal bout,
The former legatees are blotted out. Dryden.

A weasel seized a bat; the bat begged for life:
says the weasel, I give no quarter to birds: says the bat, I am a mouse; look on my body: so the got off for that bout. L'Esrange.

We'll see when 'tis enough,
Or if it want the nice concluding bout. King.

BOUTEFEU. n. f. [French.] An incendiary; one who kindles feuds and dissentiments. Now disused.

Animated by a base fellow, called John à Chamber, a very boutefeu, who bore much sway among the vulgar, they entered into open rebellion. Bacon.
Nor could ever any order be obtained impartially to punish the known boutefeus, and open incendiaries. King Charles.

Besides the herd of boutefeus,
We set on work within the house. Hudibras.

and chantries. Sir J. Hayward.

BOUTS RIMEZ. [French.] The last words or rhimes of a number of verses given to be filled up.

To BOW. v. a. [bugen, Saxon.]

1. To bend, or inflect. It sounds as now, or bow.

A threepence bow'd would hire me,
Old as I am, to queen it. Shakespeare.

Orpheus, with his lute, made trees,
And the mountain tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing. Shakespeare.

Some bow the vines, which bury'd in the plain,
Their tops in distant arches rise again. Dryden.

The mind has not been made obedient to discipline, when at first it was most tender and most easy to be bow'd. Locke.

2. To bend the body in token of respect or submission.

They came to meet him, and bow'd themselves to the ground before him. 2 Kings.

Is it to bow down his head as a bulrush, and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? wilt thou call this a fast, and an acceptable day to the Lord?
Isaiab.

3. To bend, or incline, in condescension.

Let it not grieve thee to bow down thine ear to the poor, and give him a friendly answer. Eccles.

4. To depress; to crush.

Are you so gospell'd,
To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever? Shakespeare.

Now wasting years my former strength confound,
And added woes may bow me to the ground. Pope.

To Bow. v. n.

1. To bend; to suffer flexure.

2. To make a reverence:

Stoop to the block, than these knees bow to any,
Save to the God of heav'n, and to my king. Shak.

This is the great idol to which the world *bow*s;
to this we pay our devoutest homage.

Decay of Piety.

not deliver the burden. Isaiab. xlvi. 2.

Bow. n. f. [from the verb. It is pronounced, like the verb, as now, bow.]

An act of reverence or submission, by bending the body.

Some clergy too she would allow,
Nor quarrel'd at their awkward bow. Swift.

Bow. n. f. [pronounced as groav, no, lo,
without any regard to the w.]

1. An instrument of war, made by holding wood or metal bent with a string, which, by its spring, shoots arrows with great force.

Take, I pray thee, thy weapons, thy quiver, and thy bow, and go out to the field, and take me some venison. Genesis.

The white faith of hist'ry cannot show,
That e'er the musket yet could beat the bow.
Alleyne's Henry VII.

2. A rainbow.

I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth.
Gen. ix. 13.

3. The instrument with which string-instruments are struck.

Their instruments were various in their kind;
Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind:
The sawtry, pipe, and hautboy's noisy band,
And the soft lute trembling beneath the touching hand. Dryden's Fables.

4. The doubling of a string in a slip-knot. This is perhaps corruptly used for bought.

Make a knot, and let the second knot be with a bow. Wise-man.

5. A yoke.

As the ox hath his bow, Sir, the horse his curb, and the faulcon his bells, so man hath his desire. Shakespeare.

6. Bow of a saddle. The bows of a saddle are two pieces of wood laid archwise, to receive the upper part of a horse's back, to give the saddle its due form, and to keep it tight. Farrier's Dictionary.

7. Bow of a ship. That part of her which begins at the loof, and compassing ends of the stern, and ends at the sternmost parts of the forecastle. If a ship hath a broad bow, they call it a bold bow; if a narrow thin bow; they say she hath a lean bow. The piece of ordnance that lies in this place, is called the bow-piece; and the anchors that hang here, are called her great and little bows.

8. Bow is also a mathematical instrument, made of wood, formerly used by seamen in taking the sun's altitude.

9. Bow is likewise a beam of wood or brass, with three long screws, that direct a lath of wood or steel to any arch; used commonly to draw draughts of ships, projections of the sphere, or wherever it is requisite to draw long arches. Harris.

Surely he shoots wide on the bow-hand, and very far from the mark. Spenser's Ireland.

BOW-LEGGED. adj. [from bow and leg.]

Having crooked legs.

BOW-SHOT. n. f. [from bow and shot.]

The space which an arrow may pass in its flight from the bow.

Though he were not then a bow-shot off, and made hate; yet, by that time he was come, the thing was no longer to be seen. Boyle.

BOWELS. n. f. [boyaux, Fr.]

1. Intestines; the vessels and organs within the body.

He smote him therewith in the fifth rib, and shed out his bowels. 2 Sam. xx. 10.

2. The inner parts of any thing.

Had we no quarrel else to Rome, but that Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all
From twelve to seventy; and pouring war
Into the bowels of ungrateful Rome,
Like a bold flood appear. Shakespeare.

His soldiers spying his undaunted spirit,
A Talbot! Talbot! cried out amain,
And rush'd into the bowels of the battle. Shak.

As he saw drops of water distilling from the rock, by following the veins, he has made himself two or three fountains in the bowels of the mountain. Addison.

3. The seat of pity, or kindness.

His bowels did yern upon him. Genesis.

4. Tenderness; compassion.

He had no other consideration of money, than for the support of his lustre; and whilst he could do that, he cared not for money; having no bowels in the point of running in debt, or borrowing all he could. Clarendon.

5. This word seldom has a singular, except in writers of anatomy.

BOW'ER. n. f. [from bough or branch, or from the verb To bow or bend.]

1. An arbour; a sheltered place covered with green trees, twined and bent.

But, O sad virgin, that thy power
Might raise Mæneus from his bower. Milton.

To gods appealing, when I reach their bow'rs,
With loud complaints, they answer me in flow'rs.
Wallers.

Refresh'd, they wait them to the bow'rs of state,
Where, circled with his peers, Atides sat. Pope.

2. It seems to signify, in Spenser, a blow;
a stroke; bouerrer, Fr. to fall upon.

His rawbone arms, whose mighty brained bowers
Were wont to rive steel plates, and helmets hew,
Were clean consum'd, and all his vital powers

BOW'ER. n. f. [from the bow of a ship.]

Anchor's so called. See Bow.

To BOW'ER. v. a. [from the noun.] To embower; to inclose.

Thou didst bow'er the spirit
In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh. Shakespeare.

BOW'ERY. adj. [from bow'er.] Full of bowers.

Landscips how gay the bow'ry grotto yields,
Which thought creates, and lavish fancy builds!
Tickell.

Snatch'd through the verdant maze, the hurried eye
Distracted wanders: now the bow'ry waik

Of covert close, where scarce a speck of day
Falls on the lengthen'd gloom, protracted sweeps.

Tobson.

To BOWGE. See To BOUGE.

BOWL. n. f. [buelin, Welsh; which signifies, according to Junius, any thing made of horn, as drinking cups anciently were. It is pronounced bole.]

1. A vessel to hold liquids, rather wide than deep; distinguished from a cup, which is rather deep than wide.

Give me a bowl of wine;

I have not that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have.

Shakespeare.

If a piece of iron be fasten'd on the side of a bowl of water, a loadstone, in a boat of cork, will make unto it.

Brown.

The sacred priests, with ready knives, bereave
The beasts of life, and in full bowls receive
The streaming blood.

Dryden.

While the bright Sein, & exalt the soul,
With sparkling plenty crowns the bowl,
And wit and social mirth inspires.

Fenton to Lord Gower.

2. The hollow part of any thing.

If you are allowed a large silver spoon for the kitchen, let half the bowl of it be worn out with continual scraping.

Swift.

3. A basin, or fountain.

But the main matter is so to convey the water, as it never stay either in the bowl or in the cistern.

Bacon.

BOWL. n. f. [boule, Fr. It is pronounced as cow, bowl.] A round mass, which may be rolled along the ground.

Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground,
I've tumbled past the throw.

Shakespeare.

How finely dost thou times and seasons spin!
And make a twist checker'd with night and day!
Which, as it lengthens, winds, and winds us in,
As bowls go on, but turning all the way.

Herbert.

Like him, who would lodge a bowl upon a precipice, either my praise falls back, or stays not on the top, but rolls over.

Dryden.

Men may make a game at bowls in the summer,
and a game at whist in the winter.

Dennis's Let.

Though that piece of wood, which is now a bowl, may be made square, yet, if roundness be taken away, it is no longer a bowl.

Watts's Logic.

To BOWL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To roll as a bowl.

Alas! I had rather be set quick i' th' earth,
And bowl'd to death with turnips.

Merry Wives of Windsor.

BO'WLDER-STONES. n. f. Lumps or fragments of stones or marble, broke from the adjacent cliffs, rounded by being tumbled to and again by the water; whence their name.

Woodward.

BO'WLER. n. f. [from bowl.] He that plays at bowls.

BO'WLING. } n. f. [sea term.] A rope fasten'd to the middle part of the outside of a sail; it is fastened in three or four parts of the sail, called the bowling bridle. The use of the bowling is to make the sails stand sharp or close to a wind.

Harris.

BO'WLING-GREEN. n. f. [from bowl and green.] A level piece of ground, kept smooth for bowlers.

A bowl equally poised, and thrown upon a plain bowling-green, will run necessarily in a direct line.

Bentley.

BO'WMAN. n. f. [from bow and man.] An archer; he that shoots with a bow.

The whole city shall flee, for the noise of the horsemen and bowmen.

Jeremiah, iv. 29.

BO'WSPRIT. n. f. [from the bow of a ship.] This word is generally spelt bolysprit; which see.

To BO'WSEN. v. a. [probably of the same original with bouse, but found in no other passage.] To drench; to soak.

The water fell into a close walled plot; upon this wall was the frantick person set, and from thence tumbled headlong into the pond; where a strong fellow tossed him up and down, until the patient, by foregoing his strength, had somewhat forgot his fury; but if there appeared small amendment, he was bowssened again and again, while there remained in him any hope of life, for recovery.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

BO'WSTRING. n. f. [from bow and string.] The string by which the bow is kept bent.

He hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bowstring, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him.

Shakespeare.

Sound will be conveyed to the ear, by striking upon a bowstring, if the horn of the bow be held to the ear.

Bacon.

BO'WYER. n. f. [from bow.]

1. An archer; one that uses the bow.

Call for vengeance from the bowyer king.

2. One whose trade is to make bows.

BOX. n. f. [box, Saxon; buxus, Lat.]

A tree.

The leaves are pennated, and evergreen; it hath male flowers, that are produced at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree; the fruit is shaped like a porridge-pot inverted, and is divided into three cells, containing two seeds in each, which, when ripe, are cast forth by the elasticity of the vessels. The wood is very useful for engravers, and mathematical instrument makers; being so hard, close, and ponderous, as to sink in water.

Miller.

There are two sorts; the dwarf box, and a taller sort. The dwarf box is good for borders, and is easily kept in order, with one clipping in the year. It will increase of slips set in March, or about Bartholomew tide; and will prosper on cold barren hills, where nothing else will grow.

Mortimer.

Box. n. f. [box, Sax. buxle, Germ.]

1. A case made of wood, or other matter, to hold any thing. It is distinguished from chest, as the less from the greater. It is supposed to have its name from the box wood.

A magnet, though put in an ivory box, will, through the box, send forth his embracing virtue to a beloved needle.

Sidney.

About his shelves
A beggarly account of empty boxes.

Shakespeare.

The lion's head is to open a most wide voracious mouth, which shall take in letters and papers. There will be under it a box, of which the key will be kept in my custody, to receive such papers as are dropped into it.

Steele.

This casket Issa's glowing gems unlocks,
And all Arabia breathes from yonder box.

Pope.

2. The case of the mariners compass.

3. The chest into which money given is put.

So many more, so every one was us'd,
That to give largely to the box refus'd.

Spenser.

4. The seats in the playhouse, where the ladies are placed.

'Tis left to you; the boxes and the pit
Are sovereign judges of this sort of wit.

Dryden.

She glares in balls, front boxes, and the ring;
A vain, unquiet, glittering, wretched thing.

Pope.

To Box. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose in a box.

Box'd in a chair, the beau impatient sits,
While spouts run clatt'ring o'er the roof by fits.

Swift.

BOX. n. f. [bock, a cheek, Welsh.] A blow on the head given with the hand.

For the box o' th' ear that the prince gave you,
he gave it like a rude prince.

Shakespeare.

If one should take my hand perforce, and give another a box on the ear with it, the law punisheth the other.

Branball.

There may happen concussions of the brain from a box on the ear.

Wiseman's Surgery.

Olphis, the fisherman, received a box on the ear from Thestylis.

Addison's Spectator.

To Box. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight with the fist.

The ass very fairly looked on, till they had boxed themselves a-weary, and then left them fairly in the lurch.

L'Estrange.

A leopard is like a cat; he boxes with his forefeet, as a cat doth her kitlins.

Grew.

The fighting with a man's shadow consists in brandishing two sticks, loaden with plugs of lead; this gives a man all the pleasure of boxing, without the blows.

Spectator.

He hath had six duels, and four-and-twenty boxing matches, in defence of his majesty's title.

Spectator.

To Box. v. a. To strike with the fist.

BO'XEN. n. f. [from box.]

1. Made of box.

The young gentlemen learned, before all other things, to design upon tablets of boxen wood.

As lads and lasses stood around,
To hear my boxen hautboy sound.

Gay.

2. Resembling box.

Her faded cheeks are chang'd to boxen hue,
And in her eyes the tears are ever new.

Dryden.

BO'XER. n. f. [from box.] A man who fights with his fist.

BOY. n. f. [bul, Germ. The etymology is not agreed on.]

1. A male child; not a girl.

The streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing.

Zucchariadi.

2. One in the state of adolescence; older than an infant, yet not arrived at puberty or manhood.

Speak thou, boy;

Perhaps thy childlikehood will move him more
Than can our reasons.

Sometimes forgotten things, long cast behind,
Rush forward in the brain, and come to mind:
The nurse's legends are for truths receiv'd,
And the man dreams but what the boy believ'd.

Dryden.

3. A word of contempt for young men, as noting their immaturity.

Men of worth and parts will not easily admit the familiarity of boys, who yet need the care of a tutor.

Locke.

The pale boy senator yet tingling stands,
And holds his breeches close with both his hands.

Pope.

To Box. v. n. [from the noun.] To treat as a boy.

Anthony

Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see
Some squeaking Cleopatra boy my greatness,
I' th' posture of a whore.

Shakespeare.

BO'YHOOD. n. f. [from boy.] The state of a boy; the part of life in which we are boys. This is perhaps an arbitrary word.

If you should look at him, in his boyhood, through the magnifying end of a perspective, and, in his manhood, through the other, it would be impossible to spy any difference: the same air, the same strut.

Swift.

BO'YISH. adj. [from boy.]

1. Belonging to a boy.

I ran it through, e'en from my boyish days,
To th' very moment that he bade me tell it. Shak.

2. Childish; trifling.

This unhair'd fauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at, and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms.

Shakespeare.

Young men take up some English poet for their model, and imitate him, without knowing wherein he is defective, where he is boyish and trifling.

Dryden.

BO'YISHLY. adv. [from boyish.] Childishly; triflingly.

BO'YISHNESS. n. f. [from boyish.] Childishness; trifling manner.

BO'YISM. n. f. [from boy.] Puerility;
childishness.

He had complained he was farther off, by being so near, and a thousand such boyisms, which Chaucer rejected as below the subject.

Dryden.

BP. An abbreviation of bishop.

BRA'BBLE. n. f. [brabbelen, Dutch.] A clamorous contest; a squabble; a broil.
Here in the streets, desperate in shame and state,
In private brabble did we apprehend him. Shak.

To BRA'BBLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To clamour; to contest noisily.

BRA'BBLER. n. f. [from brabble.] A clamorous, quarrelsome, noisy fellow.

To BRACE. v. a. [embrasser, Fr.]

1. To bind; to tie close with bandages.
The women of China, by bracing and binding them from their infancy, have very little feet.

Locke.

2. To intend; to make tense; to strain up.

The tympanum is not capable of tension that way, in such a manner as a drum is braced. Holder.

The diminution of the force of the pressure of the external air, in bracing the fibres, must create a debility in muscular motion. Arbutnot on Air.

BRACE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Cinchure; bandage.

2. That which holds any thing tight.

The little bones of the ear-drum do in straining and relaxing it, as the braces of the war-drum do in that. Derbam.

3. BRACE [in architecture] is a piece of timber framed in with bevil joints, used to keep the building from swerving either way. Builder's Dict.

4. BRACES. [a sea term.] Ropes belonging to all the yards, except the mizen.
They have a pendant to the yard-arm, two braces to each yard; and, at the end of the pendant, a block is seized, through which the rope called the brace is reeved. The braces serve to square and traverse the yards. Sea Dict.

5. BRACES of a Coach. Thick straps of leather on which it hangs.

6. Harness.

7. BRACE. [In printing.] A crooked line inclosing a passage, which ought to be taken together, and not separately; as in a triplet.

Charge Venus to command her son,
Wherever else she lets him rove,
To shun my house, and field, and grove; }
Peace cannot dwell with hate or love. } Prior.

8. Warlike preparation; from bracing the armour; as we say, girded for the battle.

As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it;
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,
But altogether lacks th' abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in. Shakespeare.

9. Tension; tightness.

The most frequent cause of deafness is the laxness of the tympanum, when it has lost its brace or tension. Holder.

BRACE. n. f. [of uncertain etymology, probably derived from two braced together.]

1. A pair; a couple. It is not braces, but brace, in the plural.

Down from a hill the beasts that reign in woods,
First hunter then, pursued a gentle braces, Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind. Par. Lost.
Ten braces and more of greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair. Dryden's Fables.

2. It is used generally in conversation as a sportsman's word.

He is said, this summer, to have shot with his own hands fifty braces of pheasants. Addison.

3. It is applied to men in contempt.

But you, my braces of lords, were I so minded,
I here could pluck his highness' frown upon you.

Shakespeare.

BRA'CELET. n. f. [bracelet, French.]

1. An ornament for the arms.

Both his hands were cut off, being known to have worn bracelets of gold about his wrists.

Sir J. Hayward.

strained by a bracker, without much trouble.

Wise man.

2. A medicine of constringent power.

BRACH. n. f. [braque, Fr.] A bitch hound.

Truth's a dog most to kennel; he must be whipped out, when the lady brach may stand by the fire, and stink. Shakespeare.

BRA'CHIAL. adj. [from brachium, an arm,
Lat.] Belonging to the arm.

BRACHY'GRAPHY. n. f. [βραχυς, short, and γράφω, to write.] The art or practice of writing in a short compass.

All the certainty of those high pretenders, bating what they have of the first principles, and the word of God, may be circumscribed by as small a circle as the creed, when brachygraphy had confined it within the compass of a penny. Glanville.

BRACK. n. f. [from break.] A breach; a broken part.

The place was but weak, and the bracks fair;
but the defendants, by resolution, supplied all the defects. Hayward.

Let them compare my work with what is taught in the schools, and if they find in theirs many bracks and short ends, which cannot be spun into an even piece; and, in mine, a fair coherence throughout;
I shall promise myself an acquiescence. Digby.

BRACKET. n. f. [a term of carpentry.]

A piece of wood fixed for the support of something.

Let your shelves be laid upon brackets, being about two feet wide, and edged with a small lath.

Mortimer.

BRA'CKISH. adj. [brack, Dutch.] Salt;
somewhat salt: it is used particularly of the water of the sea.

Pits upon the sea shore turn into fresh water, by percolation of the salt through the sand: but it is farther noted, after a time, the water in such pits will become brackish again. Bacon.

When I had gain'd the brow and top,
A lake of brackish waters on the ground
Was all I found. Herbert.

The wife contriver, on his end intent,
Mix'd them with salt, and season'd all the sea.
What other cause could this effect produce?
The brackish tincture through the main distill?

Blackmore.

BRA'CKISHNESS. n. f. [from brackish.]
Saltness in a small degree.

All the artificial drainings hitherto leave a brackishness in salt water, that makes it unfit for animal uses. Cbeyn.

BRAD, being an initial, signifies broad, spacious, from the Saxon brad, and the Gothick brad. Gibson.

BRAD. n. f. A sort of nail to floor rooms with. They are about the size of a ten-penny nail, but have not their heads made with a shoulder over their shank, as other nails, but are made pretty thick towards the upper end, that the very top may be driven into, and buried in, the board they nail down; so that the tops of these brads will not catch the thrums of the mops, when the floor is washing.

Moxon.

To BRAG. v. n. [braggeren, Dutch.]

1. To boast; to display ostentatiously; to tell boastful stories.

Thou coward! art thou bragging to the stars?
Telling the bushes that thou look'st for wars,
And wilt not come? Shakespeare.

Mark me, with what violence she first loved the Moor, but for bragging, and telling her fantastical lies. Shakespeare.

In bragging out some of their private tenets, as if they were the established doctrine of the church of England. Sanderfon.

The rebels were grown so strong there, that they intended then, as they already bragged, to come over and make this the seat of war. Clarendon.

Mrs. Bull's condition was looked upon as despererate by all the men of art; but there were those that bragged they had an infallible ointment.

Arbutnot.

2. It has of before the thing boasted.

Knowledge being the only thing whereof we poor old men can brag, we cannot make it known but by utterance. Sidney.

Verona brags of him,
To be a virtuous and well-govern'd youth. Shak.

Every busy little scribbler now
Swells with the praises which he gives himself,
And taking sanctuary in the crowd,
Brags of his impudence, and seems to mend.

Roscommon.

3. On is used, but improperly.

Yet lo! in me what authors have to brag on,
Reduc'd at last to hifs in my own dragon. Pope.

BRAG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A boast; a proud expression.

A kind of conquest

Cesar made here; but made not here his brag
Of came, and saw, and overcame. Shakespeare.

It was such a new thing for the Spaniards to receive so little hurt, upon dealing with the English, as Avallaneda made great brags of it, for no greater matter than the waiting upon the English afar off.

Bacon.

2. The thing boasted.

Beauty is nature's brag, and must be shewn
In courts, at feasts, and high solemnities,
Where most may wonder. Milton.

BRAGGADO'CIO. n. f. [from brag.] A puffing, swelling, boasting fellow.

The world abounds in terrible fanfarones, in the masque of men of honour; but these braggadocio are easy to be detected. L'Estrange.

By the plot, you may guess much of the characters of the persons; a braggadocio captain, a parasite, and a lady of pleasure. Dryden.

BRAGGARDISM.

BRA'GGARDISM. n. f. [from brag.] Boastfulness; vain ostentation.

BRA'GGART. adj. [from brag.] Boastful; vainly ostentatious.

Shall I, none's slave, of high born or rais'd men
Fear frowns; and m' mistrets, truth, betray thee
To th' huffing, braggart, puff nobility? Donne.

BRA'GGART. n. f. [from brag.] A boaster.

Who knows himself a braggart,
Let him fear this; for it will come to pass,
That every braggart shall be found an ass. Sbat.

BRA'GGER. n. f. [from brag.] A boaster; an ostentatious fellow.

Such as have had opportunity to found these braggers thoroughly, by having sometimes endured the penance of their sottish company, have found them, in converse, empty and insipid. Soub.

BRA'GLESS. adj. [from brag.] Without a boast; without ostentation.

The bruit is, Hector's slain, and by Achilles.—
—If it is so, bragless let it be,
Great Hector was as good a man as he. Shaksp.

BRA'GLY. adv. [from brag.] Finely; to as it may be bragged.

Seek not think hawthorn stud,
How bragly it begins to bud,
And utter his tender head?
Flora now calleth forth each flower,
And bids him make ready Maia's tower. Spenser.

To BRAID. v. a. [brædan, Saxon.] To weave together.

Close the serpent fly,
Insinuating, wove with gordian twine
His braided train, and of his fatal guile Gave proof unheeded. Milton.

Other wands, lying loosely, may each of them be easily dissociated from the rest; but, when braided into a basket, they cohere strongly. Boyle.

A ribband did the braided tresses bind,
The rest was loose, and wanton'd in the wind.
Dryden.

Since in braided gold her foot is bound,
And a long trailing manteau sweeps the ground,
Her shoe disdains the street. Gay.

BRAID. n. f. [from the verb.] A texture; a knot, or complication of something woven together

Listen where thou art sitting,
Under the glossy, cool, translucent wave,
In twisted braids of lilies knitting
The loose train of thy amber-dropping hair. Milton.

No longer shall thy comely tresses break
In flowing ringlets on thy snowy neck,
Or sit behind thy head, an ample round,
In graceful braids, with various ribbon bound. Prier.

BRAID. adj. [To brede, in Chaucer, is to deceive.] An old word, which seems to signify deceitful.

Since Frenchmen are so braid,
Marry 'em that will, I'll live and die a maid.
Shaksp.

BRAILS. n. f. [sea term.] Small ropes reeved through blocks, which are seized on either side the ties, a little off upon the yard; so that they come down before the sails of a ship, and are fastened at the skirt of the sail to the crengles. Their use is, when the sail is furled across, to haul up its bunt, that it may the more readily be taken up or let fall. Harris.

BRAIN. n. f. [brægen, Sax. bryne, Dutch.]

1. That collection of vessels and organs in the head, from which sense and motion arise.

The brain is divided into cerebrum and cerebellum. Cerebrum is that part of the brain which possesses all the upper and forepart of the cranium, being separated from the cerebellum by the second process of the dura mater; under which the cerebellum is situated. The substance of the brain is distinguished into outer and inner: the former is called corticalis, cineræ, or glaxdulosa; the latter, medullaris, alba, or nervea. Cbeselden.

If I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains ta'en out, and-buttered, and give them to a dog for a new year's gift.

Shakspere's Merry Wives of Windsor.
That man proportionally hath the largest brain, I did, I confess, somewhat doubt, and conceived it might have failed in birds, especially such as having little bodies, have yet large cranies, and seem to contain much brain, as snipes and woodcocks; but, upon trial, I find it very true. Brown's Vulg. Err.

2. That part in which the understanding is placed; therefore taken for the understanding.

The force they are under is a real force, and that of their fate but an imaginary conceived one; the one but in their brains, the other on their shoulders. Hammond.

A man is first a geometrician in his brain, before he be such in his hand. Hale.

3. Sometimes the affections: this is not common, nor proper.

My son Edgar had he a hand to write this, a heart and brain to breed it in? Shakspere.

To BRAIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To dash out the brains; to kill by beating out the brains.

Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him 'th' afternoon to sleep; there thou may'st brain him. Shakspere.

Outlaws of nature,
Fit to be shot and brain'd, without a process;
To Rop infection; that 's their proper death. Dryden.

Next seiz'd two wretches more, and headlong cast,
Erin'd on the rock, his second dire repast. Pope.

BRA'INISH. adj. [from brain.] Hotheaded; furious: as cerebrosus in Latin.

In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras leaning something fir,
He whips his rapier out, and cries, a rat!
And, in his brain's apprehension, kills
The unseen good old man. Shakspere.

BRA'INLESS. adj. [from brain.] Silly; thoughtless; witless.

Some brainless men have, by great travel and labour, brought to pass, that the church is now ashamed of nothing more than of saints. Hoecker.

If the dull brainless Ajax come late off,
Well deserves't up in voices. Shakspere.
The brain stripling, who, expell'd the town,
Damm'd the full college and pedantick gown,
Aw'd by thy name, is dumb. Tickell.

BRA'INPAN. n. f. [from brain and pan.] The skull containing the brains.

With those huge bellows, in his hands, he blows
New fire into my head; my brainpan glows. Dryd.

BRA'INSICK. adj. [from brain and sick.] Diseas'd in the understanding: addle-headed; giddy; thoughtless.

Nor once disject the courage of our minds,
Because Cassandra's mal; her brainfick raptures Cannot distalle the goodness of a quarrel. Shak.
They were brainfick men, who could neither endure the government of their king, nor yet thankfully receive the authors of their deliverance. Knolles.

BRA'INSICKLY. adv. [from brainfick.] Weakly; headily.

Why, worthy Thane,
You do unbend your noble strength to think
So brainfickly of things. Shakspere.

study necessarily brings the mind to, they might be able to transfer it to other parts of knowledge, as they shall have occasion.

Locke.

The question for bringing the king to justice was immediately put, and carried without any opposition, that I can find. Swift's Presbyterian Plea.

7. To lead by degrees.

A due consideration of the vanities of the world, will naturally bring us to the contempt of it; and the contempt of the world will as certainly bring us home to ourselves.

L'Estrange.

The understanding should be brought to the difficult and knotty parts of knowledge by insensible degrees.

Locke.

8. To recal; to summons.

But those, and more than I to mind can bring,
Menalcaas has not yet forgot to sing.

Dryden.

9. To induce; to prevail upon.

The nature of the things, contained in those words, would not suffer him to think otherwise, how, or whensoever, he is brought to reflect on them.

Locke.

It seems so preposterous a thing to men, to make themselves unhappy in order to happiness, that they do not easily bring themselves to it.

Locke.

Profitable employments would be no less a diversion than any of the idle sports in fashion, if men could but be brought to delight in them.

Locke.

10. To bring about. [See ABOUT.] To bring to pass; to effect.

This he conceives not hard to bring about,
If all of you would join to help him out.

Dryden's Indian Emperor.

This turn of mind threw off the oppositions of envy and competition; it enabled him to gain the most vain and impracticable into his designs, and to bring about several great events, for the advantage of the publick.

Addison's Freeholder.

11. To bring forth. To give birth to; to produce.

The good queen,
For she is good, hath brought you forth a daughter:
Here 'tis; commends it to your blessing.

Shakespeare.

BUFF. n. f. [from buffalo.]

1. A sort of leather prepared from the skin of the buffalo; used for waist belts, pouches, and military accoutrements.
H h 2 A rope

- A rosy chain of rheums, a visage rough, Deform'd, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff. Dryden.
- The skins of elks and oxen dressed in oil, and prepared after the same manner as that of the buffalo.
 - A military coat made of thick leather, so that a blow cannot easily pierce it.
A fend, a fairy, pitiless and rough,
A wulf, nay worse, a fellow all in buff. Shakespeare.

TO BUFF. v. a. [buffe, Fr.] To strike: it is a word not in use.

There was a shock,
To have buff'd out the blood
From aught but a block. Ben Jonson.

BUFFALO. n. f. [Ital.] A kind of wild ox.

Become the unworthy brow
Of buffaloes, salt goats, and hungry cows. Dryden.

BUFFET. n. f. [buffeto, Ital.] A blow with the fist; a box on the ear.

O, I could divide myself, and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honourable an action. Shakespeare.

A man that fortune's buffets and rewards
Has ta'en with equal thanks. Shakespeare.

Go, baffled coward, left I run upon thee,
And with one buffet lay thy structure low. Milton.

Round his hollow temples, and his ears,
His buckler beats; the fun of Neptune, stunn'd
With these repeated buffets, quits the ground. Dryden.

BUFFET, n. f. [buffette, Fr.] A kind of cupboard; or set of shelves, where plate is set out to shew, in a room of entertainment.

The rich buffet well-colour'd serpents grace,
And gaping Tritons spew to wash your face. Pope.

TO BUFFET. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with the hand; to box; to beat.

Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes again; he so buffets himself on the forehead, crying, Peer out, peer out! that any madness, I ever yet beheld, seem'd but tameness. Shakespeare.

Our ears are cudgell'd; not a word of his
But buffets better than a fit of France. Shakespeare.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews; throwing it aside. Shakespeare.

Instantly I plung'd into the sea,
And buffeting the billows to her rescue,
Redeem'd her life with half the loss of mine. Orway.

TO BUFFET. v. n. To play a boxing-match.

If I might buffet for my love, I could lay on like a butcher. Shakespeare's Henry V.

BUFFETER. n. f. [from buffet.] A boxer; one that buffets.

BUFFLE. n. f. [beuffie, Fr.] The same with buffalo; a wild ox.

TO BUFFLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To puzzle; to be at a loss.

BUFFON. n. f. [buffon, French.]

1. A man whose profession is to make sport, by low jests and antic postures; a jacking.

No prince would think himself greatly honoured, to have his proclamation canvass'd on a publick stage, and become the sport of buffoons. Watts.

2. A man that practises indecent raillery.

It is the nature of drulls and buffoons, to be insolent to those that will bear it, and slavish to others. L'Estrange.

The bold buffoon, when'er they tread the green,
Their motion mimicks, but with jest obscene. Garth.

BUFFONERY. n. f. [from buffoon.]

1. The practice or art of a buffoon.
Courage, in an ill-bred man, has the air, and escapes not the opinion, of brutality; learning becomes pedantry, and wit buffoonery. Locke.

2. Low jests; ridiculous pranks; scurrile mirth. Dryden places the accent, improperly, on the first syllable.

Where publick ministers encourage buffoonery, it is no wonder if buffoons set up for publick ministers. L'Estrange.

And while it lasts, let buffoonery succeed,
To make us laugh; for never was more need. Dryden.

BUG. n. f. A stinking insect bred in old household stuff. In the following passage, wings are erroneously ascribed to it.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, which stinks and stings. Pope.

BUG. n. f. [It is derived by some from big, by others from pug; bug, in Welsh, has the same meaning.] A frightful object; a walking spectre, imagined to be seen: generally now used for a false terror to frighten babes.

Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,
As ghastly bug their hair on end does rear,
Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign. Fairy Queen.

Sir, spare your threats;
The bug which you would fright me with, I seek. Shakespeare.

Hadst not slept to-night? would he not, naughty man, let it sleep? a bugbear take him. Shakespeare.

We have a horror for uncouth monsters; but, upon experience, all these bugs grow familiar and easy to us. L'Estrange.

Such bugbear thoughts, once got into the tender minds of children, sink deep, so as not easily, if ever, to be got out again. Locke.

To the world, no bugbear is so great,
As want of figure, and a small estate. Pope.

BUGGINESS. n. f. [from buggy.] The state of being infected with bugs.

BUGGY. adj. [from bug.] Abounding with bugs.

BUGLE. n. f. [from bugen, Sax.]

BUGLEHORN. } to bend, Skinner; from bucula, Lat. a heifer, Junius; from bugle, the bonafus, Lye.] A hunting horn.

Then took that squire an horny bugle small,
Which rung adown his side in twisted gold,
And tassels gay. Fairy Queen.

I will have a recheate winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldrick. Shakespeare.

He gave his bugle horn a blast,
That through the woodland echo'd far and wide. Tickell.

BUGLE. n. f. A shining bead of black glass.

Bugle bracelets, necklace amber, Perfumd for a lady's chamber. Shakespeare.

'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship. Shakespeare.

BUGLE. n. f. [from bugula, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

BUGLE. n. f. A sort of wild ox. Phillips's World of Words.

BUGLOSS. n. f. [from buglossium, Lat.] The herb ox-tongue.

TO BUILD. v. a. preter. I built, I have built. [ilden, Dutch.]

1. To raise from the ground; to make a fabrick, or an edifice.

Thou shalt not build an house unto my name. Chronicles.

When usurers tell their gold in the field,
And whores and bawds do churches build. Shakespeare.

2. To raise in any laboured form.

When the head-dress was built up in a couple of cones and spires, which stood so excessively high on the side of the head, that a woman, who was but a pigmy without her head-dress, appeared like a Colossus upon putting it on. Speiactor.

3. To raise any thing on a support or foundation.

Love built on beauty, soon as beauty, dies;
Choose this face, chang'd by no deformities. Donne.

I would endeavour to destroy these curious, but groundless structures, that men have built up of opinions alone. Boyle.

TO BUILD. v. n.

1. To play the architect.

To build, to plant, whatever you intend,
To rear the column, or the arch to bend. Pope.

2. To depend on; to rest on.

By a man's authority, we here understand the force which his word hath for the assurance of another's mind, that buildeth upon it. Hooker.

Some build rather upon the abusing of others, and putting tricks upon them, than upon soundness of their own proceedings. Bacon.

Even those who had not tasted of your favours, yet built so much on the fame of your beneficence, that they bemoan'd the loss of their expectations. Dryden.

This is certainly a much surer way, than to build on the interpretations of an author, who does not consider how the ancients used to think. Addison.

BUILDER. n. f. [from build.] He that builds; an architect.

But fore-accounting oft makes builders miss;
They found, they felt, they had no lease of bliss. Sidney.

When they, which had seen the beauty of the first temple built by Solomon, beheld how far it excelled the second, which had not builders of like abilities, the tears of their griev'd eyes the prophets endeavour'd, with comforts, to wipe away. Hooker.

Mark'd out for such an use, as if 'twere meant
T' invite the builder, and his choice prevent. Denham.

Her wings with lengthen'd honour let her spread,
And, by her greatness, shew her builder's fame. Prior.

BUILDING. n. f. [from build.] A fabrick; an edifice.

Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Have cost a mass of publick treasury. Shakespeare.

View not this spire by measure giv'n
To buildings rais'd by common hands:
That fabrick rises high as heav'n,
Whose basis on devotion stands. Prior.

Among the great variety of ancient coins which I saw at Rome, I could not but take particular notice of such as relate to any of the buildings or statues that are still extant. Addison.

BUILT. n. f. [from build.]

1. The form; the structure.

As is the built, so different is the fight;
Their mountain shot is on our sails design'd;
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.

2. Species of building.

There is hardly any country, which has so little shipping as Ireland; the reason must be, the scarcity of timber proper for this built. Temple.

BULB. n. f. [from bulbus, Lat.] A round body, or root.

Take up your early autumnal tulips, and bulbs,
if you will remove them. Evelyn's Kalendar.

If we consider the bulb, or ball of the eye, the exterior membrane, or coat thereof, is made thick; tough, or strong, that it is a very hard matter to make a rupture in it.

BUL'ACEOUS. adj. [balbaceus, Lat.] The same with bulbous.

BUL'BOUS. adj. [from bulb.] Containing bulbs; consisting of bulbs; having round or roundish knobs.

There are of roots, bulbous roots, fibrous roots, and hirsute roots. And I take it, in the bulbous, the sap hasteneth more to the air and sun.

To BULGE. v. n. [It was originally written bilge: bilge was the lower part of the ship, where it swelled out; from bilz, Sax. a bladder.]

1. To take in water; to founder. Thrice round the ship was toft, Then bulg'd at once, and in the deep was lost.

2. To jut out. The side, or part of the side of a wall, or any timber that bulges from its bottom or foundation, is said to batter, or hang over the foundation.

BUL'IMY. n. f. [βουλμία, from βου, an ox, and μιος, hunger.] An enormous appetite, attended with fainting, and coldness of the extremities.

BULK. n. f. [bulcke, Dutch, the breast, or largest part of a man.]

1. Magnitude of material substance; mass. Against these forces there were prepared near one hundred ships; not so great of bulk indeed, but of a more nimble motion, and more serviceable.

The Spaniards and Portuguese have ships of great bulk; but fitter for the merchant than the man of war, for burden than for battle.

Though an animal arrives at its full growth at a certain age, perhaps it never comes to its full bulk till the last period of life.

2. Size; quantity. Things, or objects, cannot enter into the mind as they subfit in themselves, and by their own natural bulk pass into the apprehension; but they are taken in by their ideas.

3. The gross; the majority; the main mass.

These very points, in which these wise men disagreed from the bulk of the people, are points in which they agreed with the received doctrines of our nature.

Change in property, through the bulk of a nation, makes slow marches, and its due power always attends it.

The bulk of the debt must be lessened gradually.

4. Main fabrick. He rais'd a sigh so piteous and profound, That it did seem to shatter all his bulk, And end his being.

BUL'KHEAD. n. f. A partition made across a ship, with boards, whereby one part is divided from another.

BUL'KINESS. n. f. [from bulky.] Greatness of stature, or size.

Wheat, or any other grain, cannot serve instead of money, because of its bulkingness, and change of its quantity.

BUL'KY. adj. [from bulk.] Of great size or stature.

Latreus, the bulkiest of the double race, Whom the spoil'd arms of slain Halesus grace.

Huge Telephus, a formidable page, Cries vengeance; and Orestes' bulky rage, Unsatisfy'd with margins closely writ, Foams o'er the covers.

The manner of sea engagements, which was to bore and sink the enemy's ships with the rorstra, gave bulky and high ships a great advantage.

BULL. n. f. [bulle, Dutch.]

1. The male of black cattle; the male to a cow.

A gentlewoman, Sir, and a kinswoman of my master's.—Even such kin as the parish heifers are to the town bull.

Bulls are more crisp upon the forehead than cows.

Best age to go to bull, or calve, we hold, Begins at four, and ends at ten years old.

2. In the scriptural sense, an enemy powerful, fierce, and violent.

Many bulls have compassed me: strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round.

3. One of the twelve signs of the zodiack. At last from Arices rolls the bounteous Ion, And the bright Bull receives him.

4. A letter published by the pope.

A bull is letters called apostolick by the canons, strengthened with a leaden seal, and containing in them the decrees and commandments of the pope or bishop of Rome.

There was another sort of ornament wore by the young nobility, called bulle; round, or of the figure of a heart, hung about their necks like diamond crosses. Those bulle came afterwards to be hung to the diplomas of the emperors and popes, from whence they had the name of bulls.

It was not till after a fresh bull of Leo's had declared how inflexible the court of Rome was in the point of abuses.

5. A blunder; a contradiction.

I confess it is what the English call a bull, in the expression, though the sense be manifest enough.

BULL, in composition, generally notes the large size of any thing, as bull-head, bulrush, bull-trout; and is therefore only an augmentative syllable, without much reference to its original signification.

BULL-BAITING. n. f. [from bull and bait.] The sport of baiting bulls with dogs.

What am I the wiser for knowing that Trajan was in the fifth year of his tribunicship, when he entertained the people with a horse-race or bull-baiting?

BULL-BEEF. n. f. [from bull and beef.] Coarse beef; the flesh of bulls.

They want their porridge and their fat bull-beeves.

BULL-BEGGAR. n. f. [This word probably came from the insolence of those who begged, or raised money by the pope's bull.] Something terrible; something to fright children with.

These fulminations from the Vatican were turned into ridicule; and, as they were called bull-beggars, they were used as words of scorn and contempt.

BULL-CALF. n. f. [from bull and calf.] A he-calf; used for a stupid fellow; a term of reproach.

And, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimbly, and roared for mercy, and still ran and roared, as ever I heard a bull-calf.

BULL-DOG. n. f. [from bull and dog.] A dog of a particular form, remarkable for his courage. He is used in baiting the bull; and this species is so peculiar to Britain, that they are said to degenerate when they are carried to other countries.

All the harmless part of him is that of a bull-dog; they are tame no longer than they are not offended.

BULL-FINCH. n. f. [rubicilla.] A small bird, that has neither song nor whistle of its own, yet is very apt to learn, if taught by the mouth.

The blackbird whistles from the thorny brake, The mellow bull-finch answers from the groves.

BULL-FLY. n. f. An insect.

BULL-BEE. n. f. [Phillips's World of Words.]

BULL-HEAD. n. f. [from bull and head.]

1. A stupid fellow; a blockhead.

2. The name of a fish.

The miller's thumb, or bull-head, is a fish of no pleasing shape; it has a head big and flat, much greater than suitable to its body; a mouth very wide, and usually gaping; he is without teeth, but his lips are very rough, much like a file; he hath two fins near to his gills, which are roundish or crested; two fins under his belly, two on the back, one below the vent, and the fin of the tail is round. Nature hath painted the body of this fish with whitish, blackish, brownish spots. They are usually full of spawn all the summer, which swells their vents in the form of a dug. The bull-head begins to spawn in April; in winter we know no more what becomes of them than of eels or swallows.

3. A little black water vermin.

BULL-TROUT. n. f. A large kind of trout.

There is, in Northumberland, a trout called a bull-trout, of a much greater length and bigness than any in these southern parts.

As when the devilish iron engine, wrought In deepest hell, and fram'd by furies skill, With windy nitre and quick sulphur freight, And ramm'd with bullet round, ordain'd to kill.

Giaffer, their leader, desperately fighting amongst the foremost of the janizaries, was at once shot with two bullets, and slain.

And as the bullet, so different is the fight; Their mounting shot is on our sails design'd; Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light, And through the yielding planks a passage find.

BULLION. n. f. [billon, Fr.] Gold or silver in the lump, unwrought, uncoined.

The balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion.

A second multitude, With wond'rous art, found out the maffy ore, Severing each kind, and seumm'd the bullion dross.

Bullion is silver whose workmanship has no value. And thus foreign coin hath no value here for its stamp, and our coin is bullion in foreign dominions. Locke.

In every vessel there is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion. Addison.

BULLITION. n. f. [from bullo, Lat.] The act or state of boiling.

There is to be observed in these dissolutions, which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are, as the bullition, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the midst, and the like. Bacon.

BULLOCK. n. f. [from bull.] A young bull.

Why, that's spoken like an honest drover: so they sell bullocks. Shakespeare.

Some drive the herds; here the fierce bullock scorns

Th' appointed way, and runs with threatening horns. Cowley.

Until the transportation of cattle into England was prohibited, the quickest trade of ready money here was driven by the sale of young bullocks. Temple.

BULLY. n. f. [Skinner derives this word from burly, as a corruption in the pronunciation; which is very probably right: or from bulky, or bull-eyed; which are less probable. May it not come from bull, the pope's letter, implying the insolence of those who came invested with authority from the papal court?] A noisy, blustering, quarrelling fellow: it is generally taken for a man that has only the appearance of courage.

Mine is h't of the garter!—What says my bully rock! Speak scholarly and wisely. Shakespeare.

All on a sudden the doors flew open, and in comes a crew of roaring bullies, with their wenchies, their dogs, and their bottles. L'Estrange.

'Tis so ridiculous, but so true withal, A bully cannot sleep without a brawl. Dryden.

A scolding hero is, at the worst, a more tolerable character than a bully in petticoats. Addison.

The little man is a bully in his nature, but, when he grows choleric, I confine him till his wrath is over. Addison.

To BULLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To overbear with noise or menaces.

To BULLY. v. n. To be noisy and quarrelsome.

BULRUSH. n. f. [from bull and rush.] A large rush, such as grows in rivers, without knots; though Dryden has given it the epithet knotty; confounding it, probably, with the reed.

To make fine cages for the nightingale, And baskets of bulrushes, was my wont. Spenser.

All my praises are but as a bulrush cast upon a stream; they are born by the strength of the current. Dryden.

The edges were with bending osiers crown'd; The knotty bulrush next in order stood, And all within of reeds, a trembling wood. Dryden.

BULWARK. n. f. [bolwercke, Dutch; probably only from its strength and largeness.]

1. What is now called a bastion.

But him the squire made quickly to retreat, Encountering fierce with single sword in hand, And 'twixt him and his lord did like a bulwark stand. Spenser.

Their earthen bulwarks 'gainst the ocean flood. Fairfax.

We have bulwarks round us; Within our walls are troops enaught to toil. Addison.

2. A fortification.

Taking away needless bulwarks, divers were demolished upon the sea coasts. Hayward.

Our naval strength is a bulwark to the nation. Addison.

3. A security; a screen; a shelter.

Some making the wars their bulwark, that have before gotted the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Shakespeare.

Yond same black cloud, yond huge one looks Like a foul bumbard, that would shed his liquor. Shakespeare.

BUMBAST. n. f. [falsely written for bombast; bombast and bombusine being mentioned, with great probability, by Junius, as coming from boam, a tree, and sein, silk; the silk or cotton of a tree. Mr. Steevens, with much more probability, deduces them all from bombycinus.]

1. A cloth made by sewing one stuff upon another; patchwork.

The usual bumbast of black bits sewed into ermine, our English women are made to think very fine. Grew.

2. Linen stuffed with cotton; stuffing; wadding.

We have receiv'd your letters full of love, And, in our maiden council, rated them As courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy, As bumbast, and as lining to the time. Shakespeare.

BUMP. n. f. [perhaps from bum, as being prominent.] A swelling; a protuberance.

It had upon its brow a bump as big as a young cockrel's stone; a perilous knock, and it cried bitterly. Shakespeare.

Not though his teeth are beaten out, his eyes Hang by a string, in bumps his forehead rise. Dryden.

To BUMP. v. a. [from bombus, Lat.] To make a loud noise, or bomb. [See BOMB.] It is applied, I think, only to the bittern.

Then to the water's brink she laid her head, And as a bittern bumps within a reed, To thee alone, O lake, she said— Dryden.

BUMPER. n. f. [from bump.] A cup filled till the liquor swells over the brims.

Places his delight All day in playing bumpers, and at night Reels to the bawds. Dryden's Juvenal.

BUMPKIN. n. f. [This word is of uncertain etymology; Henshaw derives it from pumkin, a kind of worthless gourd, or melon. This seems harsh; yet we use the word cabbage-head in the same sense. Bump is used amongst us for a knob, or lump: may not bumpkin be much the same with clodpate, loggerhead, block, and blockhead?] An awkward heavy rustick; a country lout.

The poor bumpkin, that had never heard of such delights before, blessed herself at the change of her condition. L'Estrange.

A heavy bumpkin, taught with daily ease, Can never dance three steps with a becoming air. Dryden.

Then bids the youngest of the six
Take up a well-bound heap of sticks. Swift.

2. A roll; any thing rolled up.
She carried a great bundle of Flanders lace under her arm; but finding herself overladen, she dropped the good mao, and brought away the bundle. Spektator.

TO BUN'DLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To tie in a bundle; to tie together: with up.

We ought to put things together as well as we can, destrine causa; but, after all, several things will not be bundled up together, under our terms and ways of speaking. Locke.

See how the double nation lies,
Like a rich coat with skirts of frize;
As if a man, in making poses,
Should bundle thistles up with roses. Swift.

BUNG. n. f. [bing, Welsh.] A stopple for a barrel.

After three nights are expired, the next morning pull out the bung stick, or plug. Mortimer.

TO BUNG. v. a. [from the noun.] To stop; to close up.

BUN'GHOLE. n. f. [from bung and hole.] The hole at which the barrel is filled, and which is afterwards stopped up.
Why may not imagination trace the noblest duct of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bunghole? Shakespeare.

TO BUN'GLE. v. n. [See BUNGLER.] To perform clumsily.
When men want light,
They make but bungling work. Dryden.

Letters to me are not seldom opened, and then sealed in a bungling manner before they come to my hands. Swift.

TO BUN'GLE. v. a. To botch; to manage clumsily; to conduct awkwardly: with up.

Other devils, that suggest by treasons,
Do botch and bungle up damnation,
With patches, colours, and with forms, being fetters
From glittering semblances of piety. Shakespeare.

They make lame mischief, though they mean it well:
Their interest is not finely drawn, and hid,
But seams are coarsely bungled up, and seen. Dryd.

BUN'GLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A botch; an awkwardness; an inaccuracy; a clumsy performance.
Errors and bungles are committed, when the matter is inapt or contumacious. Ray on the Creation.

BUNGLER. n. f. [bungler, Welsh; g. lôn y glér, i. e. the last or lowest of the profession. Davies.] A bad workman; a clumsy performer; a man without skill.

Painters, at the first, were such bunglers, and so rude that, when they drew a cow or a hog, they were fain to write over the head what it was; otherwise the beholder knew not what to make of it. Peacock on Drawing.

Hard features every bungler can command;
To draw true beauty shews a master's hand. Dryd.

A bungler thus, who scarce the nail can hit,
With driving wrong will make the pannel split. Swift.

BUNGLINGLY. adv. [from bungling.] Clumsily; awkwardly.

To denominate them monsters, they must have had some system of parts, compounded of solids and fluids, that executed, though but bunglingly, their peculiar functions. Bentley.

BUNN. n. f. [bunclo, Span.] A kind of sweet bread.

Thy songs are sweeter to mine ear,
Than to the thirsty cattle rivers clear,
Or winter porridge to the lab'ring youth,
Or bunns and sugar to the damsel's tooth. Gay's Pastorals.

BUNT. n. f. [corrupted, as Skinner thinks, from hent.] A swelling part; an increasing cavity.

The wear is a fritb, reaching downwise through the ooze, from the land to low water mark, and having in it a bunt, or cod, with an eye-hook, where the fish entering, upon the coming back with the ebb, are stopped from issuing out again, forsaken by the water, and left dry on the ooze. Carew.

TO BUNT. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell out: as, the sail bunts out.

BUN'TER. n. f. A cant word for a woman who picks up rags about the street; and used, by way of contempt, for any low vulgar woman.

BUOY. n. f. [bouë, or boye, Fr. boya, Span.] A piece of cork or wood floating on the water, tied to a weight at the bottom.

The fishermen, that walk upon the beach, appear like mice; and yood tall anchoring bark Diminish'd to her cock; her cock a buoy, Almost too small for sight. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Like buoys, that never sink into the flood,
On learning's surface we but lie and nod. Pope's Dunciad.

TO BUOY. v. a. [from the noun. The u is mute in both.] To keep afloat; to bear up.

All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch presbytery, in England; which was lately buoyed up in Scotland, by the like artifice of a covenant. King Charles.

The water which rises out of the abyss, for the supply of springs and rivers, would not have stopped at the surface of the earth, but marched directly up into the atmosphere, wherever there was heat enough in the air to continue its ascent, and buoy it up. Woodward's Natural History.

TO BUOY. v. n. To float; to rise by specific lightness.
Rising merit will buoy up at last. Pope's Essay on Criticism.

BUOYANCY. n. f. [from buoyant.] The quality of floating.
All the winged tribes owe their slight and buoyancy to it. Derham's Physico-Theology.

BUOYANT. adj. [from buoy.] Floating; light; that which will not sink. Dryden uses the word, perhaps improperly, for something that has density enough to hinder a floating body from sinking.

I swam with the tide, and the water under me was buoyant. Dryden.

His once so vivid nerves,
So full of buoyant spirit, now no more Inspire the course. Thomson's Autumn.

BUR, BOUR, BOR, come from the Sax. bur, an inner chamber, or place of shade and retirement. Gibson's Camden.

BUR. n. f. [lappa: bourre, Fl. is down; the bur being filled with a soft tomentum, or down.] A rough head of a plant,

And from my shoulders crack my arms asunder,

But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet.

Shakespeare.

He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out,

As if he would burst heav'n.

I will break his yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds.

Moses saith also, the fountains of the great abyſs were burst asunder, to make the deluge; and what means this abyſs, and the bursting of it, if restrain'd to Judæa? what appearance is there of this disruption there?

If the juices of an animal body were, so as by the mixture of the opposites, to cause an ebullition, they would burst the vessels.

Arbutnot.

BURST. n. f. [from the verb.] A sudden disruption; a sudden and violent action of any kind.

Since I was man,

Such sheets of fire, such burst of horrid thunder,

Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard.

Down they came, and drew

The whole roof after them, with burst of thunder,

Upon the heads of all.

Imprison'd fires, in the close dungeons pent,

Roar to get loose, and struggle for a vent;

Eating their way, and undermining all,

Till with a mighty burst whole mountains fall.

Addison.

BUSH. n. f. [bois, French.]
 1. A thick shrub.
 Est through the thick they heard one rudely rush,
 With noise whercof, he from his lofty steed
 Down fell to ground, and crept into a bush,
 To hide his coward head from dying dread.
Fairy Queen.

The poller, and exacter of fees, justifies the resemblance of the courts of justice to the bush, whereunto while the sheep flies for defence from the weather, he is sure to lose part of the fleece.
Bacon's Essays.

Her heart was that strange bush, whose sacred fire
 Religion did not consume, but inspire
 Such piety, so chaste use of God's day,
 That what we turn'd to feast, she turn'd to pray.
Deane.

With such a care,
 As roses from their stalks we tear,
 When we would still prefer them new,
 And fresh as on the bush they grew. Waller.

The sacred ground
 Shall weeds and poisonous plants refuse to bear;
 Each common bush shall Syrian roses wear. Dryden.

2. A bough of a tree fixed up at a door, to shew that liquors are sold there.
 If it be true that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue. Shakespeare.

 in the other. Bacon.

7. Something to be transacted.

They were far from the Zidonians, and had no business with any one. Judge.

8. Something required to be done.

To those people that dwell under or near the equator, this spring would be most pestilent: as for those countries that are nearer the poles, in which number are our own, and the most considerable nations of the world, a perpetual spring will not do their business; they must have longer days, a nearer approach to the sun. Bentley.

9. To do one's business. To kill, destroy, or ruin him.

BUSK. n. f. [busque, Fr.] A piece of steel or whalebone, worn by women to

BUT. conjunct. [butte, butan, Saxon.]

1. Except.

An emission of immateriate virtues we are a little doubtful to propound, it is so prodigious: but that it is so constantly avouched by many. Bacon.
Who can it be, ye gods! but perjurd Lycon?
Who can inspire such forms of rage, but Lycon?
Where has my sword left one so black, but Lycon? Smit.

Your poem hath been printed, and we have no objection but the obscurity of several passages, by our ignorance in facts and persons. Swift.

2. Except that; unless; had it not been that: in this sense we now write but that. See sense 11.

And but infirmity,
Which waits upon worn times, hath something seiz'd

His with'd ability, he had himself
The lands and waters measur'd. Shakespeare.

3. Yet; nevertheless. It sometimes only enforces yet.

Then let him speak, and any that shall stand without shall hear his voice plainly; but yet made extreme sharp and exile, like the voice of puppets: and yet the articulate sounds of the words will not be confounded. Bacon.

Our wants are many, and grievous to be born, but quite of another kind. Swift.

4. The particle which introduces the minor of a syllogism; now.

If there be a liberty and possibility for a man to kill himself to-day, then it is not absolutely necessary that he shall live till to-morrow; but there is such a liberty, therefore no such necessity. Bramhall against Hobbes.

God will one time or another make a difference between the good and the evil. But there is little or no difference made in this world; therefore there must be another world, wherein this difference shall be made. Watts's Tegick.

5. Only; nothing more than.

If my offence be of such mortal kind,
That not my service past, or present sorrows,
Can ransom me into his love again;
But to know so, must be my benefit. Shakespeare.
What nymph so'er his voice but hears,
Will be my rival, though she have but ears. Ben Jonson.

No, Aurengzebr, you merit all my heart,
And I'm too noble but to give a part. Dryden.

But for her native ornament of hair,
 Which in a simple knot was tied above. Dryden.
 When the fair boy receiv'd the gift of right,
 And, but for mischief, you had died for spite. Dryd.

BUT. n. f. [bout, French.] A boundary.
But, if I ask you what I mean by that word,
 you will answer, I mean this or that thing, you cannot tell which; but if I join it with the words in construction and sense, as, but I will not, a but of wine, but and boundary, the ram will but, shoot at but, the meaning of it will be as ready to you as any other word. Holder.

BUT. n. f. [In sea language.] The end of any plank which joins to another on the outside of a ship, under water.
Harris.

 volleys, and then fell on them with the but-ends of their musquets. Clarendon.
 Thy weapon was a good one when I wielded it,
 but the but-end remains in my hands. Arbutnot.
 Some of the soldiers accordingly pushed them forwards, with the but-ends of their pikes, into my reach. Swift.

BUTCHER. n. f. [botcher, Fr.]
 1. One that kills animals to sell their flesh.

The shepherd and the butcher both may look upon one sheep with pleasing conceits. Sidney.
 Hence he learnt the butcher's guile,
 How to cut your throat, and smile;
 Like a butcher doom'd for life
 In his mouth to wear his knife. Swift.

2. One that is delighted with blood.
 Honour and renown are bestowed on conquere-rats, who, for the most part, are but the great butchers of mankind. Locke.

To BUTCHER. v. a. [from the noun.]
 To kill; to murder.

In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughter'd,
 Thou shew'st the naked pathway to thy life,
 Teaching stern murder how to butcher thee. Shak.
 Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
 And shamefully by you my hopes are butcher'd.
Shakespeare.

The poison and the dagger are at hand to butcher a hero, when the poet wants brains to save him. Dryden.

BUTCHERS-BROOM, or KNEEHOLLY.
n. f. [ruscus, Lat.]

CAGE. n. f. [cage, Fr. from cavea, Lat.]
1. An inclosure of twigs or wire, in which birds are kept.

See whether a cage can please a bird? or whether a dog grow not fiercer with tying? Sidney.
He taught me how to know a man in love; in which cage of rushes, I am sure you are not a prisoner.
Shakespeare.

Though slaves, like birds that sing not in a cage,
They lost their genius, and poetick rage;
Homers again and Pindars may be found,
And his great actions with their numbers crown'd.
Waller.

And parrots, imitating human tongue,
And singing birds in silver cages hung;
And ev'ry fragrant flow'r, and od'rous green,
Were sort'd well, with lumps of amber laid between.
Dryden.

A man recurs to our fancy, by remembering his garment; a beast, bird, or fish, by the cage, or court-yard, or cistern, wherein it was kept.

The reason why so few marriages are happy, is, because young ladies spend their time in making nets, not in making cages.
Swift.

CAITIFF. n. f. [cattivo, Ital.] a slave; whence it came to signify a bad man, with some implication of meanness; as knave in English, and sur in Latin; so certainly does slavery destroy virtue.

Ἐπισυ τῆς ἀρετῆς ἀπολείβεται δόλοισι ἡμᾶς.
Homer.

A slave and a scoundrel are signified by the same words in many languages.] A mean villain; a despicable knave: it often implies a mixture of wickedness and misery.

Vile cattiff! vassal of dread and despair,
Unworthy of the common breathed air!
Why livest thou, dead dog, a longer day,
And dost not unto death thyself prepare?
Spenser.
'Tis not impossible

But one, the wicked'st cattiff on the ground,
May seem as thy, as grave, as just, as absolute,
As Angelo.
Shakespeare.

The wretched cattiff, all alone,
As he believ'd, began to moan,
And tell his story to himself.
Hudibras.

Then when the fleecy skies new cloath the wood,
And cakes of rustling ice come rolling down the flood.
Dryden.

To CAKE. v. n. [from the noun.] To harden, as dough in the oven.

This burning matter, as it sunk very leisurely, had time to cake together, and form the bottom, which covers the mouth of that dreadful vault that lies underneath it.
Addison on Italy.

This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horses in the night,
And cakes the cluocks in foul sluttish hairs. Shak.
He rins'd the wound,
And wash'd away the strings and clotted blood,
That cak'd within.
Addison.

CALABASH Tree.

It hath a flower consisting of one leaf, divided at the brim into several parts; from whose cup rises the pointal, in the hinder part of the flower; which afterwards becomes a fleshy fruit, having an hard shell. They rise to the height of twenty-five or thirty feet in the West Indies, where they grow naturally. The shells are used by the negroes for cups, as also for making instruments of music, by making a hole in the shell, and putting in small stones, with which they make a sort of rattle. Miller.

Calamy.

2. Full of misery; distressful: applied to external circumstances.

What calamitous effects the air of this city wrought upon us the last year, you may read in my discourse of the plague.
Harvey on Consumption.

Strict necessity
Subdues me, and calamitous constraint!
Left on my head both sin and punishment,
However insupportable, be all Devolv'd.
Milton.

Much rather I shall chuse
To live the poorest in my tribe, than richest,
And be in that calamitous prison left.
Milton.

In this sad and calamitous condition, deliverance from an oppressor would have even revived them.
Swift.

CALAMITOUSNESS. n. f. [from calamitous.] Misery; distress.

CALAMITY. n. f. [calamitas, Lat.]

1. Misfortune; cause of misery; distress.

Another ill accident is drought, and the spinning of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common; inasmuch as the word calamity was first derived from calamus, when the corn could not get out of the stalk.
Bacon.

2. Misery; distress.

This infinite calamity shall cause
To human life, and household peace confound.
Milton.

From adverse shores in safety let her hear
Foreign calamity, and distant war;
Of which, great heav'n, let her no portion bear.
Prior.

CALAMUS. n. f. [Lat.] A sort of reed or sweet-scented wood, mentioned in scripture with the other ingredients of the sacred perfumes. It is a knotty root, reddish without, and white within, which puts forth long and narrow leaves, and brought from the Indies. The prophets speak of it as a foreign commodity of great value. These sweet reeds have no smell when they are green, but when they are dry only. Their form differs not from other reeds, and their smell is perceived upon entering the marshes.
Cabnet.

Take thou also unto thee principal spices of pure myrrh, of sweet cinnamon, and of sweet calamus.
Exodus, xxx. 23.

CALASH. n. f. [caleche, Fr.] A small carriage of pleasure.

Daniel, a sprightly swain, that us'd to flash
The vigorous steeds, that drew his lord's calash.

To CALCINATE. See To CALCINE.

In hardening, by baking without melting, the heat hath these degrees; first, it indurath, then maketh fragile, and lastly it doth calcinat.
Bacon's Natural History.

CALCINATION.

CALCINATION. n. f. [from calcinare; calcination, Fr.] Such a management of bodies by fire, as renders them reducible to powder; wherefore it is called chymical pulverization. This is the next degree of the power of fire beyond that of fusion; for when fusion is longer continued, not only the more subtil particles of the body itself fly off, but the particles of fire likewise insinuate themselves in such multitudes, and are so blended through its whole substance, that the fluidity, first caused by the fire, can no longer subsist. From this union arises a third kind of body, which, being very porous and brittle, is easily reduced to powder; for, the fire having penetrated every where into the pores of the body, the particles are both hindered from mutual contact, and divided into minute atoms. Quincy.

Divers residences of bodies are thrown away, as soon as the distillation or calcination of the body that yieldeth them is ended. Boyle.

This may be effected, but not without a calcination, or reducing it by art into a subtle powder. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CALCINATORY. n. f. [from calcinate.] A vessel used in calcination.

TO CALCINE. v. a. [calcinare, Fr. from calx, Lat.]

1. To burn in the fire to a calx, or friable substance. See CALCINATION.

The solids seem to be earth, bound together with some oil; for if a bone be calcined, so as the least force will crumble it, being immersed in oil, it will grow firm again. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. To burn up.
Fiery disputes that union have calcin'd,
Almost as many minds as men we find. Denham.

TO CALCINE. v. n. To become a calx by heat.

This crystal is a pellucid fissile stone, clear as water, and without colour, enduring a red heat without losing its transparency, and, in a very strong heat, calcining without fusion. Newton's Opticks.

TO CALCULATE. v. a. [calculus, Fr. from calculus, Lat. a little stone or bead, used in operations of numbers.]

1. To compute; to reckon: as, he calculates his expences.

2. To compute the situation of the planets at any certain time.

A cunning man did calculate my birth,
And told me, that by water I should die. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts,
Why old men, fools, and children calculate,
Why all those things change from their ordinance? Shakespeare.

Who were there then in the world, to observe the births of those first men, and calculate their nati- vities, as they sprawled out of ditches? Bentley.

3. To adjust; to project for any certain end.

The reasonableness of religion clearly appears, as it tends so directly to the happiness of men, and is, upon all accounts, calculated for our benefit. Tillotson.

TO CALCULATE. v. n. To make a computation.

CALCULATION. n. f. [from calculate.]

1. A practice, or manner of reckoning; the art of numbering.

Cypher, that great friend to calculation; or rather, which changeth calculation into easy computation. Holder on Time.

2. A reckoning; the result of arithmetical operation.

If then their calculation be true, for so they reckon. Hooker.

Being different from calculations of the ancients, their observations confirm not ours. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CALCULATOR. n. f. [from calculate.] A computer; a reckoner.

CALCULATORY. adj. [from calculate.] Belonging to calculation.

CALCULE. n. f. [calculus, Lat.] Reckoning; compute; obsolete.

The general calcule, which was made in the last perambulation, exceeded eight millions. Hovel's Vocal Forest.

CALCULOSE. } adj. [from calculus, Lat.]
CALCULOUS. } Stony; gritty.

The volatile salt of urine will coagulate spirits of wine; and thus, perhaps, the stones, or calculese concretions in the kidney or bladder, may be produced. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

I have found, by opening the kidneys of a calculus person, that the stone is formed earlier than I have suggested. Sharp.

CALCULUS. n. f. [Latin.] The stone in the bladder.

CALDRON. n. f. [chaldron, Fr. from calidus, Lat.] A pot; a boiler; a kettle. In the midst of all

There placed was a caldron wide and tall,
Upon a mighty furnace, burning hot. Fairy Queen.

Some strip the skin; some portion out the spail;
The limbs, yet trembling, in the caldrons boil;
Some on the fire the recking entrails broil. Dryden's Aeneid.

In the late eruptions, this great hollow was like a vast caldron, filled with glowing and melted matter, which, as it boiled over in any part, ran down the sides of the mountain. Addison.

CALICHE. The same with CALASH.

CALIFACTION. n. f. [from calefacio, Lat.]

1. The act of heating any thing.

2. The state of being heated.

CALIFACTION. adj. [from calefacio, Lat.] That which heats.

TO CALEFY. v. n. [calefio, Lat.] To grow hot; to be heated.

Crystal will calefy unto electricity; that is, a power to attract straws, or light bodies, and convert the needle, freely placed. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO CALEFY. v. a. To make hot.

CALENDAR. n. f. [calendarium, Lat.] A register of the year, in which the months, and stated times, are marked, as festivals and holidays.

What hath this day deserv'd? what hath it done,
That it in golden letter should be set
Among the high tides, in the calendar? Shakespeare's King John.

We compute from calendars differing from one another; the compute of the one anticipating that of the other. Brown.

Curs'd be the day when first I did appear;
Let it be blotted from the calendar,
Left it pollute the month! Dryden's Fables.

TO CALENDER. v. a. [calendrer, Fr. Skinner.] To dress cloth; to lay the nap of cloth smooth.

CALENDER. n. f. [from the verb.] A hot press; a press in which clothiers smooth their cloth.

CALENDS. n. f. [calendæ, Lat. It has no singular.] The first day of every month among the Romans.

CALENTURE. n. f. [from calere, Lat.] A distemper peculiar to sailors in hot climates; wherein they imagine the sea to be green fields, and will throw themselves into it. Quincy.

And for that lethargy was there no cure,
But to be cast into a calenture. Denham.

So, by a calenture misled,
The mariner with rapture sees,

On the smooth ocean's azure bed,
Enamell'd fields, and verdant trees:

With eager haste he longs to rove
In that fantastic scene; and thinks
It must be some enchanted grove;

And in he leaps, and down he sinks. Swift.

CALF. n. f. calves in the plural. [calv, Saxon; kalf, Dutch.]

1. The young of a cow.

The colt hath about four years of growth; and so the fawn, and so the calf. Bacon's Nat. History.

Acosta tells us of a fowl in Peru, called condore, which will kill and eat up a whole calf at a time. Wilkins.

Ah, Blouzelind! I love thee more by half
Than does their fawns, or cows the new-fall'n calf. Gay.

2. Calves of the lips, mentioned by Hosea, signify sacrifices of praise and prayers, which the captives of Babylon addressed to God, being no longer in a condition to offer sacrifices in his temple. Calmel.

Turn to the Lord, and say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously: so will we render the calves of our lips. Hosea, xiv. 2.

3. By way of contempt and reproach, applied to a human being; a dolt; a stupid wretch.

When a child haps to be got,
That after proves an idiot;

When folk perceive it thriveth not,
Some silly doating brainless calf,
That understands things by the half,
Says, that the fairy left the oaf,
And took away the other. Drayton's Nymphid.

4. The thick, plump, bulbous part of the leg. [kalf, Dutch.]

Into her legs I'd have love's issues fall,
And all her calf into a gouty small. Suckling.

The calf of that leg blistered. Wise man's Surgery.

CALIBER. n. f. [calibre, Fr.] The bore; the diameter of the barrel of a gun; the diameter of a bullet.

CALICE. n. f. [calix, Lat.] A cup; a chalice.

There is a natural analogy between the ablution of the body and the purification of the soul; between eating the holy bread and drinking the sacred calice, and a participation of the body and blood of Christ. Taylor.

CALICO. n. f. [from Calicut in India.]

An Indian stuff made of cotton; sometimes stained with gay and beautiful colours.

I wear the hoop petticoat, and am all in calicoes, when the finest are in silks. Addison's Spectator.

CALID. adj. [calidus, Lat.] Hot; burning; fervent.

CALIDITY. n. f. [from calid.] Heat.

Ice will dissolve in any way of heat; for it will dissolve with fire, it will coagulate in water, or warm oil; nor doth it only submit into an actual heat, but not endure the potential calidity of many waters. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CALIPH. } n. f. [khalifa, Arab. an heir or successor.] A title assumed by the successors of Mahomet among the Saracens, who were vested with absolute power in affairs both religious and civil.

CALIGATION. n. f. [from caligo, Lat.
to be dark.] Darkness; cloudiness.

Instead of a diminution, or imperfect vision, in the mole, we affirm an abolition, or total privation; instead of caligation, or dimness, we conclude a cecity, or blindness. Brown.

CALIGINOUS. adj. [caliginosus, Lat.] Obscure; dim; full of darkness.

CALIGINOUSNESS. n. f. [from caliginous.]
Darkness; obscurity.

CALIVER. n. f. [from caliber.] A handgun; a harquebuse; an old musket.

Come, manage me your caliver.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

CALIX. n. f. [Latin.] A cup; a word used in botany; as, the calix of a flower.

TO CALK. v. a. [from calage, Fr. hemp, with which leaks are stopped; or from cæle, Sax. the keel. Skinner.] To stop the leaks of a ship.

There is a great error committed in the manner of calking his majesty's ships; which being done with rotten oakum, is the cause they are leaky. Raleigh's Essays.

So here some pick out bullets from the side;
Some drive old oakum through each seam and rift;
Their left hand does the calking iron guide,
The rattling mallet with the right they lift. Dryd.

CALKER. n. f. [from calk.] The workman that stops the leaks of a ship.

The ancients of Gebal, and the wise men thereof, were in thee thy calkers; all the ships of the sea, with their mariners, were in thee to occupy thy merchandize. Ezek. xxvii. 9.

CALKING. n. f. A term in painting, used where the backside is covered with black lead, or red chalk, and the lines traced through on a waxed plate, wall, or other matter, by passing lightly over each stroke of the design with a point, which leaves an impression of the colour
on the plate or wall. Chambers.

TO CALL. v. a. [calo, Lat. kalder, Danish.]

1. To name; to denominate.

And God called the light day, and the darkness he called night. Genesis, i. 5.

2. To summon, or invite, to or from any place, thing, or person. It is often used with local particles, as up, down, in, out, off.

Be not amazed; call all your senses to you;
defend my reputation, or bid farewell to your good site for ever. Shakespeare.

Why came not the slave back to me when I called him? Shakespeare's King Lear.

Are you call'd forth from out a world of men,
To slay the innocent? Shakespeare's Richard III.
Lodronius, that famous captain, was called up,
and told by his servants that the general was fled.
Kneller's History.

Or call up him that left half told

The story of Cambuscan bold. Milton.

Drunkenness calls off the watchmen from their towers; and then evils proceed from a loose heart, and an untied tongue. Taylor's Holy Living.

The soul makes use of her memory, to call to mind what she is to treat of.

Duppa's Rules to Devotion.

Such fine employments our whole days divide;
The salutations of the morning tide
Call up the sun; those essed, to the hall
We wait the patron, hear the lawyers bawl. Dryd.

Then by consent abstain from further toil;
Call off the dogs, and gather up the spoils. Addis.
By the pleasures of the imagination or fancy,
I mean such as arise from visible objects, when we call up their ideas into our minds by paintings, statues, or descriptions. Addison's Spectator.

Why dost thou call my sorrows up afresh?
My father's name brings tears into my eyes.

Addison's Cato.

I am called off from public dissertations, by a domestic affair of great importance. Tatler.
Æschylus has a tragedy intitled Persæ, in which the shade of Darius is called up.

Broom on the Odyssey.

The passions call away the thoughts, with incessant importunity, toward the object that excited them. Watts.

3. To convoke; to summon together.

Now call we our high court of parliament.

Shakespeare.

The king being informed of much that had passed that night, sent to the lord mayor to call a common council immediately. Clarendon.

4. To summon judicially.

The king had sent for the earl to return home, where he should be called to account for all his miscarriages. Clarendon.

Once a day, especially in the early years of life and study, call yourselves to an account, what new ideas, what new proposition or truth, you have gained. Watts.

5. To summon by command.

In that day did the Lord God of hosts call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth. Isaiab, xxii. 12.

6. In the theological sense, to inspire with ardours of piety, or to summon into the church.

Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God. Rom. i. 1.

7. To invoke; to appeal to.

I call God for a record upon my soul, that, to spare you, I came not as yet unto Corinth. 2 Cor. i. 23.

8. To appeal to.

When that lord perplexed their counsels and designs with inconvenient objections in law, the authority of the lord Manchester, who had trod the same paths, was still called upon. Clarendon.

9. To proclaim; to publish.

Nor ballad-singer, plac'd above the crowd,
Sings with a note so shrilling, sweet, and loud,
Nor parish clerk, who calls the psalm so clear. Gay.

10. To excite; to put in action; to bring into view.

He swells with angry pride,
And calls forth all his spots on every side. Cowley.

See Dionysius Homer's thoughts refine,
And call new beauties forth from every line. Pope.

11. To stigmatize with some opprobrious denomination.

Deafness unqualifies men for all company, except friends; whom I can call names, if they do not speak loud enough. Swift to Pope.

12. To call back. To revoke; to retract.

He also is wise, and will bring evil, and will not call back his words; but will arise against the house of the evil doers; and against the help of them that work iniquity. Isaiab, xxii. 2.

13. To call for. To demand; to require;
to claim.

Madam, his majesty doth call for you,
And for your grace, and you, my noble lord. Shakespeare.

You see how men of merit are sought after;

the underserver may sleep, when the man of action is called for. Shakespeare.

Among them he a spirit of phrensy sent,
Who hurt their minds,
And urg'd you on, with mad desire,
To call in haste for their destroyer.

Milton's Samson Agonistes.

For master, or for servant, here to call,
Was all alike, where only two were all.

Dryden's Fables.

He commits every sin that his appetite calls for,
or perhaps his constitution or fortune can bear. Rogert.

14. To call in. To resume money at interest.

Horace describes an old usurer, as so charmed with the pleasures of a country life, that, in order to make a purchase, he called in all his money; but what was the event of it? why, in a very few days after, he put it out again. Addison's Spectator.

15. To call in. To resume any thing that is in other hands.

If clipped money be called in all at once, and stopped from passing by weight, I fear it will stop trade. Locke.

Neither is any thing more cruel and oppressive in the French government, than their practice of calling in their money, after they have sunk it very low, and then coining it anew, at a higher value. Swift.

16. To call in. To summon together; to invite.

The heat is past, follow no farther now;
Call in the powers, good cousin Westmarland. Shakespeare.

He fears my subjects loyalty,
And now must call in strangers. Drummond's Sophy.

17. To call over. To read aloud a list or muster-roll.

18. To call out. To challenge; to summon to fight.

When their sovereign's quarrel calls 'em out,
His foes to mortal combat they defy. Dryden's Virgil.

TO CALL. v. n.

1. To stop without intention of staying.

This meaning probably rose from the custom of denoting one's presence at the door by a call; but it is now used with great latitude. This sense is well enough preserved by the particles on or at; but is forgotten, and the expression made barbarous, by in.

2. To make a short visit.

And, as you go, call on my brother Quintus,
And pray him, with the tribunes, to come to me. Ben Jonson.

He ordered her to call at his house once a-week, which she did for some time after, when he heard
no more of her. Temple.

That I might begin as near the fountain-head as possible, I first of all called in at St. James's.

Addison's Spectator.

We called in at Morge, where there is an artificial port. Addison on Italy.

3. To call on. To solicit for a favour, or a debt.

I would be loth to pay him before his day;
what need I be so forward with him, that calls not on me? Shakespeare's Henry IV.

4. To call on. To repeat solemnly.

Thrice call upon my name, thrice beat your breast,
And hail me thrice to everlasting rest. Dryden.

The Athenians, when they lost any men at sea, went to the shores, and calling thrice on their names, raised a cenotaph, or empty monument, to their memories. Broom on the Odyssey.

5. To call upon. To implore; to pray to.

Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me. Psalms i. 15.

CALL.

CALL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A vocal address of summons or invitation.

But death comes not at call, justice divine
Mends not her slowest pace for pray'rs or cries.
Milton.

But would you sing, and rival Orpheus' strain,
The wond'ring forests soon should dance again:
The moving mountains hear the pow'ful call,
And headlong streams hang list'ning in their fall.
Pope.

2. Requisition authoritative and public.

It may be feared, whether our nobility would contentedly suffer themselves to be always at the call, and to stand to the sentence, of a number of mean persons.
Hosker's Preface.

3. Divine vocation; summons to true religion.

Yet he at length, time to himself best known,
Rememb'ring Abraham, by some wond'rous call,
May bring them back repentant and sincere.
Milton.

4. A summons from heaven; an impulse.

How justly then will impious mortals fall,
Whose pride would soar to heav'n without a call!
Roscommon.

Those who to empire by dark paths aspire,
Still plead a call to what they most desire.
Dryden.
St. Paul himself believed he did well, and that he had a call to it, when he persecuted the christians, whom he confidently thought in the wrong:
but yet it was he, and not they, who were mil-taken.
Locke.

5. Authority; command.

Oh, Sir! I wish he were within my call, or yours.
Denham.

6. A demand; a claim.

Dependence is a perpetual call upon humanity,
and a greater incitement to tenderness and pity,
than any other motive whatsoever.
Addison's Spect.

7. An instrument to call birds.

For those birds or beasts were made from such pipes or calls, as may express the several tones of those creatures, which are represented.
Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

8. Calling; vocation; employment.

Now through the land his cure of souls he stretch'd,
And like a primitive apostle preach'd:
Still cheerful, ever constant to his call;
By many follow'd, lov'd by most, admir'd by all.
Dryden.

9. A nomination.

Upon the sixteenth was held the serjeants feast at Ely place, there being nine serjeants of that call.
Bacon.

CALLAT. } n. f. A trull.
CALLLET. }

He call'd her whore: a beggar, in his drink,
Could not have laid such terms upon his calllet.
Shakespeare.

CALLING. n. f. [from call.]

1. Vocation; profession; trade.

If God has interwoven such a pleasure with our ordinary calling, how much superiour must that be, which arises from the survey of a pious life?
Surely, as much as Christianity is nobler than a trade.
South.

We find ourselves obliged to go on in honest industry in our callings.
Rogers.

I cannot forbear warring you against endeavouring at wit in your sermons; because many of your calling have made themselves ridiculous by attempting it.
Swift.

I left on calling for this idle trade,
No duty broke, no father disobey'd.
Pope.

2. Proper station, or employment.

The Gauls found the Roman senators ready to die with honour in their callings.
Swift.

3. Clafs of persons united by the same employment or profession.

It may be a caution to all Christian churches and magistrates, not to impose celibacy on whole callings, and great multitudes of men or women, who cannot be supposable to have the gift of continence.

Hammond.

4. Divine vocation; invitation or impulse to the true religion.

Give all diligence, to make your calling and election sure.
2 Peter, i. 10.

St. Peter was ignorant of the calling of the Gentiles.
Hakewill on Providence.

CALLIPERS. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology; nor does any thing more probable occur, than that, perhaps, the word is corrupted from clippers, instruments with which any thing is clipped, inclosed, or embraced.] Compasses with bowed shanks.

Callipers measure the distance of any round, cylindrick, conical body; so that when workmen use them, they open the two points to their described width, and turn so much stuff off the intended place, till the two points of the callipers fit just over their work.
Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

CALLO'SITY. n. f. [callosité, Fr.] A kind of swelling without pain, like that of the skin by hard labour; and therefore when wounds, or the edges of ulcers, grow so, they are said to be callous.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet of his patient, as he finds the fibres loosen too much, are too flaccid, and produce funguses; or as they hard-den, and produce callosities; in the first case, wine and spirituous liquors are useful, in the last hurtful.
Arbutnot's on Diet.

CALLOUS. adj. [callus, Lat.]

1. Indurated; hardened; having the pores shut up.

In progress of time, the ulcers became sinuous and callous, with induration of the glands.
Wiseman.

2. Hardened; insensible.

Licentiousness has so long passed for sharpness of wit, and greatness of mind, that the conscience is grown callous.
L'Esrange.

The wretch is drench'd too deep;
His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep:
Fatten'd in vice, so callous and so gross,
He sins, and sees not, senseless of his loss.
Dryden.

CALLOUSNESS. n. f. [from callous.]

1. Hardness; induration of the fibres.

The oftener we use the organs of touching, the more of these scales are formed, and the skin becomes the thicker, and so a callousness grows upon it.
Cheyne.

2. Insensibility.

If they let go their hope of everlasting life with willingness, and entertain final perdition with exultation, ought they not to be esteem'd destitute of common sense, and abandoned to a callousness
and numbness of soul?
Bentley.

CALLOW. adj. Unfledged; naked; without feathers.

Bursting with kindly rapture, forth disclos'd
Their callow young.
Milton.

Then as an eagle, who with pious care
Was beating widely on the wing for prey,
To her now silent airy docs repair,
And finds her callow infants forc'd away.
Dryden.

How in small flights they know to try their young,
And teach the callow child her parent's song.
Prior.

CALLUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. An induration of the fibres.

2. The hard substance by which broken bones are united.

CALM. adj. [calme, Fr. kalm, Dutch.]

t. Quiet; serene; not stormy; not tempestuous; applied to the elements.

Calm was the day, and through the troubling air
Sweet breathing Zephyrus did softly play
A gentle spirit, that lightly did allay
Hot Titan's beams, which then did glisten fair.
Spenser.

So shall the sea be calm unto us.
Jonah.

2. Undisturbed; unruffled: applied to the passions.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be frightening men into truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence, and gentle methods of persuasion.
Atterbury.

The queen her speech with calm attention hears,
Her eyes restrain the silver-streaming tears.
Pope.

CALM. n. f.

1. Serenity; stillness; freedom from violent motion: used of the elements.

It seemeth most agreeable to reason that the waters rather flood in a quiet calm, than that they moved with any raging or overbearing violence.
Raleigh.

Every pilot
Can steer the ship in calms; but he performs
The skilful part, can manage it in storms.
Denham.

Nor God alone in the still calm we find,
He mounts the storm, and walks upon the wind.
Pope.

2. Freedom from disturbance; quiet; repose: applied to the passions.

Great and strange calms usually portend the most violent storms; and therefore, since storms and calms do always follow one another, certainly, of the two, it is much more eligible to have the storm first, and the calm afterwards: since a calm before a storm is commonly a peace of a man's own making; but a calm after a storm, a peace of God's.
South.

To CALM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To still; to quiet.

Neptune we find busy, in the beginning of the Æneis, to calm the tempest raised by Æolus.
Dryden.

2. To pacify; to appease.

Jesus, whose bare word checked the sea, as calm exerts himself in silencing the tempests, and calming the intestine storms, within our breasts.
Decay of Piety.

Those passions, which seem somewhat calmed, may be entirely laid asleep, and never more awakened.
Atterbury.

He will'd to stay,
The sacred rites and hecatombs to pay,
And calm Minerva's wrath.
Pope.

CALMER. n. f. [from calm.] The person or thing which has the power of giving quiet.

Angling was, after tedious study, a rest to his mind, a cheerer of his spirits, a diverter of sadness, a calmer of inquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, a procurer of contentedness.
Walton.

CALMLY. adv. [from calm.]

1. Without storms, or violence; serenely.

In nature, things move violently to their place, and calmly in their place; so virtue in ambition is violent, in authority settled and calm.
Bacon.

His curled brows
Frown on the gentle stream, which calmly flows.
Denham.

2. Without passions; quietly.

The nymph did like the scene appear,
Serenely pleasant, calmly fair;
Soft fell her words, as flew the air.
Prior.

CALMNESS. n. f. [from calm.]

1. Tranquillity; serenity; not storminess.

While the steep horrid roughness of the wood
Strives with the gentle calmness of the flood.
Denham.

2. Mildness; freedom from passion.

Sir, 'tis fit
You have strong party, or defend yourself
By calmness, or by absence: all's in anger.
Shak.

I beg the grace,
You would lay by those terrors of your face;
Till calmness to your eyes you first restore,
I am afraid, and I can beg no more.
Dryden.

CALMLY. adj. [from calm.] Calm; peaceful. Not used.

And now they nigh approached to the fied,
Where as those mermaides dwelt: it was a fill
And calmy bay, on one side sheltered
With the broad shadow of an hoary hill. Fairy Q.
CALOMEL. n. f. [calomelas, a chymical word.] Mercury fix times sublimed.

He repeated lenient purgatives, with calomel, once in three or four days. Wise man's Surgery.

CALORIFICK. adj. [calorificus, Lat.]
That which has the quality of producing heat; heating.

A calorifick principle is either excited within the heated body, or transferred to it, through any medium, from some other. Silver will grow hotter than the liquor it contains. Grew.

CALOTTE. n. f. [French.]
1. A cap or coif, worn as an ecclesiastical ornament in France.

2. [In architecture.] A round cavity or depression, in form of a cap or cup, lathed and plaistered, used to diminish
the rise or elevation of a chapel, cabinet, alcove, &c. Harris.

CALOYERS. n. f. [κάλω.] Monks of the Greek church.
Temp'rate as caloyers in their secret cells.
Madden on Boulter.

CALTRAPS. n. f. [coltrappe, Saxon.]

1. An instrument made with three spikes, so that which way soever it falls to the ground, one of them points upright, to wound horses feet.

The ground about was thick sown with caltraps, which very much incommoded the shoeless Moors.
Dr. Addison's Account of Tangiers.

2. A plant common in France, Spain, and Italy, where it grows among corn, and is very troublesome; for the fruit being armed with strong prickles, run into the feet of the cattle. This is certainly the plant mentioned in Virgil's Georgick, under the name of tribulus. Miller.

TO CALVE. v. n. [from calv.]

1. To bring a calf: spoken of a cow.
When she has calv'd, then set the dam aside,
And for the tender progeny provide. Dryden.

2. It is used metaphorically for any act of bringing forth; and sometimes of men,
by way of reproach.

I would they were barbarians, as they are,
Though in Rome litter'd; not Romans, as they are not,
Though calv'd in the porch o' th' capitol. Shak.
The grassy clods now calv'd; now half appear'd
The tawny lion, pawing to get free
His hinder parts. Milton.

CALVES-SNOUT. [antirrhinum.] A plant.
Snapdragon.

CALVILLE. n. f. [French.] A sort of apple.

TO CALUMNIATE. v. n. [calumniator, Lat.]
To accuse falsely; to charge without just ground.

Beauty, wit, high birth, desert in service,
Love, friendship, charity, are subject all
To envious and calumniating time. Shakespeare.

He mixes truth with falsehood, and has not forgotten the rule of calumniating strongly, that something may remain. Dryden's Fables, Pref.

Do I calumniate? thou ungrateful Vano! —
Perfidious prince! — Is it a calumny
To say that Gwendolen, betroth'd to Yver,
Was by her father first assur'd to Valens?
A. Philips.

TO CALUMNIATE. v. a. To slander.

One trade or art, even those that should be the most liberal, make it their business to disdain and calumniate another. Spratt.

CALUMNIATION. n. f. [from calumniator.]
That which we call calumination, is a malicious and false representation of an enemy's words or actions, to an offensive purpose. Ayliffe.

CALUMNIATOR. n. f. [from calumniator.]
A forger of accusation; a slanderer.

He that would live clear of the envy and hatred of potent calumniators, must lay his finger upon his mouth, and keep his hand out of the ink-pot.
L'Esrange.

At the same time that Virgil was celebrated by Gallus, we know that Bavius and Mævius were his declared foes and calumniators. Addison.

CALUMNIOUS. adj. [from calumny.] Slanderous; falsely reproachful.

Virtue itself escapes not calumnious strokes.
Shakespeare.

With calumnious art
Of counterfeit'd truth, thus held their ears. Milton.

CALUMNY. n. f. [calumnia, Lat.] Slander; false charge; groundless accusation; with against, or sometimes upon,
before the person accused.

Be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow,
Thou shalt not scape calumny. Shakespeare.

It is a very hard calumny upon our soil or climate, to affirm, that so excellent a fruit will not grow here. Temple.

CALX. n. f. [Latin.] Any thing that is rendered reducible to powder by burning.

Gold, that is more dense than lead, resists peremptorily all the dividing power of fire; and will not be reduced into a calx, or lime, by such operation as reduces lead into it. Digby.

CALYCLE. n. f. [calyculus, Lat.] A small bud of a plant. DiG.

CAMA'IEU. n. f. [from camachuita; which name is given by the orientals to the onyx, when, in preparing it, they find another colour.]

1. A stone with various figures and representations of landscapes, formed by nature.

2. [In painting.] A term used where there is only one colour, and where the lights and shadows are of gold, wrought on a golden or azure ground. This kind of work is chiefly used to represent basso relievos. Chambers.

CAMBER. n. f. [See CAMBERING.] A term among workmen.

Camber, a piece of timber cut arching, so as,
a weight considerable being set upon it, it may in length of time be induced to a straight.
Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

CAMBERING. n. f. A word mentioned by Skinner, as peculiar to shipbuilders, who say that a place is cambering, when they mean arch'd. [from chambrière, French.]

CAMBRICK. n. f. [from Cambray, a city in Flanders where it was principally made.] A kind of fine linen, used for ruffles, women's sleeves, and caps.

He hath ribbons of all the colours of the rainbow; inkles, eadises, cantricks, and lawns.
Shakespeare.

Rebecca had, by the use of a looking glass, and by the further use of certain attire, made of cam-brick, upon her head, attained to an evil art. Tatler.

Confed'rate in the cheat, they draw the throng,
And cambric handkerchiefs reward the song. Gay.

CAME. The preterite of To come.

Will all the pack come up, and ev'ry hound
Tore the sad huntsman, grov'ling on the ground.
Addison.

CAM'EL. n. f. [camelus, Lat.] An animal very common in Arabia, Judea, and the neighbouring countries. One sort is large, and full of flesh, and fit to carry burdens of a thousand pounds weight, having one bunch upon its back. Another have two bunches upon their backs, like a natural saddle, and are fit either for burdens, or men to ride on. A third kind is leaner, and of a smaller size, called dromedaries, because of their swiftnes; which are generally used for riding by men of quality.

Camels have large solid feet, but not hard. Camels will continue ten or twelve days without eating or drinking, and keep water a long time in their stomach, for their refreshment. Calmet.

Patient of thirst and toil,
Son of the desert! even the camel feels,
Shot through his wither'd heart, the fiery blast.
Thomson.

CAMELOPARD. n. f. [from camelus and pardus, Lat.] An Abyssinian animal, raller than an elephant, but not so thick.
He is so named, because he has a neck and head like a pard; he is spotted like a pard, but his spots are white upon a red ground. The Italians call him giaraffa. Trevoux.

CAMELOT. } n. f. [from camel.]
CAMLET. }

1. A kind of stuff originally made by a mixture of silk and camels hair; it is now made with wool and silk.
This habit was not of camels skin, nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, grograin, or the like; inasmuch as these stuffs are supposed to be made of the hair of that animal. Brewer's Vulgar Errors.

2. Hair cloth.
Meantime the pastor shears their hoary beards,
And eases of their hair the loaden herds:
Their camelots warm in tents the soldier bold,
And shield the shiv'ring mariner from cold. Dryden.

CAMERA OBSCURA. [Latin.] An optical machine used in a darkened chamber, so that the light coming only thro' a double convex glass, objects exposed to daylight, and opposite to the glass, are represented inverted upon any white matter placed in the focus of the glass.
Martin.

CAMERADE. n. f. [from camera, a chamber, Lat.] One that lodges in the same chamber; a bosom companion. By corruption we now use comrade.

CAMOYS. adj. [canus, Fr.] Flat; level; depressed. It is only used of the nose.

Many Spaniards, of the race of Barbary Moors, though after frequent commixture, have not worn out the camoys nose unto this day.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CAMP. n. f. [camp, Fr. camp, Sax. from campus, Lat.] The order of tents, placed by armies when they keep the field. We use the phrase to pitch a camp, to encamp.

From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,

The hum of either army stilly sounds. Shakespeare.
Next, to secure our camp and naval pow'rs,
Raise an embattled wall with lofty tow'rs. Pope.

TO CAMP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To encamp; to lodge in tents, for hostile purposes.

Had our great palace the capacity
To camp this host, we would all sup together. Shakespeare.

2. To camp; to pitch a camp; to fix tents.

CAMP-FIGHT. n. f. An old word for combat.

For their trial by camp-fight, the accuser was, with the peril of his own body, to prove the accused guilty; and, by offering him his glove or gantlet, to challenge him to this trial. Hakerwill.

CAMPAIGN. } n. f. [campaigne, Fr. camp- CAMPANIA. } pania, Ital.]

1. A large, open, level tract of ground, without hills.

In countries thinly inhabited, and especially in vast campanias, there are few cities, besides what grow by the residence of kings. Temple.

Those grateful groves, that shade the plain,
Where Tiber rolls majestic to the main,
And fatters, as he runs, the fair campaign. Garib.

2. The time for which any army keeps the field, without entering into quarters.

This might have hastened his march, which would have made a fair conclusion of the campaign. Clarendon.

CAMPANIFORM. adj. [of campana, a bell, and forma, Lat.] A term used of flowers, which are in the shape of a bell. Harris.

CAMPANULATE. adj. The same with campaniform.

CAMPESTRAL. adj. [campestris, Lat.] Growing in fields.

The mountain beech is the whitest; but the campestral, or wild beech, is blacker and more durable. Mortimer.

CAMPHIRE TREE. n. f. [camphora, Lat.] There are two sorts of this tree; one is a native of the isle of Borneo, from which the best camphire is taken, which is supposed to be a natural exudation from the tree, produced in such places where the bark of the tree has been wounded or cut. The other sort is a native of Japan, which Dr. Kempfer describes to be a kind of bay, bearing black or purple berries, and from whence the inhabitants prepare their camphire, by making a simple decoction of the root and wood of this tree, cut into small pieces; but this sort of camphire is, in value, eighty or an hundred times less than the true Bornean camphire. Milton.

It is oftener used for the gum of this tree.

CAMPHORATE. adj. [from camphora, Lat.] Impregnated with camphire.

By shaking the saline and camphorate liquors together, we easily confounded them into one high-coloured liquor. Boyle.

And was yclad, for heat of scorching air,
All in silken camus, lilly white,
Purled upon with many a folded plight. Fairy Q.

CAN. n. f. [canne, Sax.] A cup; generally a cup made of metal, or some other matter than earth.

I hate it as an unshid can. Shakespeare.
One tree, the coco, affordeth stuff for housing, clothing, shipping, meat, drink, and can. Grew.
His empty can, with ears half worn away,
Was hung on high, to boast the triumph of the day. Dryden.

TO CAN. v. n. [konnen, Dutch. It is sometimes, though rarely, used alone; but is in constant use as an expression of the potential mood: as, I can do, thou canst do, I could do, thou couldst do. It has no other terminations.]

1. To be able; to have power.

In place there is licence to do good and evil, whereof the latter is a curse: for, in evil, the best condition is not to will; the second, not to can. Bacon.

O, there 's the wonder!
Mecenas and Agrippa, who can most
With Cæsar, are his foes. Dryden.
He can away with no company, whose discourse goes beyond what claret and dissoluteness inspires. Locke.

2. It expresses the potential mood; as, I can do it.

If the can make me blest! the only can:
Empire and wealth, and all she brings beside,
Are but the train and trappings of her love. Dryd.

3. It is distinguished from may, as power from permission; I can do it, it is in my power; I may do it, it is allowed me: but in poetry they are confounded.

4. Can is used of the person with the verb active, where may is used of the thing, with the verb passive; as, I can do it, it may or can be done.

CANAÏLLE. n. f. [French.] The lowest people; the dregs; the lees; the off-scouring of the people: a French term of reproach.

CANDENT. adj. [candens, Lat.] Hot; in the highest degree of heat, next to fusion.

If a wire be heated only at one end, according as that end is cooled upward or downward, it respectively acquires a verticity, as we have declared in wires totally candent. Brown.

CANDICANT. adj. [candicans, Lat.]
Growing white; whitish. Dist.

CANDID. adj. [candidus, Lat.]

1. White. This sense is very rare.

The box receives all black; but, pour'd from thence,

The stones came candid forth, the hue of innocence. Dryden.

2. Free from malice; not desirous to find faults; fair; open; ingenuous.

The import of the discourse will, for the most part, if there be no designed fallacy, sufficiently lead candid and intelligent readers into the true meaning of it. Locke.

A candid judge will read each piece of wit With the same spirit that its author writ. Pope.

CANDIDATE. n. f. [candidatus, Lat.]

1. A competitor; one that solicits, or proposes himself for, something of advancement.

So many candidates there stand for wit,
A place at court is scarce so hard to get.

One would be surpris'd to see so many candidates for glory. Addison.

2. It has generally for before the thing fought.

What could thus high thy rash ambition raise?
Art thou, fond youth, a candidate for praise? Pope.

3. Sometimes of.

Thy first-fruits of poetry were giv'n
To make thyself a welcome inmate there,
While yet a young probationer,
And candidate of heav'n. Dryden.

CANDIDLY. adv. [from candid.] Fairly; without trick; without malice; ingenuously.

We have often desired they would deal candidly with us; for if the matter stuck only there, we would propose that every man should swear, that he is a member of the church of Ireland. Swift.

CANDIDNESS. n. f. [from candid.] Ingenuity; openness of temper; purity of mind.

It presently sees the guilt of a sinful action; and, on the other side, observes the candidness of a man's very principles, and the sincerity of his intentions. Soutb.

CANDY Lion's foot. [catanance, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

CANE. n. f. [canna, Lat.]

1. A kind of strong reed, of which walking staves are made; a walking staff.

Shall I to please another wine sprung mind
Lose all mine own? God hath given me a measure Short of his cane and body: must I find
A pain in that wherein he finds a pleasure? Herbert.
The king thrust the captain from him with his cane;
whereupon he took his leave, and went home. Harvey.

If the poker be out of the way, or broken, stir the fire with your master's cane. Swift.

2. The plant which yields the sugar.

This cane or reed grows plentifully both in the East and West Indies. Other reeds have their skin hard and dry, and their pulp void of juice; but the skin of the sugar cane is soft. It usually grows four or five feet high, and about half an inch in diameter. The stem or stalk is divided by knots a foot and a half apart. At the top it puts forth long green tufted leaves, from the middle of which arise the flower and the seed. They usually plant them in pieces cut a foot and a half below the top of the flower; and they are ordinarily ripe in ten months, at which time they are found quite full of a white succulent marrow, whence is expressed the liquor of which sugar is made. Chambers.

And the sweet liquor on the cane bestow,
From which prepar'd the luscious sugars flow. Blackmere.

3. A lance; a dart made of cane: whence the Spanish inigo de cannas.

Abenamar, thy youth these sports has known,
Of which thy age is now spectator grown;
Judge-like thou sit't, to praise or to arraign
The flying skirmish of the darted cane. Dryden.

4. A reed.

Food may be afforded to bees, by small canes or troughs conveyed into their hives. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To CANE. v. a. [from the noun.] To beat with a walking staff.

CANICULAR. adj. [canicularis, Lat.] Belonging to the dog-star; as, canicular, or dog-days.

In regard to different latitudes, unto some the canicular days are in the winter, as unto such as are under the equinoctial line; for unto them the dog-star ariseth, when the sun is about the tropick of Cancer, which season unto them is winter. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CANINE. adj. [caninus, Lat.]

1. Having the properties of a dog.

A kind of women are made up of canine particles: these are scolds, who imitate the animals out of which they were taken, always busy and barking, and snarl at every one that comes in their way. Addison.

2. Canine hunger, in medicine, is an appetite which cannot be satisfied.

It may occasion an exorbitant appetite of usual things, which they will take in such quantities, till they vomit them up like dogs; from whence it is called canine. Arbuthnot.

CA'NISTER. n. f. [canistrum, Lat.]

1. A small basket.
White lilies in full canisters they bring,
With all the glories of the purple spring. Dryden.
2. A small vessel in which any thing, such as tea or coffee is laid up.

CA'NKER. n. f. [cancer, Lat.] It seems to have the same meaning and original with cancer, but to be accidentally written with a k, when it denotes bad qualities in a less degree; or canker might come from chance, Fr. and cancer from the Latin.

1. A worm that preys upon and destroys fruits.
And loathful idleness he doth detest,
The canker worm of every gentle breast. Spenser.
That which the locust hath left, hath the canker worm eaten. Joel, i. 4.
Yet writers say, as in the sweetest bud
The eating canker dwells; so eating love
Inhabits in the finest wits of all. Shakespeare.
A huffing, shining, flatt'ring, cringing coward,
A canker worm of peace, was rais'd above him. Orway.

2. A fly that preys upon fruits.
There be of flies, caterpillars, and canker flies, and bear flies. Walton's Angler.
3. Any thing that corrupts or consumes.
It is the canker and ruin of many men's estates, which, in process of time, breeds a publick poverty. Bacon.
Sacrilege may prove an eating canker, and a consuming moth, in the estate that we leave them. Atterbury.

- No longer live the cankers of my court;
All to your several states with speed resort;
Waste in wild riot what your land allows,
There ply the early feast, and late carouse. Pope.
4. A kind of wild worthless rose; the dogrose.
To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,
And plant this thorn, this canker, Bolingbroke. Shakespeare.

- Draw a cherry with the leaf, the shaft of a steeple, a single or canker rose. Peacbam.
5. An eating or corroding humour.
I am not glad, that such a sore of time
Should seek a plaister by a contem'd revolt,
And heal th' inveterate canker of one wound
By making many. Shakespeare.

6. Corrosion; virulence.
As with age his body uglier grows,
So his mind with cankers. Shakespeare.
7. A disease in trees. Dict.

To CA'NKER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To grow corrupt: implying something venomous and malignant.
That cunning architect of canker'd guile,
Whom princes late displeasure left in bands,
For falsed letters, and suborned wile. Fairy Queen.
I will lift the down-trod Mortimer
As high i' th' air as this unthankful king,
As this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke. Shakespeare.
Or what the cross dire looking planet smite,
Or hurtful worm with canker'd venom bite. Milt.
To some new climate, or to thy native sky,
Oh friendless and forsaken virtue! fly:
The Indian air is deadly to these grown;
Deceit and canker'd malice rule thy throne. Dryd.
Let envious jealousy and canker'd spite Produce my actions to severest light,
And tax my open day or secret night. Prier.
2. To decay by some corrosive or destructive principle.
Silvering will fully and canker more than gilding;
which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, will be profitable. Bacon.

To CA'NKER. v. a.

1. To corrupt; to corrode.

Restore to God his due in tithe and time:
A tithe purloin'd cankers the whole estate. Herbert.

1. To infect; to pollute.
An honest man will enjoy himself better in a moderate fortune, that is gained with honour and reputation, than in an overgrown estate, that is cankered with the acquisitions of rapine and exactation. Addison.

CA'NKERBIT. particip. adj. [from canker and bit.] Bitten with an envenomed tooth.

Know, thy name is lost,
By treason's tooth baregawa and cankerbit. Shak.

CA'NNABINE, adj. [cannabinus, Lat.]
Hempen. Dict.

CA'NNIBAL. n. f. An anthropophagite; a man-eater.
The cannibals themselves eat no man's flesh of those that die of themselves, but of such as are slain. Bacon.
They were little better than cannibals, who do hunt one another; and he that hath most strength and swiftness, doth eat and devour all his fellows. Davies on Ireland.

It was my hint to speak
Of the cannibals that each other eat;
The anthropophagi. Shakespeare.
The captive cannibal, oppress'd with chains,
Yet braves his foes, reviles, provokes, disdain;
Of nature fierce, untameable, and proud,
He bids defiance to the gaping crowd;
And spent at last, and speechless, as he lies,
With fiery glances mocks their rage, and dies. Graville.

If an eleventh commandment had been given,
Thou shalt not eat human flesh; would not these cannibals have esteem'd it more difficult than all the rest? Bentley.

CA'NNIBALLY. adv. [from cannibal.] In the manner of a cannibal.

Before Corioli, he scotch'd him and notch'd him like a carbonado.—Had he been cannibally given, he might have broil'd and eaten him too. Shakespeare.

CA'NNIPERS. n. f. [corrupted from callipers; which see.]

The square is taken by a pair of cannipers, or two rulers, clapped to the side of a tree, measuring the distance between them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CA'NNON. n. f. [cannon, Fr. from canna, Lat. a pipe, meaning a large tube.]

1. A great gun for battery.
2. A gun larger than can be managed by the hand. They are of so many sizes, that they decrease in the bore from a ball of forty-eight pounds to a ball of five ounces.

As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks,
So they redoubled strokes upon the foe. Shakespeare.
He had left all the cannon he had taken; and now he sent all his great cannon to a garrison. Clarendon.

The making, or price, of these gunpowder instruments, is extremely expensive, as may be easily judged by the weight of their materials; a whole cannon weighing commonly eight thousand pounds; a half cannon, five thousand; a culverin, four thousand five hundred; a demi-culverin, three thousand; which, whether it be in iron or brass, must needs be very costly. Wilkins.

CANNON-BALL. } n. f. [from cannon, CANNON-BULLET. } ball, bullet, and CANNON-SHOT. } shot.] The balls which are shot from great guns.

He reckons those for wounds that are made by bullets, although it be a cannon-shot. Wise-man's Surgery.

Let a cannon-bullet pass through a room, it must strike successively the two sides of the room. Locke.

To CANNONA'DE. v. a. [from cannon.] To play the great guns; to batter or attack with great guns.

Both armies cannonaded all the ensuing day. Tatler.

To CANNONA'DE. v. a. To fire upon with cannon.

CANNONIER. n. f. [from cannon.] The engineer that manages the cannon.
Give me the cups;
And let the kettle to the trumpets speak,
The trumpets to the cannonier without,
The cannons to the heav'ns, the heav'ns to earth. Shakespeare.

A third was a most excellent cannonier, whose good skill did much endamage the forces of the king. Hayward.

CA'NNOT. A word compounded of can and not: noting inability.

I cannot but believe many a child can tell twenty, long before he has any idea of infinity at all. Locke.

CA'NOA. } n. f. A boat made by cutting CANOE. } the trunk of a tree into a hollow vessel.

Others made rafts of wood; others devised the boat of one tree, called the canoa, which the Gauls, upon the Rhone, used in assisting the transportation of Hannibal's army. Raleigh.

In a war against Semiramis, they had four thousand monoxyla, or canoes of one piece of timber. Arbutnot on Coins.

CA'NON. n. f. [κάνων.]

1. A rule; a law.
The truth is, they are rules and canons of that law, which is written in all men's hearts; the church had for ever, no less than now, stood bound to observe them, whether the apostle had mentioned them, or not. Hooker.
His books are almost the very canon to judge both doctrine and discipline by. Hooker.
Religious canons, civil laws, are cruel; Then what should war be? Shakespeare.

Canons in logic are such as these: every part of a division, singly taken, must contain less than the whole; and a definition must be peculiar and proper to the thing defined. Watts.

2. The laws made by ecclesiastical councils.
Canon law is that law, which is made and ordained in a general council, or provincial synod, of the church. Ayliffe.
These were looked on as lapsed persons, and great severities of penance were prescribed them by the canons of Ancyra. Stillingfleet.

3. The books of Holy Scripture; or the great rule.
Canon also denotes those books of Scripture, which are received as inspired and canonical, to distinguish them from either profane, apocryphal, or disputed books. Thus we say, that Genesis is part of the sacred canon of the Scripture. Ayliffe.

4. A dignitary in cathedral churches.
For deans and canons, or prebends, of cathedral churches, they were of great use in the church; they were to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, and for his government, in causes ecclesiastical. Bacon.

Swift much admires the place and air,
And longs to be a canon there.
A canon! that's a place too mean:
No, doctor, you shall be a dean;
Two dozen canons round your stall,
And you the tyrant o'er them all. Swift.

5. Canons Regular. Such as are placed in monasteries. Ayliffe.
6. Canons Secular. Lay canons, who have been, as a mark of honour, admitted into some chapters.

7. [Among chirurgeons.] An instrument used in sewing up wounds. Dict.

A goodly person, and could manage fair
His stubborn steed with canon bit,
Who under him did trample as the air. Spenser.

CANONESS. n. f. [canonissa, low Lat.]

There are, in popish countries, women they call secular canonesses, living after the example of secular canons. Ayliffe.

CANONICAL. adj. [canonicus, low Lat.]

1. According to the canon.

2. Constituting the canon.

Public readings there are of books and writings, not canonical, whereby the church doth also preach, or openly make known, the doctrine of virtuous conversation. Hooker.

No such book was found amongst those canonical scriptures. Raleigh.

3. Regular; stated; fixed by ecclesiastical laws.

Seven times in a day do I praise thee, said David: from this definite number some ages of the church took their pattern for their canonical hours. Taylor.

4. Spiritual; ecclesiastical; relating to the church.

York anciently had a metropolitan jurisdiction over all the bishops of Scotland, from whom they had their consecration, and to whom they swore canonical obedience. Ayliffe.

CANONICALLY. adv. [from canonical.]

In a manner agreeable to the canon.
It is a known story of the friar, who, on a fasting day, bid his canon be carp, and then very canonically eat it. Government of the Tongue.

CANONICALNESS. n. f. [from canonical.]

The quality of being canonical.

CANONIST. n. f. [from canon.] A man versed in the ecclesiastical laws; a professor of the canon law.

John Fisher, bishop of Rochester, when the king would have translated him from that poor bishoprick, he refused, saying, he would not forsake his poor little old wife; thinking of the fifteenth canon of the Nicene council, and that of the canonists, Matrimonium inter episcopum & ecclesiam esse contractum, &c. Camden's Remains.

Of whose strange crimes no canonist can tell
In what commandment's large contents they dwell. Pope.

CANONIZATION. n. f. [from canonize.]

The act of declaring any man a saint.

It is very suspicious, that the interests of particular families, or churches, have too great a sway in canonizations. Addison.

To CANONIZE. v. a. [from canon, to put into the canon, or rule for observing festivals.] To declare any man a saint.

The king, desirous to bring into the house of Lancaster celestial honour, became suitor to pope Julius, to canonize king Henry VI. for a saint. Bacon.

By those hymns all shall approve
Us canoniz'd for love. Donne.

They have a pope too, who hath the chief care of religion, and of canonizing whom he thinks fit, and thence have the honour of saints. Stillingfleet.

CANONRY. } n. f. [from canon.] An

CANONSHIP. } ecclesiastical benefice in some cathedral or collegiate church, which has a prebend, or a stated allowance out of the revenues of such church, commonly annexed to it. Ayliffe.

CANOPIED. adj. [from canopy.] Covered with a canopy.

I sat me down to watch upon a bank,
With ivy canopy'd, and interwove
With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton.

CANOPIY. n. f. [canopeum, low Lat.] A covering of state over a throne or bed; a covering spread over the head.

She is there brought unto a paled green,
And placed under a stately canopy,
The warlike feats of both those knights to see. Fairy Queen.

Now spread the night her spangled canopy,
And summon'd every restless eye to sleep. Fairfax.
Nor will the raging fever's fire abate
With golden canopies, and beds of state. Dryden.

To CANOPY. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a canopy.

The birch, the myrtle, and the bay,
Like friends did all embrace;
And their large branches did display
To canopy the place. Dryden.

CANOROUS. adj. [canorus, Lat.] Musical; tuneful.

Birds that are most canorous, and whose notes we most commend, are of little throats, and short. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CANT. n. f. [probably from cantus, Lat. implying the odd tone of voice used by vagrants; but imagined by some to be corrupted from quaint.]

1. A corrupt dialect used by beggars and vagabonds.

2. A particular form of speaking, peculiar to some certain class or body of men.

I write not always in the proper terms of navigation, land service, or in the cant of any profession. Dryden.

If we would trace out the original of that flagrant and avowed impiety, which has prevailed amongst us for some years, we should find, that it owes its rise to that cant and hypocrisy, which had taken possession of the people's minds in the times of the great rebellion. Addison's Freeholder.

Astrologers, with an old paltry cant, and a few pot-hooks for planets, to amuse the vulgar, have too long been suffered to abuse the world.

Swift's Predilections for the Year 1701.
A few general rules, with a certain cant of words, has sometimes set up an illiterate heavy writer for a most judicious and formidable critick. Addison's Spectator.

3. A whining pretension to goodness, in formal and affected terms.

Of promise prodigal, while pow'r you want,
And preaching in the self-denying cant.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

4. Barbarous jargon.

The affectation of some late authors, to introduce and multiply cant words, is the most ruinous corruption in any language. Swift.

5. Auction.

Numbers of these tenants, or their descendants, are now offering to sell their leases by cant, even those which were for lives. Swift.

To CANT. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk in the jargon of particular professions; or in any kind of formal, affected language; or with a peculiar and studied tone of voice.

Men cant about materia and forma; hunt chimeras by rules of art, or dress up ignorance in words of bulk or sound, which may stop up the mouth of enquiry. Clenville.

That uncouth affected garb of speech, or canting language rather, if I may so call it, which they have of late taken up, is the signal distinction and characteristic note of that, which, in that their new language, they call the godly party. Sanderfon.

The busy, subtle serpents of the law
Did first my mind from true obedience draw;
While I did limits to the king prescribe,
And took for oracles that canting tribe. Roscommon.

Unskill'd in schemes by planets to foreknow,
Like canting rascals, how the wars will go. Dryden's Juvenal.

CANTATA. n. f. [Ital.] A song.

CANTA'TION. n. f. [from canto, Lat.] The act of singing.

CAN'TER. n. f. [from cant.] A term of reproach for hypocrites, who talk formally of religion, without obeying it.

CANTERBURY BELLS. See BELFLOWER.

CANTLE. n. f. [hant, Dutch, a corner; eschantillon, Fr. a piece.] A piece with corners. Skinnet.

See how this river comes, me cranking in,
And cuts me from the best of all my land
A huge half-moon, a monstrous cantle out. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

To CANTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in pieces.

For four times talking, if one piece thou take,
That must be cantled, and the judge go snack. Dryden's Juvenal.

CANTLET. n. f. [from cantle.] A piece; a fragment.

Nor shield nor armour can their force oppose;
Huge cantlets of his buckler strew the ground,
And no defence in his lord's arms is found. Dryden.

CANTO. n. f. [Ital.] A book, or section, of a poem.

Why, what would you do? —

—Make a willow cabin at your gate,
And call upon my soul within the house;
Write loyal cantos of contemned love.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

CANTON. n. f.

1. A small parcel, or division of land.

Only that little canton of land, called the English pale, containing four small shires, did maintain a bordering war with the Irish, and retain the form of English government. Davies.

2. A small community, or clan.

The same is the case of rovers by land; such, as yet, are some cantons in Arabia, and some petty kings of the mountains adjacent to straits and ways.

Bacon's Holy War.

To CANTON. v. a. [from the noun.] To divide into little parts.

Families shall sit all subjection to him, and canton his empire into less governments for themselves.

Locke.

It would certainly be for the good of mankind, to have all the mighty empires and monarchies of the world *canton*ed out into petty states and principalities.

Addison on Italy.

The late king of Spain, reckoning it an indignity to have his territories *canton*ed out into parcels by other princes, during his own life, and without his consent, rather chose to bequeath the monarchy entire to a younger son of France.

Swift.

They canton out to themselves a little province in the intellectual world; where they fancy the light shines, and all the rest is in darkness.

Watts on the Mind.

To CANTONIZE. v. a. [from canton.] To parcel out into small divisions.

Thus was all Ireland cantonized among ten persons of the English nation.

Davies on Ireland.

The whole forest was in a manner cantonized amongst a very few in number, of whom some had regal rights.

Howel.

CANTRED. n. f. The same in Wales as an hundred in England. For cantred, in the British language, signifieth an hundred.

Cowell.

The king grants to him all that province, reserving only the city of Dublin, and the cantreds next adjoining, with the maritime towns.

Davies on Ireland.

CANVASS. n. f. [canवास, Fr. cannabis, Lat. hemp.]

1. A kind of linen cloth woven for several uses, as sails, painting cloths, tents.

The master commanded forthwith to set on all the canvasses they could, and fly homeward.

Sidney.

And eke the pens, that dy his pinions bind,
Were like main yards with flying canvass lin'd.

Spenser.

Their canvass castles up they quickly rear,
And buil'd a city in an hour's space.

Fairfax.

Where'er thy navy spreads her canvass wings,
Homage to thee, and peace to all, she brings.

Waller.

With such kind passion hastes the prince to fight,
And spreads his flying canvass to the sound;

Flim whom no danger, were he there, could fright,
Now absent, every little noise can wound.

Dryden.

Thou, Kneiler, long with noble pride,
The foremost of thy art, hast vied
With nature in a generous strife,
And touch'd the canvass into life.

Addison.

2. The act of sifting voices, or trying them previously to the decisive act of voting. [from canvass, as it signifies a sieve.]

There be that can pack cards, and yet cannot play well: so there are some that are good in canvasses and factions, that are otherwise weak men.

Bacon.

To CANVASS. v. a. [Skinner derives it from cannabasser, Fr. to beat hemp; which being a very laborious employment, it is used to signify, to search diligently into.]

1. To sift; to examine. [from canvass, a straining cloth.]

I have made careful search on all hands, and *canvass*ed the matter with all possible diligence.

Woodward.

2. To debate; to discuss.

The curs discover'd a raw hide in the bottom of a river, and laid their heads together how to come at it: they *canvass*ed the matter one way and another, and concluded, that the way to get it, was to drink their way to it.

L'Estrange.

To CANVASS. v. n. To solicit; to try votes previously to the decisive act.

Elizabeth being to resolve, upon an officer, and being, by some that *canvass*ed for others, put in some doubt of that person she meant to advance, said, she was like one with a lantern seeking a man.

Bacon.

This crime of canvassing, or soliciting, for church preferment, is, by the canon law, called simony.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

CANY. adj. [from cane.]

There remained, in the capacity of the exhausted cylinder, store of little rooms, or spaces, empty or devoid of air.

Boyle.

3. The force or power of the mind.

No intellectual creature is able, by capacity, to do that which nature doth without capacity and knowledge.

Hooker.

In spiritual natures, so much as there is of desire, so much there is also of capacity to receive. I do not say, there is always a capacity to receive the very thing they desire, for that may be impossible.

Scrub.

An heroic poem requires the accomplishment of some extraordinary undertaking; which requires the duty of a soldier, and the capacity and prudence of a general.

Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

4. Power; ability.

Since the world's wide frame does not include
A cause with such capacities endued,
Some other cause o'er nature must preside.

Blackm.

5. State; condition; character.

A miraculous revolution, reducing many from the head of a triumphant rebellion to their old condition of mafons, smiths, and carpenters; that, in this capacity, they might repair what, as colonels and captains, they had ruined and defaced.

South.

You desire my thoughts as a friend, and not as a member of parliament; they are the same in both capacities.

Swift.

CAPA'RISON. n. f. [caparazon, a great cloke, Span.] A horse-cloke, or a sort of cover for a horse, which is spread over his furniture.

Farrier's Dict.

Tilting furniture, emblazon'd shields,
Impresses quaint, caparisons, and steeds,

Bases, and tinsel trappings, gorgeous knights,
At joust and tournament.

We, that are true lovers, run into strange capers; but as all is mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly.

Shakespeare's As you like it.

Flimnap, the treasurer, is allowed to cut a capere, on the strait rope, at least an inch higher than any other lord in the whole empire.

Swift's Gul. Trav.

CAPER. n. f. [capparis, Lat.] An acid pickle. See CAPER BUSH.

We invent new sauces and pickles, which resemble the animal ferment in taste and virtue, as mangoes, olives, and capers.

Floyer on the Humours.

CAPER BUSH. n. f. [capparis, Lat.]

The fruit is fleshy, and shaped like a pear. This plant grows in the South of France, in Spain, and in Italy, upon old walls and buildings; and the buds of the flowers, before they are open, are pickled for eating.

Miller.

To CAPER. v. n. [from the noun.]

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Several cases deserve greater punishment than many crimes that are capital among us.

Swift.

3. That which affects life.

In capital causes, wherein but one man's life is in question, the evidence ought to be clear; much more in a judgment upon a war, which is capital to thousands.

Bacon.

4. Chief; principal.

I will, out of that infinite number, reckon but some that are most capital, and commonly occurment both in the life and conditions of private men.

Spenser on Ireland.

As to swerve in the least points, is error; so the capital enemies thereof God hateth, as his deadly foes, aliens, and, without repentance, children of endless perdition.

Hooker.

They do, in themselves, tend to confirm the truth of a capital article in religion.

Asterbury.

5. Chief; metropolitan.

spears,

The bird of conquest her chief feather cast. Fairf.
Of plants some are green all winter, others cast their leaves. Bacon's Natural History.

The casting of the skin i, by the ancients, compared to the breaking of the secundine, or cawl, but not rightly; for that were to make every casting of the skin a new birth; and besides, the secundine is but a general cover, not shaped according to the parts, but the skin is shaped according to the parts. The creatures that cast the skin, are the snake, the viper, the grasshopper, the lizard, the silkworm, &c. Bacon.

O fertile head, which every year
Could fetch a crop of wonders bear!
Which might it never have been cast,
Each year's growth added to the last,

The lofty branches had soppy'd
The earth's bold sons prodigious pride. Waller.
The waving harvest bends beneath his blast,
The forest shakes, the groves their honours cast.
Dryden.

From hence, my lord, and love, I thus conclude,
That though my homely ancestors were rude,
Mean as I am, yet may I have the grace
To make you father of a generous race:
And noble then am I, when I begin,
In virtue cloth'd, to cast the rags of sin. Dryden.
The ladies have been in a kind of moulting season, having cast great quantities of ribbon and cambric, and reduced the human figure to the beautiful globular form. Addison

24. To lay aside, as fit to be used or worn no longer.

So may cast poets write; there's no pretension
To argue loss of wit, from loss of pension. Dryden.

And orient science, at a birth begun. Pope's Dun.
He then led me to the rock, and, placing me on the top of it, Cast thy eyes eastward, said he, and tell me what thou seest. Addison.

32. To found; to form by running in a mould.

When any such curious work of silver is to be cast, as requires that the impression of hairs, or very slender lines, be taken off by the metal, it is not enough that the silver be barely melted, but it must be kept a considerable while in a strong fusion.
Boyle.

How to build ships, and dreadful ordnance cast, Instruct the artist. Waller.

The father's grief restrain'd his art;
He twice essay'd to cast his son in gold,
Twice from his hands he dropp'd the forming mould. Dryden.

33. To melt metal into figures.

You'll crowd, he might reflect, yon joyful crowd
With restless rage would pull my statue down,
And cast the brass away to his renown. Prior.

This was but as a refiner's fire, to purge out the dross, and then cast the mass again into a new mould. Burnet's Theory.

34. To model; to form by rule.

We may take a quarter of a mile for the common measure of the depth of the sea, if it were cast into a channel of an equal depth every where.

Yet all these dreadful deeds, this deadly fray,
A cast of dreadful lust will soon allay.
Dryd. Virg.
3. State of any thing cast or thrown.
In his own instance of casting ambs-ace, though it partake more of contingency than of freedom; supposing the posture of the party's hand, who did throw the dice; supposing the figure of the table, and of the dice themselves; supposing the measure of force applied, and supposing all other things which did concur to the production of that cast, to be the very same they were, there is no doubt but, in this case, the cast is necessary.
Bramhall's Answer to Hobbes.
Plato compares life to a game at tables; but what cast we shall have is not in our power; and to manage it well, that is.
Norris.
4. Manner of throwing.
Some harrow their ground over, and sow wheat or rye on it with a broad cast; some only with a single cast, and some with a double.

CATCHPOLL. n. f. [from catch and poll.]

A serjeant; a bumbailiff.
Catchpoll, though now it be used as a word of contempt, yet, in ancient times, it seems to have been used without reproach, for such as we now call serjeants of the mace, or any other that uses to arrest men upon any cause. Corwall.

They call all temporal businesses under-sheriffries, as if they were but matters for under-sheriffs and catchpolls; though many times those under-sheriffries do more good than their high speculations. Burton's Essays.

Another monster,
Sullen of aspect, by the vulgar call'd
A catchpoll, whose polluted hands the gods
With force incredible and magick charms
Ere have endued, if he his ample palm
Should haply on ill-fated shoulder lay
Of debtor. Philips.

mine; to try by interrogatories.

Why then I suck my teeth, and catechise
My piked man of countries. Shakespeare's King John.
There flies about a strange report,
Of some express arriv'd at court;
I'm stopp'd by all the fools I meet,
And catechis'd in every street. Swift.

CATECHISER. n. f. [from To catechise.]
One who catechises.

CATECHISM. n. f. [from κατηχησάω.] A form of instruction by means of questions and answers, concerning religion.

Ways of teaching there have been sundry always usual in God's church; for the first introduction of youth to the knowledge of God, the Jews even till this day have their catechisms. Hooker.

He had no catechism but the creation, needed no study but reflection, and read no book but the volume of the world. South.

CATECHIST. n. f. [κατηχηστής.] One whose charge is to instruct by questions, or to question the uninstructed concerning religion.

None of years and knowledge was admitted, who had not been instructed by the catechist in this foundation, which the catechist received from the bishop. Hammond's Fundamentals.

CATECHUMEN. n. f. [κατηχούμενος.] One who is yet in the first rudiments of Christianity; the lowest order of Christians

ployed to select and buy in provisions for the family; the providore or pur-veyor.

Let no scent offensive the chamber infest;
Let fancy, not cost, prepare all our dishes;
Let the caterer mind the taste of each guest,
And the cook in his dressing comply with their wishes. Ben Jonson's Tavern Academy.

He made the greedy ravens to be Elias's caterers, and bring him food. King Charles.

Seldom shall one see in cities or courts that athletick vigour, which is seen in poor houses, where nature is their cook, and necessity their caterer. South.

CATERESS. n. f. [from cater.] A woman employed to cater, or provide victuals.

Imposter! do not charge innocent nature,
As if she would her children should be riotous
With her abundance: she, good cateress, Means her provision only to the good. Milton.

CATERPILLAR.

CATERPILLAR. n. f. [This word Skinner and Minsbew are inclined to derive from chatte peluse, a weasel. It seems easily deducible from cates, food, and pillar, Fr. to rob; the animal that eats up the fruits of the earth.]

1. A worm which, when it gets wings, is sustained by leaves and fruits.

The caterpillar breedeth of dew and leaves; for we see infinite caterpillars breed upon trees and hedges, by which the leaves of the trees or hedges are consumed.

Bacon.

After is drawn with a pot pouring forth water, with which descend grasshoppers, caterpillars, and creatures bred by moisture. Peacok on Drawing.

2. To make any offensive or odious noise.

What a caterwauling do you keep here! If my lady has not called up her steward Malvolio, and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Was no dispute between

The caterwauling brethren? Hudibras.

CATES. n. f. [of uncertain etymology: Skinner imagines it may be corrupted from delicate; which is not likely, because Junius observes, that the Dutch have kater in the same sense with our cater. It has no singular.] Viands; food; dish of meat: generally employed to signify nice and luxurious food.

The fair acceptance, Sir, creates

The entertainment perfect, not the cates.

Ben Jonson.

O wasteful riot, never well content

With low priz'd fare; hunger ambitious

Of cates by land and sea far fetched and sent.

Raleigh.

Alas, how simple to these cates,

Was that crude apple that diverted Eve!

Paradise Lost.

They, by th' alluring odour drawn, in haste

Fly to the dulcet cates, and crowding sip

Their palatable bane.

Phillips.

With costly cates she stain'd her frugal board,
Then with ill-gotten wealth she bought a lord.

Arbutnot.

CATHARPINGS. n. f. Small ropes in a ship, running in little blocks from one side of the shrouds to the other, near the deck: they belong only to the main shrouds; and their use is to force the shrouds tight, for the ease and safety of the masts, when the ship rolls. Harris.

CATHARTICAL. } adj. [καθαρτικός,] Purg-

CATHARTICK. } ing medicines. The vermicular or peristaltick motion of the guts continually helps on their contents, from the pylorus to the rectum; and every irritation either quickens that motion in its natural order, or occasions some little inversions in it. In both, what but slightly adheres to the coats will be loosened, and they will be more agitated, and thus rendered more fluid. By this only it is manifest, how a cathartic hastens and increases the discharges by stool; but where the force of the stimulus is great, all the appendages of the bowels, and all the viscera in the abdomen, will be twitched; by which a great deal will be drained back into the intestines, and made a part of what they discharge.

Quincy.

Quicksilver precipitated either with gold, or without addition, into a powder, is wont to be strongly enough catbartial, though the chymists have not proved, that either gold or mercury hath any salt, much less any that is purgative.

Boyle's Sceptical Chymist.

Lustrations and *catbartial*s of the mind were sought for, and all endeavour used to calm and regulate the fury of the passions. Decay of Piety.

The piercing causticks ply their spiteful power, Emeticks ranch, and keen *catbartial*s scour. Gorb.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CAUSE. n. f. [causa, Lat.]

1. That which produces or effects any thing; the efficient.

The wise and learned, amongst the very heathens themselves, have all acknowledged some first causes, whereupon originally the being of all things dependeth; neither have they otherwise spoken of that cause, than as an agent, which, knowing what and why it worketh, observeth, in working, a most exact order or law.

Hooker.

Butterflies, and other flies, revive easily when they seem dead, being brought to the sun or fire; the cause whereof is the diffusion of the vital spirit, and the dilating of it by a little heat.

Darwin's Natural History.

Cause is a substance exerting its power into act, to make one thing begin to be.

Locke.

2. The reason; motive to any thing.

The rest shall bear some other sight,
As cause will be obey'd.

Shakespeare.

So great, so constant, and so general a practice, must needs have not only a cause, but also a great, a constant, and a general cause, every way commensurate to such an effect.

South.

Thus, royal Sir! to see you landed here,
Was cause enough of triumph for a year. Dryden.
Æneas wond'ring stood: then ask'd the causes,
Which to the stream the crowding people draws. Dryden.

Even he,

Lamenting that there had cause of enmity,
Will often wish fate had ordain'd you friends.

Rowe.

3. Reason of debate; subject of litigation.

O madness of discourse,

That cause sets up with and against thyself!

Ere to thy cause, and thee, my heart inclin'd,
Or love to party had seduc'd my mind.

Tickell.

To CAUSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To effect as an agent; to produce.

Never was man whose apprehensions are sober, and by a pensive inspection advised, but hath found by an irresistible necessity, one everlasting being, all for ever causing, and all for ever sustaining.

Raleigh.

It is necessary in such a chain of causes to ascend to and terminate in some first, which should be the original of motion, and the cause of all other things; but itself be caused by none.

South.

She weeping ask'd, in these her blooming years,
What unforeseen misfortune caus'd her care,
To loath her life, and languish in despair?

Dryden's Fables.

Things that move so swift as not to affect the senses distinctly, and so cause not any train of ideas in the mind, are not perceived to move.

Locke.

CA'USELESSLY. adv. [from causeless.] Without cause; without reason.

Human laws are not to be broken with scandal, nor at all without reason; for he that does it causelessly, is a despiser of the law, and undervalues its authority.

Taylor's Holy Living.

CA'USELESS. adj. [from cause.]

1. Having no cause; original in itself.

Reach th' Almighty's sacred throne,
And make his causeless pow'r, the cause of all things, known.

Blackmore's Creation.

2. Wanting just ground or motive.

Yet is my truth yplight,
And love avow'd to other lady late,
That, to remove the same, I have no might;
To change love causeless, is reproach to warlike knight.

Spenser's Fairy Queen.

And me and mine threats not with war but death;
Thus causeless hatred endless is unceath.

Fairfax.

The causeless dislike, which others have conceived, is no sufficient reason for us to forbear in any place.

Hooker.

As women yet who apprehend
Some sudden cause of causeless fear,
Although that seeming cause take end,
A shaking through their limbs they find.

Waller.

Alas! my fears are causeless and ungrounded,
Fagastick dreams, and melancholy fumes.

Dent.

CA'USER. n. f. [from causo.] He that causes; the agent by which an effect is produced.

His whole oration stood upon a short narration, what was the causer of this metamorphosis.

Sidney.

Is not the causer of these timeless deaths
As blameful as the executioner?

Whose seats the weary traveller repose. Pope.
CAUSTICAL. } adj. [καυστικός.] Epithets CAUSTICK. } of medicaments which destroy the texture of the part to which they are applied, and eat it away, or burn it into an eschar, which they do by extreme minuteness, asperity, and quantity of motion, that, like those of fire itself, destroy the texture of the solids, and change what they are applied to into a substance like burnt flesh;
which, in a little time, with detergent dressing, falls quite off, and leaves a vacuity in the part. Quincy.

If extirpation be safe, the best way will be by caustical medicines, or escharoticks. Wiseman's Surg.
I proposed eradicating by escharoticks, and began with a caustick stone. Wiseman's Surgery.

Air too hot, cold, and moist, abounding perhaps with caustick, astringent, and coagulating particles. Arbutnot.

CAUSTICK. n. f. A burning application.
It was a tenderness to mankind, that introduced corrosives and causticks, which are indeed but artificial fires. Temple.

The virtue of his will. Shakespeare.

CAUTELOUS. adj. [cauteleux, Fr.]
1. Cautious; wary; provident. Not in use.

Palladio doth wish, like a cautelous artisan, that the inward walls might bear some good share in the burden. Wotton.

2. Wily; cunning; treacherous.

Of themselves, for the most part, they are so cautelous and wily headed, especially being men of so small experience and practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilties and sly shifts. Spenser on Ireland.

Your son
Will or exceed the common, or be caught
With cautelous baits and practice. Shakespeare.

CAUTELOUSLY. adv. [from cautelous.]

1. Cunningly; slyly; treacherously. Not in use.

All pretorian courts, if any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of a retirement, and the other party doth cautelously get the start and advantage; yet they will set back all things in statu quo prius. Bacon's War with Spain.

2. Cautiously; warily.

The Jews, not resolved of the scistica side of Jacob, do cautelously, in their diet, abstain from both. Brown.

CAUTERIZAT'ION. n. f. [from cauterize.]
The act of burning flesh with hot irons, or caustic medicaments.

They require, after cauterization, no such bandage, as that thereby you need to fear interception of the spirits. Wiseman.

To CAUTERIZE. v. a. [cauteriser, Fr.] To burn with the cautery.

For each true word a blister, and each false
Be cauterizing to the root of th' tongue,
Consuming it with speaking. Shakespeare.

No marvel though cantharides have such a corrosive and cauterizing quality; for there is not one other of the insects, but is bread of a diller matter.
Bacon's Natural History.

The design of the cautery is to prevent the canal from closing; but the operators confess, that, in persons cauterized, the tears trickle down ever after. Sharp's Surgery.

CAUTERY. n. f. [καύω, uro.]

Cautery is either actual or potential; the first is burning by a hot iron, and the latter with caustick medicines. The actual cautery is generally used to stop mortification, by burning the dead parts to the quick; or to stop the effusion of blood, by searing up the vessels. Quincy.

In heat of fight it will be necessary to have your actual cautery always ready; for that will secure the bleeding arteries in a moment. Wiseman's Surg.

CAUTION. n. f. [caution, Fr. cautio, Lat.]

1. Prudence, as it respects danger; foresight; provident care; wariness against evil.

2. Security for.

Such conditions, and cautions of the condition, as might assure with as much assurance as worldly matters bear. Sidney.

The Cedar, upon this new acquess, gave him part of Baccharia for caution for his disbursements.
Howel.

The parliament would yet give his majesty sufficient caution that the war should be prosecuted.
Clarendon.

He that objects any crime, ought to give caution, by the means of sureties, that he will persevere in the prosecution of such crimes. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. Provision or security against.

In despite of all the rules and cautions of government, the most dangerous and mortal of vices will come off. L'Estrange.

4. Provisionary precept.

Attention to the forementioned symptoms affords the best cautions and rules of diet, by way of prevention. Arbutnot.

5. Warning.

To CAUTION. v. a. [from the noun.]
To warn; to give notice of a danger.

How shall our thought avoid the various snare?
Or wisdom to our caution'd soul declare
The different shapes thou pleasest to employ,
When bent to hurt, and certain to destroy? Prior.

You caution'd me against their charms,
But never gave me equal arms. Swift.

CAUTIONARY. adj. [from caution.] Given as a pledge, or in security.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it. Soutberne.
Is there no security for the island of Britain?
Has the enemy no cautionary towns, and sea-ports to give us for securing trade? Swift.

CAUTIOUS. adj. [from cautus, Lat.]
Wary; watchful.

Be cautious of him; for he is sometimes an inconstant lover, because he hath a great advantage.
Swift.

CAUTIOUSLY. adv. [from cautious.] In an attentive, wary manner; warily.

They know how fickle common lovers are:
Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
For few there are but have been once deceiv'd.
Dryden.

CAUTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from cautious.]
Watchfulness; vigilance; circumspection; provident care; prudence with respect to danger.

I could not but approve their generous constancy and cautiousness. King Charles.
We should always act with great cautiousness and circumspection, in points where it is not impossible that we may be deceived. Addison.

To CAW. v. n. [taken from the sound.]
To cry as the rook, raven, or crow.

Ruffet-pated choughs, many in sort,
Rising and cawing at the gun's report. Shakesp.

A walk of aged elms, so very high, that the rooks and crows upon the tops seem to be cawing in another region. Addison.

The rook, who high amid the boughs,
In early spring, his airy city builds,
And ceaseless caws. Thomson's Spring.

To CEASE. v. n. [cesser, Fr. cesso, Lat.]

1. To leave off; to stop; to give over; to desist: with from before a noun.

The lives of all, who cease from combat, spare;
My brother's be your most peculiar care. Dryden.

2. To fail; to be extinct; to pass away.

The poor man shall never cease out of the land.
Deuteronomy.

The soul being removed, the faculties and operations of life, sense, and intellection, cease from that mole corporea, and are no longer in it.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. To be at an end.

But now the wonder ceases, since I see
She kept them only, Tityrus, for thee. Dryden.

4. To rest.

The ministers of Christ have ceased from their labours. Spratt.

To CEASE. v. a. To put a stop to; to put an end to.

Importune him for monies: he not ceas'd
With slight deoial. Shakespeare.

You may sooner, by imagination, quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower, than to make him stand still. Bacon's Natural History.

Cease then this impious rage. Milton.
But he, her fears to cease,
Sent down the meek-eyed peace. Milton.

The discord is complete, nor can they cease
The dire debate, nor yet command the peace. Dryden.

CEASE. n. f. [from the verb.] Extinction;
failure: perhaps for decease.

The cease of majesty
Dies not alone, but, like a gulph, withdraws
What's near it with it. Shakespeare.

CEASELESS. adj. [from cease.] Incessant;
perpetual; continual; without pause;
without stop; without end.

My guideless blood must quench the ceaseless fire,
On which my endless tears were bootless spent.
Fairfax.

All these with ceaseless praise his works behold,
Both day and night. Milton.

Like an oak
That stands secure, though all the winds employ
Their ceaseless roar; and only sheds its leaves,
Or mast, which the revolving spring restores.
Philips.

CECITY. n. f. [caecitas, Lat.] Blindness;
privation of sight.

They are not blind, nor yet distinctly see; there is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecuteny;
they have sight enough to discern the light, though not perhaps to distinguish objects or colours.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.
CECUTIENCY. n. f. [caecutio, Lat.] Tendency to blindness; cloudiness of sight.

There is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecuteny. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CE'D'R. n. f. [cedrus, Lat.] A tree.

It is evergreen; the leaves are much narrower than those of the pine tree, and many of them produced out of one tubercle, resembling a painter's pencil; it hath male flowers, or katkins, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree.
The seeds are produced in large cones, squamose and turbinated. The extension of the branches is very regular in cedar trees; the ends of the shoots declining, and thereby showing their upper surface, which is constantly clothed with green leaves, so regularly, as to appear at a distance like a green carpet, and, in waving about, make an agreeable prospect. It is surprising that this tree has not been more cultivated in England; for it would be a great ornament to barren bleak mountains, even in Scotland, where few other trees would grow; it being a native of Mount Libanus, where the snow continues

finues most part of the year. Maundrel, in his Travels, says, he measured one of the largest cedars on Mount Libanus, and found it to be twelve yards six inches in circumference, and found. At about five or six yards from the ground, it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree. The wood of this famous tree is accounted proof against the putrefaction of animal bodies. The saw-dust is thought to be one of the secrets used by the mountebanks, who pretend to have the embalming mystery. This wood is also said to yield an oil, which is famous for preserving books and writings; and the wood is thought by Bacon to continue above a thousand years found. Miller.

I must yield my body to the earth :
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle ;
Under whose shade the rampant lion slept ;
Whose top branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree,
And kept low shrubs from winter's pow'rful wind.
Shakespeare.

To CEIL. v. a. [celo, Lat.] To overlay, or cover, the inner roof of a building.

And the greater house he ceiled with fir-tree, which he over-laid with fine gold. 2 Chronicles.
How will he, from his house ceiled with cedars, be content with his Saviour's lot, not to have where to lay his head? Decay of Piety.

CEILING. n. f. [from ceil.] The inner roof.

Varnish makes ceilings not only shine, but last. Bacon.

And now the thicken'd sky
Like a dark ceiling flood; down rush'd the rain Impetuous. Milton's Paradise Lost.
So when the sun by day, or moon by night,
Strike on the polish'd brags their trembling light,
The glitt'ring species here and there divide,
And cast their dubious beams from side to side :
Now on the walls, now on the pavement play,
And to the ceiling flash the glaring day. Dryden.

CELE'RITY. n. f. [celeritas, Lat.] Swift-ness; speed; velocity.

We very well see in them, who thus plead, a wonderful celerity of discourse: for, perceiving at the first but only some cause of suspicion, and fear left it should be evil, they are presently, in one and the self-same breath, resolved, that what beginning soever it had, there is no possibility it should be good. Hooker.

His former custom and practice was ever full of forwardness and celerity to make head against them. Bacon.

Thus, with imagin'd wings, our swift scene flies,
In motion with no less celerity
Than that of thought. Shakespeare.

Three things concur to make a percussion great; the bigness, the density, and the celerity of the body moved. Digby.

Whatever increaseth the density of the blood, even without increasing its celerity, heats, because a denser body is hotter than a rarer. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CE'LERY. n. f. A species of parsley; which see.

CELE'STIAL. adj. [caelestis, Lat.]

1. The matter with which two bodies are made to cohere, as mortar or glue.

Your temples burned in their cement, and your Branches confined into an auger's bore. Shakspeare.
There is a cement compounded of flour, whites of eggs, and stones powdered, that becometh hard as marble. Bacon.

You may see divers pebbles, and a crust of cements or stone between them, as hard as the pebbles themselves. Bacon.

The foundation was made of rough stone, joined together with a most firm cement; upon this was laid another layer, consisting of small stones and cement. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. Bond of union in friendship.

Let not the peace of virtue, which is set Betwixt us as the cement of our love,

To keep it builded, be the ram to batter. Shak.

What cement should unite heaven and earth,
Light and darkness? Glanvill.

Look over the whole creation, and you shall see, that the band or cement, that holds together all the parts of this great and glorious fabric, is gratitude.

Soub.

To CEMENT. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite by means of something interposed.

But how the fear of us

May cement their divisions, and bind up

The petty difference, we yet not know. Shakspeare.

Liquid bodies have nothing to cement them; they are all loose and incoherent, and in a perpetual flux: even an heap of sand, or fine powder will suffer no hollows within them, though they be dry substances. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Love with white lead cements his wings;

White lead was sent us to repair

Two brightest, brittlest, earthly things,

A lady's face, and china ware. Swift.

To CEMENT. v. n. To come into con- junction; to cohere.

When a wound is recent, and the parts of it

And challenge better terms.

6. To call any one to the performance of conditions.

I will now challenge you of your promise, to give me certain rules as to the principles of blazonry.

CHALLENGE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A summons to combat.

I never in my life

Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly.

2. A demand of something as due.

Taking for his younglings cark,

Left greedy eyes to them might challenge lay,

Busy with oker did their shoulders mark.

There must be no challenge of superiority, or discountenancing of freedom.

3. [In law.] An exception taken either against persons or things; persons, as in assize to the jurors, or any one or more of them, by the prisoner at the bar.

Challenge made to the jurors, is either made to the array, or to the polls:

challenge made to the array, is when the whole number is excepted against, as partially empannelled; challenge to or by the poll, is when some one or more are excepted against, as not indifferent:

challenge to the jurors is divided into challenge principal, and challenge for cause:

challenge principal is that which the law allows without cause alleged, or farther examination; as a prisoner at the bar, arraigned upon felony, may peremptorily challenge to the number of twenty, one after another, of the jury empannelled upon him, alleging no cause.

You are mine enemy, I make my challenge,

You shall not be my judge.

CHALLENGER. n. f. [from challenge.]

1. One that defies or summons another to combat.

Young man, have you challenged Charles the wrestler?

No, fair princess; he is the general challenger.

Death was denounc'd;

He took the summons, void of fear,

And unconcernedly cast his eyes around,

As if to find and dare the grisly challenger.

2. One that claims superiority.

Whose worth

Stood challenger on mount of all the age,

For her perfections.

3. A claimant; one that requires something as of right.

Earliest challengers there are of trial, by some publick disputation.

CHALYBEATE. adj. [from chalybs, Lat. steel.] Impregnated with iron or steel; having the qualities of steel.

He serv'd at first Emilia's chamberlain.

4. A receiver of rents and revenues; as, chamberlain of the exchequer, of Chester, of the city of London.

CHAMBERLAINSHIP. n. f. [from chamberlain.] The office of a chamberlain.

CHAMBERMAID. n. f. [from chamber and maid.] A maid whose business is to dress a lady, and wait in her chamber.

Men will not hiss,

The chambermaid was named Ciss.

Some coarse country wench, almost decay'd,

Trudges to town, and first turns chambermaid.

When he doubted whether a word were intelligible or no, he used to consult one of his lady's chambermaids.

If these nurses ever presume to entertain the girls with the common follies practis'd by chambermaids among us, they are publickly whipped.

To CHAMBLET. v. a. [from camelot. See CAMELOT.] To vary; to variegate.

Some have the veins more varied and chamblated; as oak, whereof wainfoot is made.

CHAMBREL of a horse. The joint or bending of the upper part of the hinder leg.

CHAMELEON. n. f. [χαμαιλέων.]

The chameleon has four feet, and on each foot three claws. Its tail is long; with this, as well as with its feet, it fastens itself to the branches of trees. Its tail is flat, its nose long, ending in an obtuse point; its back is sharp, its skin plaited, and jagged like a saw from the neck to the last joint of the tail, and upon its head it has something like a comb; like a fish, it has no neck. Some have asserted, that it lives only upon air; but it has been observed to feed on flies, catch'd with its tongue, which is about ten inches long, and three thick; made of white flesh, round, but flat at the end; or hollow and open, resembling an elephant's trunk. It also shrinks, and grows longer. This animal is said to assume the colour of those things to which it is applied; but our modern observers assure us, that its natural colour, when at rest and in the shade, is a bluish grey; though some are yellow, and others green, but both of a smaller kind. When it is exposed to the sun, the grey changes into a darker grey, inclining to a dun colour; and its parts, which have least of the light upon them, are changed into spots of different colours. The grain of its skin, when the light doth not shine upon it, is like cloth mixed with many colours. Sometimes, when it is handled, it seems speckled with dark spots, inclining to green. If it be put upon a black hat, it appears to be of a violet colour; and sometimes, if it be wrapped up in linen, it is white; but it changes colour only in some parts of the body.

A chameleon is a creature about the bigness of an ordinary lizard; his head unproportionably big, and his eyes great; he moveth his head without writhing of his neck, which is inflexible, as a hog doth; his back crooked, his skin spotted with little

little tumours, less eminent nearer the belly; his tail slender and long; on each foot he hath five fingers, three on the outside, and two on the inside; his tongue of a marvellous length in respect of his body, and hollow at the end, which he will launch out to prey upon flies; of colour green, and of a dusky yellow, brighter and whiter towards the belly; yet spotted with blue, white, and red.

Bacon's Natural History.

I can add colours ev'n to the chameleon; Change shapes with Proteus, for advantage. Shak. One part devours the other, and leaves not so much as a mouthful of that popular air, which the chameleons gasp after. Decay of Piety.

The thin chameleon, fed with air, receives The colour of the thing to which he cleaves.

Dryden.

As the chameleon, which is known To have no colours of his own, But borrows from his neighbour's hue, His white or black, his green or blue. Prior.

CHAMOMILE. n. s. [χαμαμήλιον.] An odoriferous plant.

Cool violets, and orpine growing still, Embathed balm, and cheerful galingale, Fresh costmary, and breathful chamomile, Dull poppy, and drink quick'ning fetuale. Spenser. For though the chamomile, the more it is trodden on the faster it grows; yet youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wears. Shakespeare.

Posset drink with chamomile flowers.

Flayer on the Humours.

To CHAMP. v. a. [champayer, Fr.]

1. To bite with a frequent action of the teeth.

Coffee and opium are taken down, tobacco but in smoke, and betel is but champed in the mouth with a little lime. Bacon.

The steed reply'd not, overcome with rage; But, like a proud steed rein'd, went haughty on, Champing his iron curb. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The steeds caparison'd with purple stand, And champ betwixt their teeth the foaming gold. Dryden.

2. To devour, with violent action of the teeth.

A tobacco pipe happened to break in my mouth, and the pieces left such a delicious roughness on my tongue, that I champed up the remaining part. Spectator.

To CHAMP. v. n. To perform frequently the action of biting.

Muttering and champing, as though his cud had troubled him, he gave occasion to Mufidoris to come near him. Sidney.

They began to repent of that they had done, and resolutely to champ upon the bit they had taken into their mouths. Hooker.

His jaws did not answer equally to one another; but, by his frequent motion and champing with them, it was evident they were neither luxated nor fractured. W. man.

CHAMPAIGN. n. s. [campagne, Fr.] A flat open country.

In the abuses of the customs, meseems, you have a fair champaign laid open to you, in which you may at large stretch out your discourse.

Spenser's State of Ireland.

Of all these bounds,

With shadowy forests and with champaigns rich'd, We make thee lady. Shakespeare.

If two bordering princes have their territory meeting on an open champaign, the more mighty will continually seek occasion to extend his limits unto the further border thereof. Raleigh.

Sir John Norris maintained a retreat without disarray, by the space of some miles, part of the way champaign, unto the city of Gaunt, with less loss of men than the enemy. Bacon.

From his side two rivers flow'd, Th' one winding, th' other straight, and left between Fair champaign, with less rivers interven'd. Milton.

CHAMPERTORS. n. s. [from champerty.

2. A hero; a stout warrior; one bold in contest. A stouter champion never handled sword. Shak. This makes you incapable of conviction; and they applaud themselves as zealous champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for error. Lecker.

3. In law.

In our common law, champion is taken no less for him that trieth the combat in his own case, than for him that fighteth in the case of another. Cowell.

To CHAMPION. v. a. [from the noun.]

To challenge to the combat.

The seed of Banquo kings! Rather than so, come, Fate, into the list, And champion me to th' utterance. Shakespeare.

CHANCE. n. s. [chance, Fr.]

1. Fortune; the cause of fortuitous events.

As th' unthought accident is guilty Of what we wildly do, so we profess Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies Of every wind that blows. Shakespeare.

The only man, of all that chance could bring To meet my arms, was worth the conquering. Dryden.

Chance is but a mere name, and really nothing in itself; a conception of our minds, and only a compendious way of speaking, whereby we would express, that such effects as are commonly attributed to chance, were verily produced by their true and proper causes, but without their design to produce them. Bentley.

2. Fortune; the act of fortune; what fortune may bring: applied to persons.

These things are commonly not observed, but left to take their chance. Bacon's Essays.

3. Accident; casual occurrence; fortuitous event.

To say a thing is a chance or casualty, as it relates to second causes, is not profaneness, but a great truth; as signifying no more, than that there are some events besides the knowledge and power of second agents. Soutb.

The beauty I beheld has struck me dead; Unknowingly she strikes, and kills by chance; Poison is in her eyes, and death in every glance. Dryden.

All nature is but art, unknown to thee; All chance direction, which thou canst not see. Pope.

4. Event; success; luck: applied to things.

Now we'll together, and the chance of goodness Be like our warranted quarrel! Shakespeare.

5. Misfortune; unlucky accident.

You were us'd To say extremity was the trier of spirits, That common chances common men could bear. Shakespeare.

6. Possibility of any occurrence.

A chance, but chance may lead, where I may meet Some wand'ring spirit of heav'n, by fountain side, Or in thick shade retir'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Then your ladyship might have a chance to escape this address. Swift.

CHANCE. adj. [It is seldom used but in composition.] Happening by chance.

Now should they part, malicious tongues would say,

They met like chance companions on the way. Dryden.

I would not take the gift, Which, like a toy dropt from the hands of fortune, Lay for the next chance comer. Dryden.

To CHANCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To happen; to fall out; to fortune.

Think what a chance thou chancest on; but think;—

Thou hast thy mistress still. Shakespeare.

How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother? Shakespeare.

CHANCE-MEDLEY. n. s. [from chance and medley.] In law.

The casual slaughter of a man, not altogether without the fault of the slayer, when ignorance or negligence is joined with the chance; as if a man lop trees by an highway-side, by which many usually travel, and cast down a bough, not giving warning to take heed thereof, by which bough one passing by is slain: in this case he offends, because he gave no warning, that the party might have taken heed to himself. Cowell.

If such an one should have the ill hap, at any time, to strike a man dead with a smart saying, it ought, in all reason and conscience, to be judged but a chance-medley. Soutb.

CHANCEABLE. adj. [from chance.] Accidental.

The trial thereof was cut off by the chanceable coming thither of the king of Iberia. Sidney.

CHANCEL.

CHA'NCEL. n. f. [from cancelli, Lat. lattices, with which the chancel was inclosed.] The eastern part of the church, in which the altar is placed.

Addison on Italy.

CHA'NCELLOR. n. f. [cancellarius, Lat. cancellier, Fr. from cancellare, litteras vel scriptum lineâ per medium ductâ damnare; and seemeth of itself likewise to be derived à cancellis, which signify all one with αὐχλίδες, a lattice; that is, a thing made of wood or iron bars, laid crossways one over another, so that a man may see through them in and out. It may be thought that judgment seats were compassed in with bars, to defend the judges and other officers from the press of the multitude, and yet not to hinder any man's view.

Quæstus regni tibi cancellarius Angli, Primus solliciti mente petendus erit.

Hic est, qui regni leges cancellat iniquas, Et mandata pii principis æqua facit.

Verfes of Nigel de Wetekre to the bishop of Ely, chancellor to Richard I.

1. The highest judge of the law.

Cancellarius, at the first, signified the registers or actuaries in court; grapharius, scil. qui conscribendis & excipiendis iudicium actus dant operam. But this name is greatly advanced, and, not only in other kingdoms but in this, is given to him that is the chief judge in causes of property; for the chancellor hath power to moderate and temper the written law, and subjeeth himself only to the law of nature and conscience. Cowell.

Turn out, you rogue! how like a beast you lie! Go, buckle to the law. Is this an hour To stretch your limbs? you'll ne'er be chancellor. Dryden jun.

Aristides was a person of the strictest justice, and best acquainted with the laws, as well as forms, of their government; so that he was, in a manner, chancellor of Athens. Suiffi.

12. Onset.

And giving a charge upon their enemies, like lions, they slew eleven thousand footmen, and sixteen hundred horsemen, and put all the others to flight. 2 Maccabees.

Honourable retreats are no ways inferior to brave charges; as having less of fortune, more of discipline, and as much of valour. Bacon's War with Spain.

13. The signal to fall upon enemies.

Our author seems to found a charge, and begins like the clangour of a trumpet. Dryden.

14. The posture of a weapon fitted for the attack or combat.

Their neighing courfers daring of the spur,
Their armed staves in charge, their beavers down. Shakespeare.

15. A load, or burthen.

Asses of great charge. Shakespeare.

16. What any thing can bear.

Take of aqua-fortis two ounces, of quick-silver two drachms, for that charge the aqua-fortis will bear, the dissolution will not bear a flint as big as a nutmeg. Bacon.

17. The quantity of powder and ball put into a gun.

18. Among farriers.

Charge is a preparation, or a sort of ointment of the consistence of a thick decoction, which is applied to the shoulder-splaits, inflammations, and sprains of horses.

A charge is of a middle nature, between an ointment and a plaster, or between a plaster and a cataplasm. Farrier's Dict.

19. In heraldry.

The charge is that which is born upon the colour, except it be a coat divided only by partition. Peacbam.

CHARGEABLE. adj. [from charge.]

1. Expensive; costly.

Divers bulwarks were demolished upon the sea-coasts, in peace chargeable, and little serviceable in war. Hayward.

Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought, but wrought with labour and travel night and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you. 2 Theſſalonians.

There was another accident of the same nature on the Sicilian side, much more pleasant, but less chargeable; for it cost nothing but wit. Warton.

Considering the chargeable methods of their education, their numerous issue, and small income, it is next to a miracle, that no more of their children should want. Atterbury.

2. Inimputable, as a debt or crime: with on.

Nothing can be a reasonable ground of despising a man, but some fault or other chargeable upon him. South.

3. Subject to charge or accusation; accusative: followed by with.

Your papers would be chargeable with something worse than indelicacy; they would be immoral. Spectator.

CHARGEABLENESS. n. f. [from chargeable.] Expence; cost; costliness.

That which most deters me from such trials, is not their chargeableness, but their unsatisfactoriness, though they should succeed. Boyle.

CHARGEABLY. adv. [from chargeable.] Expensively; at great cost.

He procured it not with his money, but by his wisdom; not chargeably bought by him, but liberally given by others by his means. Ascham.

CHARGEFUL. adj. [charge and full.] Expensive; costly. Not in use.

Here 's the note
How much your chain weighs to the utmost carat,
The fineness of the gold, the chargeful fashion. Shakespeare.

CHARGER. n. f. [from charge.] A large dish.

All the tributes land and sea affords,
Heap'd in great chargers, load our sumptuous boards. Denham.

This golden charger, snatch'd from burning Troy,
Anchises did in sacrifice employ. Dryden's Æneid.
Ev'n Lamb himself, at the most solemn feast,
Might have some chargers not exactly dress'd. King.

Nor dare they close their eyes,
Vn'd of a bulky charger near their lips,
With which, in often interrupted sleep,
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry furn'd tongues. Phillips.

CHARILY. adv. [from chary.] Warily; frugally.

What paper do you take up so charily? Shakespeare.

CHARINESS. n. f. [from chary.] Caution; nicety; scrupulousness.

I will consent to act any villany against him, that may not fully the chariness of our honesty. Shakespeare.

CHARIOT. n. f. [car-rhod, Welsh, a wheeled car, for it is known the Britons fought in such; charriot, Fr. carretta, Ital.]

1. A wheel carriage of pleasure, or state; a vehicle for men rather than wares.

Thy grand captain Antony Shall set thee on triumphant chariots, and Put garlands on thy head. Shakespeare.

2. A car in which men of arms were anciently placed.

He skims the liquid plains.
High on his chariot, and with loosen'd reins Majestic roaves along. Dryden's Æneid.

3. A lighter kind of coach, with only front seats.

To CHARIOT. v. a. [from the noun.] To convey in a chariot. This word is rarely used.

An angel all in flames ascended,
As in a fiery column charioting
His godlike presence. Milton's Sampson Agonistes.

CHARIOTEER. n. f. [from chariot.] He that drives the chariot. It is used only in speaking of military chariots, and those in the ancient public games.

The gawping charioteer beneath the wheel
Of his own car. Dryden's Fables.
The burning chariot, and the charioteer,
In bright Boötes and his wane appear. Addison on Italy.

Show

Show us the youthful handsome charioteer,
Firm in his feat, and running his career. Prior.
CHARIOT RACE. n. f. [from chariot and race.] A sport anciently used, where chariots were driven for the prize, as now horses run.

There is a wonderful vigour and spirit in the description of the horse and chariot race. Aldison.
CHARITABLE. adj. [charitable, Fr. from charité.]

1. Kind in giving alms; liberal to the poor.

He that hinders a charitable person from giving alms to a poor man, is tied to restitution, if he hindered him by fraud or violence. Taylor's Holy Liv.

Shortly thou wilt behold me poor, and kneeling
Before thy charitable door for bread. Rowe.

How shall we then wish, that it might be allowed us to live over our lives again, in order to fill every minute of them with charitable offices! Atterbury.

Health to himself, and to his infants bread,
The lab'rer bears: what his hard heart denies,
His charitable vanity supplies. Pope.

2. Kind in judging of others; disposed to tenderness; benevolent.

How had you been my friends else? Why have you that charitable title from thousands, did you not chiefly belong to my heart? Shaksp. Timen.

Of a politic sermon that had no divinity, the king said to bishop Andrews, Call you this a sermon? The bishop answered, By a charitable construction it may be a sermon. Bacon.

CHARITABLY. adv. [from charity.]

1. Kindly; liberally; with inclination to help the poor.

Nothing will more enable us to bear our cross patiently, injuries charitably, and the labour of religion comfortably. Taylor.

'Tis best sometimes your censure to restrain,
And charitably let the dull be vain. Pope.

CHARITY. n. f. [charité, Fr. charitas, Lat.]

1. Tenderness; kindness; love.

By thee,
Founded in reason, loyal, just, and pure,
Relations dear, and all the charities
Of father, son, and brother, first were known.
Milton.

2. Goodwill; benevolence; disposition to think well of others.

My errors, I hope, are only those of charity to mankind; and such as my own charity has caused me to commit, that of others may more easily excuse. Dryden.

3. The theological virtue of universal love.

Concerning charity, the final object whereof is that incomprehensible beauty which shineth in the countenance of Christ, the Son of the living God.
Hooker.

Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity.—
—Urge neither charity nor shame to me;
Uncharitably with me have you dealt. Shaksp. Lear.

Deeds to thy knowledge answerable; add faith,
Add virtue, patience, temperance; add love,
By name to come call'd charity, the soul
Of all the rest. Milton.

Faith believes the revelations of God; hope expects his promises; charity loves his excellencies and mercies. Taylor.

But lasting charity's more ample sway,
Nor bound by time, nor subject to decay,
In happy triumph shall for ever live. Prior.

Charity, or a love of God, which works by a love of our neighbour, is greater than faith or hope.
Atterbury.

4. Liberality to the poor.

'The heathen poet, in commending the charity
of Dido to the Trojans, spoke like a christian.
Dryden.

5. Alms; relief given to the poor.

We must incline to the king; I will look for him, and privily relieve him; go you and maintain talk with the duke, that my charity be not of him perceived. Shaksp. Lear.

The ant did well to reprove the grasshopper for her slothfulness; but she did ill then to refuse her a charity in her distress. L'Estrange.

I never had the confidence to beg a charity. Dryden.

TO CHARK. v. a. To burn to a black cinder, as wood is burned to make charcoal.

Excess either with an apoplexy knocks a man on the head, or with a fever, like fire in a strong-water shop, burns him down to the ground; or, if it flames not out, charks him to a coal.

Greav's Cosmologia Sacra.

CHARLATAN. n. f. [charlatan, Fr. ciar-latano, Ital. from ciarlare, to chatter.]

A quack; a mountebank; an empirick.
Saltimbanches, quack-salvers, and charlatans, deceive them in lower degrees. Brown's Vulg. Err.

For charlatans can do no good,
Until they're mounted in a crowd. Hudibras.

CHARLATANICAL. adj. [from charlatan.]

Quackish; ignorant.

A cowardly soldier, and a charlatanical doctor, are the principal subjects of comedy. Cowley.

CHARLATANRY. n. f. [from charlatan.]

Wheedling; deceit; cheating with fair words.

CHARLES'S-WAIN. n. f. The northern constellation, called the Bear.

There are seven stars in Urfa minor, and in Charles's-wain, or Plaustrum of Urfa major, seven.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

the corn with a yellow flower. It is a species of Mithridate mustard.

CHARM. n. f. [charme, Fr. carmen, Latin.]

1. Words, or philtres, or characters, imagined to have some occult or unintelligible power.

I never knew a woman so dote upon a man;
surely I think you have charms.—Not I, I assure thee; setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms. Shaksp. Lear.

There have been used, either barbarous words, of no sense, lest they should disturb the imagination; or words of similitude, that may second and feed the imagination: and this was ever as well in heathen charms, as in charms of later times.
Bacon.

Alcyone he names amidst his pray'rs,
Names as a charm against the waves and wind,
Moist in his mouth, and ever in his mind. Dryden.

Anteus could, by magick charms,
Recover strength when'er he fell. Swift.

2. Something of power to subdue opposition, and gain the affections; something that can please irresistibly.

Well thought verses are the charm we use,
Heroick thoughts and virtue to inspire. Roscommon.
Nor ever hope the queen of love
Will e'er thy favourite's charms improve. Prior.

To sam'd Apelles when young Amnon brought
The darling idol of his captive heart;
And the pleas'd nymph with kind attention sat,
To have her charms recorded by his art. Waller.

But what avail her unexhausted stores,
Her blooming mountains, and her sunny shores,
With all the gifts that heaven and earth impart,
The smiles of nature, and the charms of art;
While proud oppression in her vallies reigns,
And tyranny usurps her happy plains? Aldison.

TO CHARM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fortify with charms against evil.

Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests;
I bear a charmed life, which most not yield
To one of woman born. Shaksp. Lear.

2. To make powerful by charms.

3. To summon by incantation.

Upon my knees

I charm you by my once commended beauty,
By all your vows of love, and that great vow
Which did incorporate and make us one. Shaksp. Lear.

4. To subdue by some secret power; to amaze; to overpower.

I, in mine own woe charm'd,
Could not find death, where I did hear him groan;
Nor feel him where he struck. Shaksp. Lear.

Musick the fiercest grief can charm. Pope.

5. To subdue the mind by pleasure.

'Tis your graces
That from my muteest conscience to my tongue
Charms this report out. Shaksp. Lear.

Amoret! my lovely foe,
Tell me where thy strength does lie:
Where the pow'r that charms us so,
In thy soul, or in thy eye? Waller.

Charm by accepting, by submitting sway. Pope.

Chloe thus the soul alarm'd,

Aw'd without sense, and without beauty charm'd.
Pope.

CHARMED. adj. Enchanted.

Arcadia was the charmed circle, where all his spirits for ever should be enchanted. Sidney.

We implore thy powerful hand,

To undo the charmed band

Of true virgin here distressed. Milton.

CHARMER. n. f. [from charm.]

1. One that has the power of charms or enchantments.

That handkerchief
Did an Egyptian to my mother give;
She was a charmer, and could almost read
The thoughts of people. Shaksp. Lear.

The passion you pretended,

Was only to obtain;

But when the charm is ended,
The charmer you disdain. Dryden.

2. Word of endearment among lovers.

CHARMING; particip. adj. [from charm.]

Pleasing in the highest degree.

For ever all goodness will be charming, for ever all wickedness will be most odious. Spratt.

O charming youth! in the first op'ning page,
So many graces in so gien an age. Dryden.

CHARMINGLY. adv. [from charming.]

In such a manner as to please exceedingly.

She finish'd very charmingly, and discovered as fine a set of teeth as ever eye beheld. Aldison.

CHARMINGNESS. n. f. [from charming.]

The power of pleasing.

CHARNEL. adj. [charnel, Fr.] Containing flesh, or carcases.

Such are those thick and gloomy shadows damp,
Oft found in charnel vaults and sepulchres
Ling'ring, and sitting by a new made grave. Milt.

CHARNEL-HOUSE. n. f. [charnier, Fr.
from caro, carnis; Latin.] The place under churches where the bones of the dead are repositied.

If charnel-houses and our graves must send
Those, that we bury, back; our monuments
Shall be the maws of kites. Shaksp. Lear.

When they were in those charnel-houses, every one was placed in order, and a black pillar or coffin set by him. Taylor.

CHART. n. f. [charta, Lat.] A delineation or map of coasts, for the use of sailors. It is distinguished from a map, by representing only the coasts.

The Portuguese, when they had doubled the Cape of Good Hope, found skilful pilots, using astronomical

astronomical instruments, geographical charts, and compasses.

CHARTER. n. f. [charta, Latin.]

1. A charter is a written evidence of things done between man and man. Charters are divided into charters of the king, and charters of private persons. Charters of the king are those, whereby the king passeth any grant to any person or more, or to any body politick: as a charter of exemption, that no man shall be empannelled on a jury; charter of pardon, whereby a man is forgiven a felony, or other offence. Cowell.

2. Any writing bestowing privileges or rights.

If you deny it, let the danger light Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shak.
It is not to be wondered, that the great charter whereby God bestowed the whole earth upon Adam, and confirmed it unto the sons of Noah, being as brief in word as large in effect, hath bred much quarrel of interpretation. Raleigh's Essays.

Here was that charter seal'd, wherein the crown All marks of arbitrary power lays down. Denham.
She shakes the rubbish from her mounting brow, And seems to have renew'd her charter's date, Which heav'n will to the death of time allow. Dryden.

God renewed this charter of man's sovereignty over the creatures. South.

3. Privilege; immunity; exemption.

I must have liberty, Withal as large a charter as the wind, To blow on whom I please; for so fools have; And they that are most galled with my folly, They most must laugh. Shakespeare.

Who has a charter to extol her blood, When she does praise me, grieves me. Shakespeare.

CHARTER-PARTY. n. f. [chartre partie, Fr.] A paper relating to a contract, of which each party has a copy.

Charter-parties, or contracts, made even upon the high sea, touching things that are not in their own nature maritime, belong not to the admiral's jurisdiction. Hale.

CHARTERED. adj. [from charter.] Invested with privileges by charter; privileged.

When he speaks The air, a charter'd libertine, is still. Shakespeare.

CHARY. adj. [from care.] Careful; cautious; wary; frugal.

Over his kindred he held a wary and chary care, which bountifully was expressed, when occasion so required. Cervus's Survey of Cornwall.

The charest maid is prodigal enough, If she unmask her beauty to the moon. Shakespeare.

TO CHASE. v. a. [chasser, Fr.]

1. To hunt.
It shall be as the chased roe. Isaiab.
Mine enemies chased me sore like a bird. Lamentations.

2. To pursue as an enemy.
And Abimelech chased him, and he fled before him. Judges.
One of you shall chase a thousand. Deuteronomy.

3. To drive away.
He that chaser away his mother, is a son that causeth shame. Proverbs.

4. To follow as a thing desirable.

5. To drive.

Thus chased by their brother's endless malice from prince to prince, and from place to place, they, for their safety, fled at last to the city of Bifennis. Knolles's History of the Turks.

When the following morn had chas'd away The flying stars, and light restor'd the day. Dryden.

TO CHASE METALS. See TO ENCHASE.

CHASE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Hunting; as, the pleasures of the chase.

2. Pursuit of any thing as game.
Whilst he was hunt'ning in the chase, it seems, Of this fair couple, meets he on the way The father of this seeming lady. Shakespeare.

There is no chase more pleasant, methinks, than to drive a thought, by good conduct, from one end of the world to another, and never to lose sight of it till it fall into eternity. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. Fitness to be hunted; appropriation to chase or sport.

Concerning the beasts of chase, whereof the buck is the first, he is called the first year a fawn. Shak.

A maid I am, and of thy virgin train; Oh! let me still that spotless name retain, Frequent the forests, thy chaste will obey, And only make the beasts of chase my prey. Dryden.

4. Pursuit of an enemy, or of something noxious.

The admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth with them, and such as came daily in, we set upon them, and gave them chase. Bacon.

He fallied out upon them with certain troops of horsemen, with such violence, that he overthrew them, and, having them in chase, did speedy execution. Knolles's History of the Turks.

They seek that joy, which us 'd to glow Expanded on the hero's face,

And William led the glorious chase. Prior.

5. Pursuit of something as desirable.

Yet this mad chase of fame, by few pursued, Has drawn destruction on the multitude. Dryden's Journal.

6. The game hunted.

She, seeing the towering of her pursued chase, went circling about, rising so with the less sense of rising.

Hold, Warwick! seek thee out some other chase, For I myself must put this deer to death. Shak.

Honour 's the noblest chase; pursue that game, And recompense the loss of love with fame. Granville.

7. Open ground stored with such beasts as are hunted.

A receptacle for deer and game, of a middle nature between a forest and a park; being commonly less than a forest, and not endued with so many liberties; and yet of a larger compass, and stored with greater diversity of game, than a park. A chase differs from a forest in this, because it may be in the hands of a subject, which a forest, in its proper nature, cannot: and from a park, in that it is not inclosed, and hath not only a larger compass, and more store of game, but likewise more keepers and overseers. Cowell.

He and his lady both are at the lodge, Upon the north side of this pleasant chase. Shak.

8. The CHASE of a gun, is the whole bore or length of a piece, taken withinside.

Chambers.

CHASE-GUN. n. f. [from chase and gun.] Guns in the forepart of the ship, fired upon those that are pursued.

Mean time the Belgians tack upon our rear, And raking chase-guns through our stern they send. Dryden.

CHASER. n. f. [from chase.]

1. Hunter; pursuer; driver.

A stop 't' chaser, a retire; anon A rout, confusion thick. Shakespeare.

So fast he flies, that his reviewing eye Has lost the chasers, and his ear the cry. Denham.

Stretch'd on the lawn, his second hope survey, At once the chaser, and at once the prey!

Lo, Rufus, tugging at the deadly dart, Bleeds in the forest like a wounded hart! Pope.

2. An enchaser.

CHASM. n. f. [χασμα.]

1. A breach unclosed; a cleft; a gap; an opening.

In all that visible corporeal world, we see no chasms or gaps. Locke.

The water of this orb communicates with that of the ocean, by means of certain hiatuses or chasms passing betwixt it and the bottom of the ocean. Woodward.

The ground adust her riv'n mouth disparts, Horrible chasm! profound. Philips.

2. A place unfilled; a vacuity.

Some lazy ages, lost in ease, No action leave to busy chronicles; Such, whose supine felicity but makes In story chasms, in epochas mistakes. Dryden.

CHASSELAS. n. f. [French.] A sort of grape.

CHASTE. adj. [chaste, Fr. castus, Lat.]

1. Pure from all commerce of sexes; as, a chaste virgin.

Diana chaste, and Hebe fair. Prior.

2. With respect to language, pure; uncorrupt; not mixed with barbarous phrases.

3. Free from obscenity.

Among words which signify the same principal ideas, some are clean and decent, others unclean; some chaste, others obscene. Wat's Logic.

Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying. Proverbs.

I follow thee, safe guide! the path Thou lead'st me; and to the hand of heav'n submit, Milton's Paradise Lost.

However chast'ning, Some feel the rod, And own, like us, the father's chast'ning hand. Rowe.

From our lost pursuit the wills to hide Her close decrees, and chasten human pride. Prior.

TO CHASTISE. v. a. [castigo, Lat. anciently accented on the first syllable, now on the last.]

1. To punish; to correct by punishment; to afflict for faults.

My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage, But I will chastise this high-minded strutpet. Shakespeare.

I am glad to see the vanity or envy of the canting chymists thus discovered and chastised. Boyle.

Seldom is the world affrighted or chastised with signs or prodigies, earthquakes or inundations, famines or plagues. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

Like you, commission'd to chastise and bless, He must avenge the world, and give it peace. Prior.

2. To reduce to order, or obedience; to repress; to restrain; to awe.

Hie thee hither, That I may pour my spirits in thine ear, And chastise, with the valour of my tongue, All that impedes thee. Shakespeare.

Know, Sir, that I Will not wait pinion'd at your master's court, Nor once be chastis'd with the sober eye Of dull Octavia. Shakespeare.

The gay social sense By decency chastis'd. Thomson.

CHASTISEMENT. n. f. [chastiment, Fr.]

Correction; punishment; commonly, though though not always, used of domestick or parental punishment.

Shall I to much dishonour my fair stars,
On equal terms to give him chastisement? Shakespeare.
He held the chastisement of one, which molested
the see of Rome, pleading to God. Raleigh's Essays.

For seven years what can a child be guilty of,
but lying, or ill-natured tricks? the repeated commission of which shall bring him to the chastisement of the rod. Locke.

He receives a fit of sickness as the kind chastise-ment and discipline of his heavenly Father, to wean his affections from the world. Bentley.

CHASTITY. n. f. [castitas, Lat.]

1. Purity of the body.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To force a spotless virgin's chastity? Shakespeare.
Chastity is either abstinence or continence: abstinence is that of virgins or widows; continence, of married persons: chaste marriages are honourable and pleasing to God. Taylor.

Ev'n here, where frozen chastity retires,
Love finds an altar for forbidden fires. Pope.

2. Freedom from obscenity.

There is not chastity enough in language,
Without offence to utter them. Shak. Much Ado.

3. Freedom from bad mixture of any kind; purity of language, opposed to barbarisms.

CHASTISER. n. f. [from chastise.] The person that chastises; a punisher; a corrector.

CHASTELY. adv. [from chaste.] Without incontinence; purely; without contamination.

You should not pass here; no, though it were as virtuous to lie as to live chastely. Shakespeare.

Make first a song of joy and love,
Which chastely flame in royal eyes. Watson.
Succession of a long descent,
Which chastely in the channels ran,
And from our demi-gods began. Dryden.

CHASTNESS. n. f. [from chaste.] Chastity; purity.

To CHAT. v. n. [from caqueter, Fr. Skinner; perhaps from achat, purchase or cheapening, on account of the prate naturally produced in a bargain; or only, as it is most likely, contracted from chatter.] To prate; to talk idly; to prattle; to cackle; to chatter; to converse at ease.

Thus chatten the people in their steads,
Ylike as a monster of many heads. Spenser.

Because that I familiarly sometimes
Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,
Your fauciness will jest upon my love. Shakespeare.

The shepherds on the lawn
Sat simply chatting in a rustick row. Milton.

With much good-will the motion was embrac'd,
To chat a while on their adventures pass'd. Dryden.

To CHAT. v. a. To talk of. Not in use, unless ludicrously.

All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights
Are spectacled to see him. Your prattling nurse
Into a rapture lets her baby cry,
While she chats him. Shakespeare.

CHAT. n. f. [from the verb.] Idle talk;
prate; slight or negligent tattle.

Lords, that can prate
As amply and unnecessarily

As this Gonzalo, I myself would make A chough of as deep chat. Shakespeare.

The time between before the fire they sat,
And shorten'd the delay by pleasing chat. Dryden.

The least is good, far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat
of a soaking club. Locke.

Snuff, or the fan, supplies each pause of chat,
With gazing, laughing, ogling, and all that. Pope.

CHAT. n. f. The keys of trees are called chats; as, ash chats.

to buy.]

1. To be had at a low rate; purchased for a small price.

Where there are a great many sellers to a few buyers, there the thing to be sold will be cheap.
On the other side, raise up a great many buyers for a few sellers, and the same thing will immediately turn dear. Locke.

2. Of small value; easy to be had; not respected.

The goodness, that is cheap in beauty, makes beauty brief in goodness. Shakespeare.

Had I so livish of my presence been,
So common hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So stale and cheap to vulgar company. Shakespeare.

He that is too much in any thing, so that he giveth another occasion of society, maketh himself cheap. Bacon.

May your sick fame still languish till it die,
And you grow cheap in every subject's eye. Dryden.

The titles of distinction, which belong to us, are turned into terms of derision, and every way is taken, by profane men, towards rendering us cheap and contemptible. Asterbury.

CHEAP. n. f. [chepeing is an old word for market; whence Eaſtcheap, Cheapside.]

Market; purchase; bargain: as, good cheap, à bon marche, Fr.

The same wine which we pay so dear for now-a-days, in that good world was very good cheap. Sidney.

It is many a man's case to tire himself out with hunting after that abroad, which he carries about him all the while, and may have it better cheap at home. L'Estrange.

Some few insulting cowards, who love to vapour good cheap, may trample on those who give least resistance. Decay of Piety.

To CHEAPEN. v. a. [ceapan, Sax. to buy.]

So mighty recompence your beauty brought. Dryden.

CHEAPNESS. n. f. [from cheap.] Low-ness of price.

Ancient statutes incite merchant-strangers to bring in commodities; having for end cheapness.
Bacon.

The discredit which is grown upon Ireland, has been the great discouragement to other nations to transplant themselves hither, and prevailed farther than all the invitations which the cheapness and plenty of the country has made them. Temple.

CHEAR. See CHEER.

To CHEAT. v. a. [of uncertain derivation; probably from acheter, Fr. to purchase, alluding to the tricks used in making bargains. See the noun.]

1. To

1. To defraud; to impose upon; to trick. It is used commonly of low cunning.

It is a dangerous commerce, where an honest man is sure at first of being cheated; and he recovers not his losses, but by learning to cheat others.

Dryden.

There are people who find that the most effectual way to cheat the people, is always to pretend to infallible cures.

Tillotson.

2. It has of before the thing taken away by fraud.

I that am curtail'd of man's fair proportion, Cheated of feature by dissembling nature, Deform'd, unfinish'd.

Shakespeare.

- CHEAT. n. f. [from the verb. Some think abbreviated from eschheat, because many fraudulent measures being taken by the lords of manours in procuring eschcheats, cheat, the abridgment, was brought to convey a bad meaning.]

1. A fraud; a trick; an imposture.

The pretence of publick good is a cheat that will ever pass, though so abused by ill men, that I wonder the good do not grow ashamed to use it.

Temple.

Empirick politicians use deceit, Hide what they give, and cure but by a cheat.

Dryden.

When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat; Yet, fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit; Trust on, and think to-morrow will repay; To-morrow's falser than the former day; Lyes worse; and while it says we shall be blest With some new joy, cuts off what we possess.

Dryden.

2. A person guilty of fraud.

Disimulation can be no further useful than it is concealed; for as much as no man will trust a known cheat.

South.

Like that notorious cheat, vast sums I give, Only that you may keep me while I live.

Dryden.

- CHEATER. n. f. [from cheat.] One that practises fraud.

I will be cheater to them both, and they shall be exchequers to me. [It is here for eschcheater.]

Shakespeare.

They say this town is full of couzenage, As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye; Disguis'd cheaters, prating mountebanks, And many such like libertines of sin. He is no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater i' faith.—Cheater, call you him? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater. All sorts of injurious persons, the sacrilegious, the detainers of tithes, cheaters of men's inheritances, false witnesses and accusers.

Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

- To CHECK. v. a. [from the French echecs, chess; from whence we use, at that game, the term checkmate, when we stop our adversary from carrying on his play any farther.]

1. To repress; to curb.

Reserve thy state; with better judgment check This hideous rashness.

Shakespeare.

Fames may be sown and raised, they may be spread and multiplied, they may be checked and laid dead.

Bacon.

I hate when vice can bolt her arguments, And virtue has no tongue to check her pride. He who sat at a table, richly and deliciously furnished, but with a sword hanging over his head by one single thread or hair, surely had enough to check his appetite.

South.

2. To reprove; to chide.

Richard, with his eye brimful of tears, Then check'd and rated by Northumberland, Did speak these words, now prov'd a prophecy.

Shakespeare.

His fault is much, and the good king his master. Will check him for it,

Shakespeare.

Sbak.

He must observe their mad on whom he jests,

The quality of the persons, and the time;

And, like the haggard, check at every feather

That comes before his eye.

Shakespeare.

The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else

checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after.

Locke.

2. To clash; to interfere.

If love check with business, it troubleth men's fortunes.

Bacon.

3. To strike with repression.

I'll avoid his presence;

It checks too strong upon me.

Dryden.

CHECK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Repressure; stop; rebuff; sudden restraint.

Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway,

Meeting the check of such another day.

We see also, that kings that have been fortunate conquerors in their first years, must have some check or arrest in their fortunes.

Bacon's Essays.

God hath of late years manifested himself in a very dreadful manner, as if it were on purpose to give a check to this insolent impiety.

It was this viceroy's zeal, which gave a remarkable check to the first progress of christianity.

Addison's Freeholder.

God put it into the heart of one of our princes, to give a check to that sacrilege which had been but too much winked at.

Atterbury.

The great struggle with passions is in the first check.

Rogers.

2. Restraint; curb; government; continued restraint.

They who come to maintain their own breach of faith, the check of their consciences much breaketh their spirit.

Hayward.

The impetuosity of the new officer's nature needed some restraint and check, for some time, to his immoderate pretences and appetite of power.

Clarendon.

Some free from rhyme or reason, rule or check,

Break Priscian's head, and Pegasus's neck.

Pope.

While such men are in fruit, who have no check from within, nor any views but towards their interest.

Swift.

3. A reproof; a slight.

Oh! this life

Is nobler than attending for a check.

Shakespeare.

I do know, the state,

However this may gall him with some check,

Cannot with safety cast him.

Shakespeare.

4. A dislike; a sudden disgust; something that stops the progress.

Say I should wed her, would not my wife subjects

Take check, and think it strange? perhaps revolt?

Dryden.

5. In falconry, when a hawk forsakes her proper game to follow rooks, pies, or other birds that cross her flight.

A young woman is a hawk upon her wings;

and if she be handsome, she is the more subject to go out on check.

Suckling.

When whistled from the fit

Some falcon stoops at what her eye design'd,

And with her eagerness, the quarry miss'd,

Straight flies at check, and clips it down the wind.

Dryden.

6. The person checking; the cause of restraint; a stop.

He was unhappily too much used as a check upon the lord Coventry.

Clarendon.

A satirical poet is the check of the laymen on bad priests.

Dryden's Fables, Preface.

11. Clerk of the CHECK, in the king's navy at Plymouth, is also the name of an officer invested with like powers.

Chambers.

To CHECKER. } v. a. [from echecs, chess, To CHECKER. } Fr.] To variegate or diversify, in the manner of a chess-board, with alternate colours, or with darker and brighter parts.

The grey-eyed morn smiles on the frowning night,

Check'ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light.

Shakespeare.

The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind,

And make a checker'd shadow on the ground.

Shakespeare.

As the snake, rolled in the flow'ry bank,

With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a child;

That for the beauty thinks it excellent.

The wealthy spring yet never bore

That sweet nor dainty flower,

That damask'd not the checker'd floor

Of Cynthia's summer power.

Drayton.

Many a youth and many a maid

Dancing in the checker'd shade.

Milton.

In the chess-board, the use of each chess-man is determined only within that chequered piece of wood.

Locke.

In our present condition, which is a middle state, our minds are, as it were, chequered with truth and falsehood.

Addison.

The ocean intermixing with the land, so as to checker it into earth and water.

But better might they have behote him hate.

Spens.

CHECKROLL. n. f. [from check and roll.]

A roll or book, containing the names of such as are attendants on, and in pay to,

great personages, as their household servants. It is otherwise called the checkerroll.

Cowell.

Not daring to extend this law further than to the king's servants in checkroll, lest it should have been too harsh to the gentlemen of the kingdom.

Bacon's Henry VII.

CHECK. n. f. [ceac, Saxon.]

1. The side of the face below the eye.

And now and then an ample tear trill'd down

Her delicate check.

Her beauty hangs upon the check of night,

Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear.

Shakespeare.

I shall survey, and spy
Death in thy cheeks, and darkness in thy eye. Donne.
Daughter of the rose, whose cheeks unite
The disringing tides of the red and white;
Who heav'n's alternate beauty well display,
The blush of morning and the milky way. Dryd.
2. A general name among mechanics for almost all those pieces of their machines and instruments that are double, and perfectly alike. Chambers.

CHE'EK BONE. n. f. [from cheek and bone.]

I have not that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have. Shak.

4. Air of the countenance.

Right faithful true he was in deed and word,
But of his cheer did seem too solemn fast:
Nothing did he dread, but ever was ydrad. Spenser.
Which publick death, receiv'd with such a cheer,
As not a sigh, a look, a shrink bewrays
The least felt touch of a degenerate fear,
Gave life to envy, to his courage praise. Daniel.
He ended; and his words their drooping cheer
Enlighten'd, and their languish'd hope reviv'd;
Milton.

At length appear
Her grisly brethren stretch'd upon the bier:
Pale at the sudden sight, she chang'd her cheer.
Dryden.

CHE'RUB. n. f. [כרוב plur. כרובים] It is sometimes written in the plural, improperly, cherubims.] A celestial spirit, which, in the hierarchy, is placed next in order to the seraphim. All the several descriptions which the Scripture gives us of cherubin, differ from one another; as they are described in the shapes of men, eagles, oxen, lions, and in a composition of all these figures put together. The hieroglyphical representations in the embroidery upon the curtains of the Tabernacle, were called by Moses, Exod. xxvi. 1. cherubim of cunning work. Calmet.

The roof o' th' chamber

With gold cherubims is fretted. Shakespeare.

Heav'n's cherubin, hors'd

Upon the fightless couriers of the air,
Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye,
That tears shall drown the wind. Shakespeare.

Some cherub finishes what you begun,
And to a miracle improves a tunc. Prior.

CHE'RUBICK. adj. [from cherub.] Angelick; relating to the cherubim.

Thy words

Attentive, and with more delighted ear, Divine instructor! I have heard, than when

Cherubick songs by night from neighb'ring hills
Aerial musick send. Milton's Paradise Lost.

And on the east side of the garden place
Cherubick watch. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CHE'RUBIN. adj. [from cherub.] Angelical.

Hath in her more destruction than thy sword,
For all her cherubin look. Shakespeare.

CHE'RVIL. n. f. [chærophyllum, Lat.] An umbrelliferous plant. Miller.

TO CHE'RUP. v. n. [from cheer; perhaps from cheer up, corrupted to cherup.] To chirp; to use a cheerful voice.

The birds
Frame to thy song their cheerful cheruping;
Or hold their peace for shame of thy sweet lays. Spenser.

CHE'SLIP. n. f. A small vermin, that lies under stones or tiles. Skinner.

CHESS. n. f. [echecs, Fr.] A nice and abstruse game, in which two sets of men are moved in opposition to each other.

This game the Persian magi did invent,
The force of Eastern wisdom to express;
From thence to busy Europeans sent,
And styl'd by modern Lombards pensive chefs. Denham.

So have I seen a king on chefs
(His rooks and knights withdrawn,
His queen and bishops in distress)
Shifting about, grow less and less,
With here and there a pawn. Dryden.

CHESS-APPLE. n. f. A species of Wild Service.

CHESS-BOARD. n. f. [from chefs and board.] The board or table on which the game of chefs is played.

And cards are dealt, and chefs-boards brought,
To ease the pain of coward thought. Prior.

CHESS-MAN. n. f. [from chefs and man.] A puppet for chefs.

A company of chefs-men standing on the same squares of the chefs-board where we left them, we say they are all in the same place, or unmoved. Locke.

CHESS-PLAYER. n. f. [from chefs and player.] A gamester at chefs.

Thus, like a skilful chefs-player, he draws out his men, and makes his pawns of use to his greater persons. Dryden.

CHESSOM. n. f. Mellow earth.

The tender cheffom and mellow earth is the best, being mere mould, between the two extremes of clay and sand; especially if it be not lomy and binding. Bacon's Natural History.

CHEST. n. f. [cýxte, Sax. cista, Lat.]

1. A box of wood, or other materials, in which things are laid up.

He will seek there, on my word: neither press, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places. Shakespeare.

But more have been by avarice oppress'd,
And heaps of money crouded in the chest. Dryden.

2. A CHEST of Drawers. A case with moveable boxes or drawers.

3. The trunk of the body, or cavity from the shoulders to the belly.

Such as have round faces, or broad chests, or shoulders, have seldom or never long necks. Brown.

He describes another by the largeness of his chest, and breadth of his shoulders.

Pope's Notes on the Iliad.
TO CHEST. v. a. [from the noun.] To repose in a chest; to hoard.

CHEST-FOUNDING. n. f. A disease in horses. It comes near to a pleurisy, or peripneumony, in a human body.

Farrier's Dictionary.

CHESTED. adj. [from chest.] Having a chest; as, broad-chested, narrow-chested.

CHE'STER. See CASTOR.

CHE'STNUT. n. f. [chastaigne, Fr.]

CHE'STNUT-TREE. n. f. [castanea, Lat.]

1. The tree hath katkins, which are placed at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree. The outer coat of the fruit is very rough, and has two or three nuts included in each husk or covering. This tree was formerly in greater plenty, as may be proved by the old buildings in London, which were, for the most part, of this timber; which is equal in value to the best oak, and, for many purposes, far exceeds it; particularly for making vessels for liquors; it having a property, when once thoroughly seasoned, to maintain its bulk constantly, and is not subject to shrink or swell, like other timber. Miller.

2. The fruit of the chestnut tree.

A woman's tongue,
That gives not half so great a blow to th' ear,
As will a chestnut in a farmer's fire. Shakespeare.

October has a basket of services, medlars, and chestnuts, and fruits that ripen at the latter time. Peacbam on Drawing.

3. The name of a brown colour.

His hair is of a good colour. —
An excellent colour: your chestnut was ever the only colour. Shakespeare.

Merab's long hair was glossy chestnut brown. Cowley.

CHE'STON. n. f. A species of plum.

CHEVALIER. n. f. [chevalier, Fr.] A knight; a gallant strong man.

Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid;
And I am low'd by a traitor villain,
And cannot help the noble chevalier. Shakespeare.

CHEVAUX de Frise. n. f. [Fr. The singular Cheval de Frise is seldom used.]

The Friesland horse, which is a piece of timber, larger or smaller, and traversed with wooden spikes, pointed with iron, five or six feet long; used in defending a passage, stopping a breach, or making a retrenchment to stop the cavalry. It is also called a turapike, or tourniquet. Chambers.

CHE'VEN. n. f. [chevesne, Fr.] A river-fish, the same with chub.

CHE'VERIL. n. f. [cheverreau, Fr.] A kid; kidleather. Obsolete.

A sentence is but a cheveril glove to a good wit: how quickly the wrong side may be turned outward. Shakespeare.

Which gifts the capacity
Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive,
If you might please to stretch it. Shakespeare.

O, here 's a wit of cheveril, that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad. Shakespeare.

Fortune, the foe of famous chevisance,
Seldom, said Guyon, yields to virtue aid. Spenser.

CHE'VRON. n. f. [French.] One of the honourable ordinaries in heraldry. It represents two rafters of a house, set up as they ought to stand. Harris.

TO CHEW. v. a. [cecyjan, Sax. kaurwen, Dutch. It is very frequently pronounced chaw, and perhaps properly.]

1. To grind with the teeth; to masticate.

If little faults, proceeding on distemper, Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our
eye,
When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested,
Appear before us? Shakespeare.

Pacing through the forest,
Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy. Shak.
This pious cheat, that never suck'd the blood,
Nor chew'd the flesh, of lambs. Dryden's Fables.

The yales
Descending gently, where the lowing herd
Chews verd'rous pasture. Pbilips.

By chewing, solid aliment is divided into small parts: in a human body, there is no other instrument to perform this action but the teeth. By the action of chewing, the spittle and mucus are squeezed from the glands, and mixed with the aliment; which action, if it be long continued, will turn the aliment into a sort of chyle.

2. To meditate; or ruminate in the thoughts.

While the fierce monk does at his trial stand,
He chews revenge, abjuring his offence:

Guile in his tongue, and murder in his hand,
He stabs his judge, to prove his innocence. Prior.

3. To taste without swallowing.

Heaven's in my mouth,
As if I did but chew its name. Shakespeare.

Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested:
that is, some books are to be read only in parts;
others to be read, but not curiously; and some few to be read wholly, with attention. Bacon.

To CHEW. v. n. To champ upon; to ruminate.

I will with patience hear, and find a time;
Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this. Shak.

Inculcate the doctrine of disobedience, and then leave the multitude to chew upon't. L'Estrange.

Old politicians chew on wisdom past,
And blunder on in business to the last. Pope.

CHICANE. n. f. [chicane, Fr. derived by Menage from the Spanish word chico, little.]

1. The art of protracting a contest by petty objection and artifice.

The general part of the civil law concerns not the chicane of private cases, but the affairs and intercourse of civilized nations, grounded upon the principles of reason. Locke.

His attorney have hardly one trick left; they are at an end of all their chicane.

Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

2. Artifice in general. This sense is only in familiar language.

Unwilling then in arms to meet,
He strove to lengthen his campaign,
And save his forces by chicane. Prior.

To CHICANE. v. n. [chicaner, Fr.] To prolong a contest by tricks.CHICANER. n. f. [chicaner, Fr.] A petty sophister; a trifling disputant; a wrangler.

This is the way to distinguish the two most different things I know, a logical chicaner from a man of reason. Locke.

CHICANERY. n. f. [chicanerie, Fr.] Sophistry; mean arts of wrangle.

His anger caused him to destroy the greatest part of these reports; and only to preserve such as discovered most of the chicanery and futility of the practice. Arbutnot.

CHICHES. n. f. See CHICKPEAS.

CHI'CHLING VETCH. n. f. [lathyrus, Lat.] In Germany they are cultivated, and eaten as peas, though neither so tender nor well tasted. *Miller.*CHICK. } n. f. [cicun, Sax. kiecken, CHI'CKEN. } Dutch. Chicken is, I believe, the old plural of chick, though now used as a singular noun.]

1. The young of a bird, particularly of a hen, or small bird.

All my pretty ones!
What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At one fell swoop! Shakespeare.

For when the shell is broke, out comes a chick.
Davitt.

While it is a chick, and hath no spurs, nor cannot hurt, nor hath seen the motion, yet he readily

Even since she was a seven-night old, they say,
Was chaste and humble to her dying day;
Nor chick, nor hen, was known to disobey.

Dryden's Fables.
Having the notion that one laid the egg out of which the other was hatched, I have a clear idea of the relation of dam and chick. Locke.

On rainy days alone I dine,
Upon a chick and pint of wine:
On rainy days I dine alone,
And pick my chicken to the bone. Swift.

2. A word of tenderness.

My Ariel, chick,
This is thy charge. Shakespeare.

3. A term for a young girl.

Then, Chloe, still go on to prate
Of thirty-six and thirty-eight;
Pursue your trade of scandal-picking,
Your hints, that Stella is no chicken. Swift.

CHI'CKENHEARTED. adj. [from chicken and heart.] Cowardly; timorous; fearful.

Now we set up for tilting in the pit,
Where 'tis agreed by bullies, chickenhearted,
To fright the ladies first, and then be parted.

Prologue to Spanish Fryar.

CHI'CKENPOX. n. f. An exanthematous distemper, so called from its being of no very great danger.

CHI'CKLING. n. f. [from chick.] A small chicken.CHI'CKPEAS. n. f. [from chick and pea.] A kind of degenerate pea. *Miller.*CHI'CKWEED. n. f. [from chick and weed.] The name of a plant.

Green mint, or chickweed, are of good use in all the hard swellings of the breast, occasioned by milk. Wiseman.

To CHIDE. v. a. preter. chid or chode, part. chid or chidden. [chidu, Sax.]

1. To reprove; to check; to correct with words: applied to persons.

Chide him for faults, and do it reverently,
When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth.
Shakespeare.

And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove. Shak.
Those, that do teach your babes,

Do it with gentle means, and easy talks;
He might have chid me so: for, in good faith,
I am a child to chiding. Shakespeare.

Scylla wept,
And chid her barking waves into attention. Milton.

Above the waves as Neptune shew'd his face,
To chide the winds, and save the Trojan race.
Waller.

You look, as if you stern philosopher
Had just now chid you. Addison.

If any woman of better fashion in the parish happened to be absent from church, they were sure of a visit from him, to chide and to dine with her. Swift.

2. To drive with reproof.

Margaret my queen, and Clifford too,
Have chid me from the battle. Shakespeare.

3. To blame; to reproach: applied to things.

Winds murmur'd through the leaves your long delay,

And fountains, o'er the pebbles, chid your stay.
Dryden.

I chid the folly of my thoughtless haste;
For, the work perfected, the joy was past. Prior.

To CHIDE. v. n.

1. To clamour; to scold.

What had he to do to chide at me? Shakespeare.
Next morn, betimes, the bride was missing:

The mother scream'd, the father chid,
Where can this idle wench be hid? Swift.

2. To quarrel with.

The business of the state does him offence,
And he does chide with you. Shakespeare.

3. To make a noise.

My duty,
As does a rock against the chiding flood,
Should the approach of this wild river break,
And stand unshaken yours. Shakespeare.

CHI'DER. n. f. [from chide.] A rebuker; a reprover.

Not her that chides, Sir, at any hand, I pray,—
I love no chiders, Sir. Shakespeare.

CHIEF. adj. [chef, the head, Fr.]

1. Principal; most eminent; above the rest in any respect.

These were the chief of the officers that were over Solomon's works.

The hand of the princes and rulers hath been chief in this trespass. Exra.

Your country, chief in arms, abroad defend;
At home, with morals, arts, and laws amend.
Pope.

2. Eminent; extraordinary.

A sroward man soweth strife, and a whisperer

3. Capital; of the first order; that to which other parts are inferior, or subordinate.

I came to have a good general view of the apostle's main purpose in writing the epistle, and the chief branches of his discourse wherein he prosecuted it. Locke.

4. It is used by some writers with a superlative termination; but, I think, improperly: the comparative chiefer is never found.

We beseech you, bend you to remain
Here in the cheer and comfort of our eye,
Our chiefst courtier, cousin, and our son. Shak.
Doeg an Edomite, the chiefst of the herdmen.

He sometimes denied admission to the chiefst officers of the army. Clarendon.

CHIEF. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A military commander; a leader of armies; a captain.

Is pain to them
Less pain, less to be fled? or thou than they Less hardy to endure? courageous chief!
The first in flight from pain. Milton's Par. Lost.

After or before were never known
Such chiefs; as each an army seem'd alone. Dryd.

A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod;
An honest man's the noblest work of God. Pope.

A prudent chief not always must display
His pow'rs in equal ranks, and fair array;
But with th' occasion and the place comply,
Conceal his force, may seem sometimes to fly. Pope.

2. In CHIEF, in law. In capite, by personal service.

All sums demandable, either for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, or for the pardon of any such alienation already made without licence, have been stayed in the way to the hanaper. Bacon.

I shall be proud to hold my dependance on you in chief, as I do part of my small fortune in Wiltshire. Dryden.

3. In

3. In Spenser it seems to signify somewhat like achievement; a mark of distinction.

Where be the nosegays that she dight for thee?
The coloured chaplets wrought with a chief,
The knottish rush-rings, and gilt rosemary?
Spenser.

4. In heraldry.

The chief is so called of the French word chef, the head or upper part: this possesses the upper third part of the escutcheon. Peacock on Drawing.

CHIEFDOM. n. f. [from chief.] Sovereignty. Not in use.

CHILIFA'CTORY. adj. [from chile.] That which has the quality of making chile.

We should rather rely upon a chilifactory menstruum, or digestive preparation drawn from species or individuals, whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapideous bodies. Brown.

CHILIFICATION. n. f. [from chile.] The act of making chile.

Nor will we affirm that iron is indigested in the stomach of the ostriche; but we suspect this effect to proceed not from any liquid reduction, or tendence to chilification, by the power of natural heat. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CHILL. adj. [cele, Sax.]

1. Cold; that which is cold to the touch.

And all my plants I save from nightly ill,
Of noisome winds, and blasting vapours chill. Mil.

2. Cold; having the sensation of cold; shivering with cold.

My heart and my chill veins freeze with despair. Rover.

3. Dull; not warm; not forward: as, a chill reception.

4. Depressed; dejected; discouraged.

5. Unaffectionate; cold of temper.

CHILL. n. f. [from the adjective.] Chills; cold.

I very well know one to have a sort of chill about his precordia and head. Derham's Physico-Theology.

To CHILL. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make cold.

Age has not yet
So shrunk my sinews, or so chill'd my veins,
But conscious virtue in my breast remains. Dryden.
Heat burns his rife, frost chills his setting beam;
And vex the world with opposite extremes. Creteb.
Each changing season does its poison bring;
Rheums chill the winter, agues blast the spring. Prior.

Now no more the drum
Provokes to arms; or trumpet's clangor shrill
Affrights the wives, or chills the virgin's blood. Philips.

2. To depress; to deject; to discourage.

Every thought on God chills the gaiety of his spirits, and awakens terrors which he cannot bear. Rogers.

3. To blast with cold.

The fruits perish on the ground,
Or soon decay, by snows inmod'rate chill'd,
By winds are blasted, or by lightning kill'd. Blackmore.

CHILLINESS. n. f. [from chilly.] A sensation of shivering cold.

If the patient survives three days, the acuteness of the pain abates, and a chilliness or shivering affects the body. Arbutnot.

CHILLY. adj. [from chill.] Somewhat cold.

A chilly sweat bedews
My shudd'ring limbs. Philips.

CHIL'NESS. n. f. [from chill.] Coldness; want of warmth.

If you come out of the sun suddenly into a shade, there followeth a chil'ness or shivering in all the body. Bacon.

This while he thinks, he lifts aloft his dart,
A generous chil'ness seizes ev'ry part,
The veins pour back the blood, and fortify the heart. Dryden.

CHIME. n. f. [kime, Dutch.] The end of a barrel or tub.

CHIME. n. f. [The original of this word is doubtful. Junius and Minsbew suppose it corrupted from cimbal; Skinner from gamme, or gamut; Henshaw from chiamare, to call, because the chime calls to church. Perhaps it is only softened from chirme, or churm, an old word for the sound of many voices, or instruments making a noise together.]

1. The consonant or harmonick sound of many correspondent instruments.

Hang our shaggy thighs with bells;
That, as we do strike a tune,
In our dance shall make a chime. Ben Jonson.

The sound
Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard of harp and organ. Milton's Par. Lost.

Love virtue, she alone is free;
She can teach you how to climb
Higher than the spherie chime. Milton.

2. The correspondence of sound.

Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhyme,
The motion measur'd, harmoniz'd the chime. Dryd.

3. The sound of bells, not rung by ropes, but struck with hammers. In this sense it is always used in the plural, chimes.

We have heard the chimes at midnight. Shakespeare.

4. The correspondence of proportion or relation.

The conceptions of things are placed in their several degrees of similitude; as in several proportions, one to another: in which harmonious chimes, the voice of reason is often drowned. Græw's Cosmologia.

To CHIME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sound in harmony or consonance.

To make the rough recital aptly chime,
Or bring the sum of Gallia's loss to rhyme,
'Tis mighty hard. Prior.

2. To correspond in relation or proportion.

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, do belong one to another; and, through custom, do readily chime, and answer one another, in people's memories. Locke.

3. To agree; to fall in with.

He not only sat quietly and heard his father rail'd at, but often chimed in with the discourse. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

4. To suit with; to agree.

Any sect, whose reasonings, interpretation, and language, I have been used to, will, of course, make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strange, and uncouth to me. Locke.

5. To jingle; to clatter.

But with the meaner tribe I'm forc'd to chime,
And, wanting strength to rise, descend to rhyme. Smith.

To CHIME. v. a.

1. To move, or strike, or cause to sound harmonically, or with just consonance.

With lifted arms they order ev'ry blow,
And chime their sounding hammers in a row;
With labour'd anvils Ætina groans below. Dryden's Georgicks.

2. To strike a bell with a hammer.

CHIME'RA. n. f. [Chimæra, Lat.] A vain and wild fancy, as remote from reality as the existence of the poetical Chimera, a monster feigned to have the head of a lion, the belly of a goat, and the tail of a dragon.

In short, the force of dreams is of a piece, Chimeras all, and more absurd, or less. Dryd. Fab.

No body joins the voice of a sheep with the shape of a horse, to be the complex ideas of any real substances, unless he has a mind to fill his head with chimeras, and his discourse with unintelligible words. Locke.

CHIME'RAL. adj. [from chimera.] Imaginary; fanciful; wildly, vainly, or fantasticaly conceived; fantastick.

Notwithstanding the fineness of this allegory may atone for it in some measure, I cannot think that persons of such a chimerical existence are proper actors in an epic poem. Spectator.

CHIME'RICALLY. adv. [from chimerical.] Vainly; wildly; fantasticaly.

CHIMINAGE. n. f. [from chimin, an old law word for a road.] A toll for passage through a forest. Cowell.

CHIMNEY. n. f. [cheminée, French.]

1. The passage through which the smoke ascends from the fire in the house.

Climnies with scorn rejecting smoke. Swift.

2. The turret raised above the roof of the house, for conveyance of the smoke.

The oight has been unruly: where we lay,
Our chimnies were blown down. Shakespeare.

3. The fire-place.

The chimney
Is south the chamber; and the chimney-piece, Chaste Dian bathing. Shakespeare.

The fire which the Chaldeans worshipped for a god, is crept into every man's chimney. Raleigh's History.

Low offices, which some neighbours hardly think it worth stirring from their chimney sides to obtain. Swift on Sac. Test.

CHIMNEY-CORNER. n. f. [from chimney and corner.] The fire-side; the seat on each end of the firegrate: usually noted in proverbial language for being the place of idlers.

Yet some old men

Tell stories of you in their chimney-corner. Denham.

CHIMNEYPIECE. n. f. [from chimney and piece.] The ornamental piece of wood, or stone, that is set round the fire-place.

Polish and brighten the marble hearths and chimneypieces with a clout dipt in grease. Swift.

CHIMNEYSWEEPER. n. f. [from chimney and sweeper.]

1. One whose trade it is to clean foul chimnies of soot.

To look like her, are chimney sweepers black;
And since her time are colliers counted bright.

Shakespeare.

The little chimney sweeper skulks along,
And marks with footy stains the heedless throng.

Gay.

Even lying Ned, the chimney sweeper of Savoy, and Tom the Portugal dustman, put in their claims.

Arbutnot.

2. It is used proverbially for one of a mean and vile occupation.

Golden lads and girls, all must,

As chimney sweepers, come to dust. Shakespeare.

CHIN. n. f. [cinne, Sax. kinn, Germ.] The part of the face beneath the under lip.

But all the words I could get of her, was wrying her waist, and thrusting out her chin. Sidney.

With his Amazonian chin he drove
The bristled lips before him. Shakespeare.

He rais'd his hardy head, which sunk again,
And, sinking on his bosom, knock'd his chin.

Dryden.

CHINA. n. f. [from China, the country where it is made.] China ware; porcelain; a species of vessels made in China, dimly transparent, partaking of the qualities of earth and glass. They are made by mingling two kinds of earth, of which one easily vitrifies; the other resists a very strong heat: when the vitrifiable earth is melted into glass, they are completely burnt.

Spleen, vapours, or small-pox, above them all;
And mistress of herself, tho' china fall. Pope.

After supper, carry your plate and china together in the same basket. Swift.

CHINA-ORANGE. n. f. [from China and orange.] The sweet orange: brought originally from China.

Nut many years has the China-orange been propagated in Portugal and Spain. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CHINA-ROOT. n. f. [from China and root.] A medicinal root, brought originally from China.

CHINCOUGH. n. f. [perhaps more properly kinough, from kinckin, to pant, Dut. and cough.] A violent and convulsive cough, to which children are subject.

I have observed a chinough, complicated with an intermitting fever. Floyer on the Humours.

CHINE. n. f. [eschine, Fr. schiena, Ital. spina, Lat. cein, Arm.]

1. The part of the back in which the spine or back bone is found.

She strake him such a blow upon his chine, that she opened all his body. Sidney.

He presents her with the tuskly head,
And chine with rising bristles roughly spread. Dryden.

2. A piece of the back of an animal.

Cut out the bawly boned clowns in chines of beef ere thou sleep. Shakespeare.

He had killed eight fat hops for this season, and he had dealt about his chines very liberally amongst his neighbours. Speater.

TO CHINE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut into chines.

He that in his line did chine the long ribb'd Apennine. Dryden.

CHINK. n. f. [cinan, to gape, Sax.] A small aperture longwise; an opening or gap between the parts of any thing.

Pyramus and Thisbe did talk through the chink of a wall. Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream.

Plagues also have been raised by anointing the chinks of doors, and the like. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Though birds have no epiglottis, yet, they so contract the chink of their lariox, as to prevent the admission of wet or dry indigested.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Other inventions, false and absurd, that are like so many chinks and holes to discover the rottenness of the whole fabrick. Soutb.

In vain the search'd each cranny of the house,
Each gaping chink impervious to a mouse. Swift.

TO CHINK. v. a. [derived by Skinner from the sound.] To shake so as to make a sound.

He chinks his purse, and takes his seat of state:
With ready quills the dedicators wait.

Pope's Dunciad.

TO CHINK. v. n. To sound by striking each other.

Lord Strat's money shines as bright, and chinks
as well, as 'squire South's.

Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

When not a guinea chink'd on Martin's boards,
And Atwill's self was drain'd of all his hoards.

Swift.

CHINKY. adj. [from chink.] Full of holes; gaping; opening into narrow clefts.

But plaister thou the chinky hives with clay.

Dryden's Virgil.

Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn
An everlasting foe, with watchful eye
Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,
Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice Sure ruin. Philips's Poems.

CHINTS. n. f. Cloth of cotton made in India, and printed with colours.

Let a charming chints, and Brussels lace,
Wrap my cold limbs, and shade my lifeless face.

Pope.

CHIOPPINE. n. f. [from chapin, Span.] A high shoe, formerly worn by ladies.

Your ladyship is nearer heaven than when I saw you last, by the altitude of a chioppine. Shakespeare.

The woman was a giantess, and yet walked always in chioppines. Covley.

CHIP, CHEAP, CHIPPING, in the names of places, imply a market; from the Saxon cyppan, ceapan, to buy. Gibson.

TO CHIP. v. a. [probably corrupted from chop.] To cut into small pieces; to diminish, by cutting away a little at a time.

His mangled Myrmidons,
Noseless, handleless, hackt and chipt, come to him,
Crying on Hector. Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.

To return to our statue in the block of marble,
we see it sometimes only begun to be chipped;
sometimes rough hewn, and just sketched into an human figure. Addison's Spectator.

The critic strikes out all that is not just;
And 'tis ev'n to the butler chips his crust. King.

Industry

Taught him to chip the wood, and hew the stone.

Thomson.

CHIP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A small piece taken off by a cutting instrument.

Cucumbers do extremely affect moisture, and over-drink themselves, which chaff or chips for-biddeth. Bacon.

That chip made iron swim, not by natural power.

Daylor.

The straw was laid below;
Of chips and ferewood was the second row.

Dryden's Fables.

2. A small piece, however made.
The manganese lies in the vein in lumps wrecked, in an irregular manner, among clay, spar, and chips of stone. Woodward.

CHIPPING. n. f. [from To chip.] A fragment cut off.

They dung their land with the chippings of a sort of soft stone. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The chippings and filings of these jewels, could they be preserved, are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors. Felton on the Classics.

CHIRAGRICAL. adj. [from chiragra,
Lat.] Having the gout in the hand;
subject to the gout in the hand.

Chirurgical persons do suffer in the finger as well as in the rest, and sometimes first of all.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CHIROGRAPHER. n. f. [χαιρ, the hand, and γραφω, to write.] He that exercises or professes the art or business of writing.

Thus passeth it from this office to the chirogra-pher's, to be engrossed. Bacon's Office of Alienation.

CHIROGRAPHERIST. n. f. [See CHIRO-GRAPHER.] This word is used in the following passage, I think, improperly, for one that tells fortunes by examining the hand: the true word is chiroscopist, or chiromancer.

Let the physiognomists examine his features; let the chiroscopists behold his palm; but, above all, let us consult for the calculation of his nativity.

Arbutnot and Pope.

CHIROGRAPHY. n. f. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] The art of writing.

CHIROMANCY. n. f. [See CHIRO-MANCY.] One that foretels future events by inspecting the hand.

The middle sort, who have not much to spare,
To chiromancers' cheaper art repair,
Who clap the pretty palm, to make the lines more fair. Dryden's Juvenal.

CHIROMANCY. n. f. [χαιρ, the hand, and μαντις, a prophet.] The art of foretelling the events of life, by inspecting the hand.

There is not much considerable in that doctrine of chiromancy, that spots in the top of the nails do signify things past; in the middle, things present;
and at the bottom, events to come.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO CHIRP. v. n. [perhaps contracted from cheer up. The Dutch have circken.]

To make a cheerful noise; as birds, when they call without singing.

She chirping ran, he peeping flew away,
Till hard by them both he and she did stay.

Sidney.

Came he right now to sing a raven's note;
And thinks he that the chirping of a wren

Can chase away the first conceived sound? Shak.

No chirping lark the welkin sheen invokes.

Gay's Pastorals.

The careful hen

Calls all her chirping family around.

Thomson's Spring.

TO CHIRP. v. a. [This seems apparently corrupted from cheer up.] To make cheerful.

Let no sober bigot here think it a sin
To push on the chirping and moderate bottle.

Johnson.

Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks;
He takes his chirping pint, he cracks his jokes.

Pope.

CHIRP. n. f. [from the verb.] The voice of birds or insects.

Winds

Winds over us whisper'd, flocks by us did bleat,
And chirp went the grasshopper under our feet.

Spektor.

CHIRPER. n. f. [from chirp.] One that chirps; one that is cheerful.

To CHIRRE. v. n. [ceopman, Sax.] See CHURME. To coo as a pigeon. Junius.

CHIRURGEON. n. f. [χειρουργος, from χειρ, the hand, and εργον, work.] One that cures ailments, not by internal medicines, but outward applications. It is now generally pronounced, and by many written, surgeon.

When a man's wounds cease to smart, only because he has lost his feeling, they are nevertheless mortal, for his not feeling his need of a chirurgon.

South's Sermons.

CHIRURGERY. n. f. [from chirurgion.] The art of curing by external applications. This is called urgery.

Gynecia having skill in chirurgery, an art in those days much esteemed.

Sidney.

Nature does nothing in her case without the help of chirurgery, in drying up the luxurious flesh, and making way to pull out the rotten bones.

Wiseman.

CHIRURGICAL. } adj. See CHIRUR- CHIRURGICK. } GEON.

1. Having qualities useful in outward applications to hurts.

As to the chirurgical or physical virtues of wax, it is reckoned a mean between hot and cold.

Mortimer.

2. Relating to the manual part of healing.

3. Manual in general, consisting in operations of the hand. This sense, though the first according to etymology, is now scarce found.

The chirurgical or manual part doth refer to the making instruments, and exercising particular experiments.

Wilkins.

CHISEL. n. f. [ciseau, Fr. of scissum, Lat.] An instrument with which wood or stone is pared away.

What fine chisel

Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,
For I will kiss her.

Shakespeare.

There is such a seeming softness in the limbs, as if not a chisel had hewed them out of stone, but a pencil had drawn and stroked them in oil.

Watson's Architecture.

Imperfect shapes: in marble such are seen,
When the rude chisel does the man begin.

Dryden.

To CHISEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut with a chisel.

CHIT. n. f. [according to Dr. Hicker, from kind, Germ. child; perhaps from ebico, little, Span.]

1. A child; a baby. Generally used of young persons in contempt.

These will appear such chits in story,
Twill turn all polities to jest.

Anonymous.

2. The shoot of corn from the end of the grain. A cant term with maltsters.

Barley, couched four days, will begin to shew the chit or sprit at the root-end.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. A freckle. [from chick-pease.] In this sense it is seldom used.

To CHIT. v. n. [from the noun.] To sprout; to shoot at the end of the grain: cant.

I have known barley chit in seven hours after it had been thrown forth.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

CHITCHAT. n. f. [corrupted by reduplication from chat.] Prattle; idle prate; idle talk. A word only used in ludicrous conversation.

I am a member of a female society, who call ourselves the chitchat club.

Spektor.

CHITTERLINGS. n. f. without singular. [from schyster lingh, Dut. Minsherv;

from kutteln, Germ. Skinner.] The guts; the bowels. Skinner.

CHITTY. adj. [from chit.] Childish; like a baby.

CHIVALROUS. adj. [from chivalry.] Relating to chivalry, or errant knight-hood; knightly; warlike; adventurous; daring. A word now out of use.

And noble minds of yore allid were

In brave pursuit of chivalrous emprise.

Fairy Q.

CHIVALRY. n. f. [chevalerie, Fr. knight-hood, from cheval, a horse; as equus in Latin.]

1. Knight-hood; a military dignity.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry; which, nevertheless, are conferred promiscuously upon soldiers and no soldiers.

Bacon's Essays.

2. The qualifications of a knight; as, valour, dexterity in arms.

Thou hast slain

The flow'r of Europe for his chivalry.

Shakespeare.

I may speak it to my shame,

I have a truant been to chivalry.

Shakespeare.

3. The general system of knight-hood.

Solemnly he swore,

That, by the faith which knights to knight-hood bore,

And what'er else to chivalry belongs,

He would not cease till he reveng'd their wrongs.

Dryden.

4. An adventure; an exploit. Not now in use.

They four doing acts more dangerous, though less famous, because they were but private chivalries.

Sidney.

5. The body or order of knights.

And by his light

Did all the chivalry of England move
To do brave acts.

Shakespeare.

6. In law.

Servitium militare, of the French chevalier; a tenure of land by knight's service. There is no land but is holden mediately or immediately of the crown, by some service or other; and therefore are all our freeholds, that are to us and our heirs, called feuda, fees, as proceeding from the benefit of the king. As the king gave to the nobles large possessions for this or that rent and service, so they parcelled out their lands, so received for rents and services, as they thought good: and those services are by Littleton divided into chivalry and socage. The one is martial and military; the other, clownish and rustick. Chivalry, therefore, is a tenure of service, whereby the tenant is bound to perform some noble or military office unto his lord: and is of two sorts; either regal, that is, such as may hold only of the king; or such as may also hold of a common person as well as of the king. That which may hold only of the king, is properly called sergeantry; and is again divided into grand or petit, i. e. great or small. Chivalry that may hold of a common person, as well as of the king, is called scutagem.

Cowell.

7. It ought properly to be written chevalry. It is a word not much used, but in old poems or romances.

CHIVES. n. f. [chive, Fr. Skinner.]

1. The threads or filaments rising in flowers with seeds at the end.

The masculine or prolific seed contained in the chives or apices of the flamina.

Ray on the Creation.

2. A species of small onion. Skinner.

CHLOROSIS. n. f. [from χλωρος, green.] The green-sickness.

To CHOAK. See CHOKE.

CHOCOLATE. n. f. [chocolate, Span.]

1. The nut of the cacao tree.

The tree hath a rose flower, of a great number of petals, from whose empalement arises the pointal, being a tube cut into many parts, which becomes a fruit shaped somewhat like a cucumber, and deeply furrowed, in which are contained several seeds, collected into an oblong heap, and slit down, somewhat like almonds. It is a native of America, and is found in great plenty in several places between the tropicks, and grows wild. See COCOA.

Miller.

2. The cake or mass, made by grinding the kernel of the cacao nut with other substances, to be dissolved in hot water.

The Spaniards were the first who brought chocolate into use in Europe, to promote the consumption of their cacao-nuts, achiot, and other drugs, which their West Indies furnish, and which enter the composition of chocolate.

Chambers.

3. The liquor made by a solution of chocolate in hot water.

Chocolate is certainly much the best of these three exotic liquors: its oil seems to be both rich, alimentary, and anodyne.

Artub. on Alim.

In fumes of burning chocolate shall glow,

And tremble at the sea that froths below!

Pope.

CHOCOLATE-HOUSE. n. f. [chocolate and house.] A house where company is entertained with chocolate.

Ever since that time, Lisander has been twice a day at the chocolate-house.

Tatler.

CHODE. [the old preterite from chide.] See CHIDE.

And Jacob was wroth, and chode with Laban.

Genesis.

CHOICE. n. f. [choix, French.]

1. The act of choosing; determination between different things proposed; election.

If you oblige me suddenly to chuse,
The choice is made; for I must both refuse.

Soft elocution doth thy style renown,
Gentle or sharp, according to thy choice,

To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice.

Dryd. Persus.

2. The power of choosing; election.

Choice there is not, unless the thing which we take be so in our power, that we might have refused it. If fire consume the stable, it chooseth not so to do, because the nature thereof is such that it can do no other.

Hosker.

There's no liberty like the freedom of having it at my own choice, whether I will live to the world, or to myself.

L'Estrange.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice. Whereas, all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will.

Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

Whether he will remove his contemplation from one idea to another, is many times in his choice.

Locke.

3. Care in choosing; curiosity of distinction.

Julius Cæsar did write a collection of apophthegms: it is pity his book is lost; for I imagine they were collected with judgment and choice.

Bacon's Apophthegms.

4. The thing chosen; the thing taken, or approved, in preference to others.

Your choice is not so rich in birth as beauty;
That you might well enjoy her.

Shakespeare.

Take to thee, from among the cherubim,
Thy choice of flaming warriors.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Now, Mars, she said, let fame exalt her voice;
Nor let thy conquests only be her choice.

Ps. 119.

5. The

5. The best part of any thing, that is more properly the object of choice.

The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the Psalms do both more briefly contain, and more movingly also express. Hooker.

Thou art a mighty prince: in the choice of our sepulchres bury thy dead. Genfis.

Their riders, the flow'r and choice

Of many provinces, from bound to bound. Milton.

6. Several things proposed at once, as objects of judgment and election.

A braver choice of dauntless spirits

Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakespeare.

7. To make CHOICE of. To choose; to take from several things proposed.

Wisdom of what herself approves makes choice,
Nor is led captive by the common voice. Denham.

CHOICE. adj. [choisi, French.]

1. Select; of extraordinary value.

After having set before the king the choicest of wines and fruits, he told him the best part of his entertainment was to come. Guardian.

Thus, in a sea of folly tofs'd,

My choicest hours of life are lost. Swift.

2. Chary; frugal; careful. Used of persons.

He that is choice of his time, will also be choice of his company, and choice of his actions.

Taylor's Holy Living.

CHOICELESS. adj. [from choice.] Without the power of choosing; without right of choice; not free.

Neither the weight of the matter of which the cylinder is made, nor the round vobule form of it, are any more imputable to that dead choiceless creature, than the first motion of it; and, therefore, it cannot be a fit resemblance to shew the reconcilableness of fate with choice. Hammond.

CHOICELY. adv. [from choice.]

1. Curiously; with exact choice.

A band of men,
Collected choicely from each county some. Shak.

2. Valuably; excellently.

It is certain it is choicely good. Walton's Angler.

CHOICENESS. n. f. [from choice.] Nicety; particular value.

Carry into the shade such auriculas, seedlings, or plants, as are for their choiceness reserved in pots. Evelyn's Kalendar.

We fend the graces and the muses forth

To civilize and to instruct the North. Waller.

Musæus first, then Orpheus, civilize
Mankind, and give the world their deities. Denham.

Amongst those who are counted the civilized part of mankind, this original law of nature still takes place. Locke.

Osiris, or Bacchus, is reported to have civilized the Indians, and reigned amongst them fifty-two years. Arbutnot.

CIVILIZER. n. f. [from civilize.] He that reclaims others from a wild and savage life; he that teaches the rules and customs of civility.

The civilizers! — the disturbers say;
The robbers, the corrupters of mankind!

Philips's Briton.

CIVILLY. adv. [from civil.]

1. In a manner relating to government, or to the rights or character of a member of a community; not naturally.

Men that are civil lead their lives after one common law; for that a multitude should, without harmony, concur in the doing of one thing (for this is civilly to live), or should manage community of life, it is not possible. Hooker.

2. Not criminally.

That accusation, which is publick, is either civilly commenced for the private satisfaction of the party injured; or else criminally, that is, for some publick punishment. Ayliffe.

3. Politely; complaisantly; gently; without rudeness; without brutality.

I will deal civilly with his poems: nothing ill is to be spoken of the dead. Dryden's Pref. to his Fables.

ness of the bark, cause prickles in boughs.

Bacon's Natural History.

5. Recluseness; solitude; retirement.

I thus neglecting worldly ends, all dedicated
To closeness, and the bettering of my mind. Shak.

6. Secrecy; privacy.

To his confederates he was constant and just, but not open. Such was his enquiry, and such his closeness, as they stood in the light towards him, and he stood in the dark towards them.

Bacon's Henry VII.

A journey of much adventure had been not communicated with any of his majesty's counsellors, being carried with great closeness, liker a business of love than state. Watson.

We rise not against the piercing judgment of Augustus, nor the extreme caution or closeness of Tiberius. Bacon's Essays.

This prince was so very reserved, that he would impart his secrets to no body: whereupon this closeness did a little perish his understanding.

Collier of Friendship.

7. Covetousness; sly avarice.

Irus judged, that while he could keep his poverty a secret, he should not feel it: he improved this thought into an affectation of closeness and co-vetousness. Addison's Spectator.

8. Connection; dependance.

The actions and proceedings of wise men run in greater closeness and coherence with one another, than thus to drive at a casual issue, brought under no forecast or design. South.

This idea, which we may call the goddess of painting and of sculpture, descends upon the marble and the cloth, and becomes the original of these arts. Dryden.

4. Any texture put to a particular use.

The king stood up under his clot of state, took the sword from the protector, and dubbed the Lord Mayor of London knight. Sir John Hayward.

I'll make the very green cloth to look blue. Ben Jonson.

5. Dress; raiment.

I'll ne'er distrust my God for cloth and bread,
While lilies flourish, and the raven's fed. Quarles.

6. Cloth, taken absolutely, commonly means a texture of wool.

7. In the plural. Dress; habit; garment; vesture; vestments: including whatever covering is worn on the body. In this sense always clothes, pronounced clo's.

He with him brought Pryene, rich array'd
In Claribellæ's clothes. Spenser.

Take up these clothes here quickly: carry them to the laundress in Datchet-mead. Shakespeare.

Strength grows more from the warmth of exercises than of cloaths. Temple.

8. The covering of a bed.

Gazing on her midnight foes,
She turn'd each way, her frighted head,
Then sunk it deep beneath the clothes. Prior.

CLOUDS.

CLOUD. n. s. [The derivation is not known. Minsheu derives it from claudo, to shut; Somner from clod; Cajaubon from αχλὺς, darkness; Skinner from kladde, Dutch, a spot.]

1. The dark collection of vapours in the air.

Now are the clouds, that lower'd upon our house,
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried.

Shakspeare. Richard III.

As a mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend; so a vapour, and therefore a watery cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend, to that height in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain suspended, till, by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops; either small, as in a mist; or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain.

Greav's Cosmologia.

Clouds are the greatest and most considerable of all the meteors, as furnishing water and plenty to the earth. They consist of very small drops of water, and are elevated a good distance above the surface of the earth; for a cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below.

Locke.

How vapours, turn'd to clouds, obscure the sky;
And clouds, dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply.

Johnson.

The dawn is overcast, the morning low'rs,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day.

Addison.

2. The veins, marks, or stains, in stones or other bodies.

3. Any state of obscurity or darkness.

The poets may of inspiration boast,
Their rage, ill govern'd, in the clouds is lost.

Waller.

How can I see the brave and young
Fall in the cloud of war, and fall unsung?

Addison.

4. Anything that spreads wide; as a crowd, a multitude.

The objection comes to no more than this, that, amongst a cloud of witnesses, there was one of no very good reputation.

Atterbury.

TO CLOUD. v. d. [from the noun.]

1. To darken with clouds; to cover with clouds; to obscure.

2. To make of fullen and gloomy appearance.

Be not dishearten'd then, nor cloud those looks,
That want to be more cheerful and serene.

Milton.

3. To obscure; to make less evident.

If men would not exhale vapours to cloud and darken the clearest truths, no man could miss his way to heaven for want of light.

Decay of Piety.

4. To variegate with dark veins.

The hand's smooth and plain,
Made of the clouded olive's easy grain.

Pope.

TO CLOUD. v. n. To grow cloudy; to grow dark with clouds.

On th' other's helmer, which as Titan shone,
That quite it clove his plumed crest in tway.

Fairy Queen.

CLOVE. n. s. [clou, Fr. a nail, from the similitude of a clove to a nail.]

1. A valuable spice brought from Ternate in the East Indies. It is the fruit or seed of a very large tree.

Clove seems to be the rudiment or beginning of a fruit growing upon clove-trees.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Some of the parts into which garlick separates, when the outer skin is torn off. [In this sense it is derived from clove, the preterite of cleave.]

'Tis mortal sin an onion to devour;
Each clove of garlick is a sacred power.

Tate's Jew.

CLOVE-GILLYFLOWER. n. s. [from its smelling like cloves.]

This genus may be divided into three classes:

1. The clove-gillyflower, or carnation. 2. The pink. 3. The sweet William. The carnation, or clove-gillyflower, are distinguished into four classes. The first, called flakes, having two colours only, and their stripes large, going quite through the leaves. The second, called bizars, have flowers striped or variegated with three or four different colours. The third are piquettes; these flowers have always a white ground, and are spotted with scarlet, red, purple, or other colours. The fourth are called painted ladies; these have their petals of a red or purple colour on the upper side, and are white underneath. Of each of these classes there are numerous varieties. The true clove-gillyflower has been long in use for making a cordial syrup. There are two or three varieties commonly brought to the markets, which differ greatly in goodness; some having very little scent, when compared with the truefort.

Miller.

CLO'VEN. part. pret. [from cleave.] See TO CLEAVE.

There is Aufidius, list you what work he makes Among your cloven army.

CLUMSINESS. n. s. [from clumsy.] Awkwardness; ungainliness; want of readiness, nimbleness, or dexterity.

The drudging part of life is chiefly owing to clumsiness and ignorance, which either wants proper tools, or skill to use them. Collier on Fame.

CLUMSY, adj. [This word, omitted in the other etymologies, is rightly derived by Bailey from lumpsch, Dutch, stupid. In English, lump, clump, lumpish, clumpish, clumpishly, clumsily, clumsy.] Awkward; heavy; artless; unhandy; without dexterity, readiness, or grace. It is used either of persons, or actions, or things.

The matter ductile and sequacious, apt to be moulded into such shapes and machines, even by clumsy fingers. Ray.

But thou in clumsy verse, unlick'd, unpointed,
Hast shamefully desy'd. Dryden.

That clumsy outside of a porter,
How could it thus conceal a courtier? Swift.

CLUNG. The preterite and participle of cling.

CLUNG. adj. [clungu, Sax.] Wasted with leanness; shrunk up with cold.

To CLUNG. v. n. [clingan, Sax.] To dry as wood does, when it is laid up after it is cut. See To CLING.

CLUSTER. n. f. [κλύστηρ, Sax. klyster, Dutch.]

1. A bunch; a number of things of the same kind growing or joined together.

Grapes will continue fresh and moist all winter, if you hang them cluster by cluster in the roof of a warm room. Bacon.

A swelling knot is rais'd;
Whence, in short space, itself the cluster shows,
And from earth's moisture, mixt with sun-beams, grows. Derbam.

The saline corpuscles of one liquor do variously act upon the tinging corpuscles of another, so as to make many of them associate into a cluster, whereby two transparent liquors may compose a coloured one. Newton.

An elm was near, to whose embraces led,
The curling vine her swelling clusters spread. Pope.

2. A number of animals gathered together.

As bees
Pour forth their populous youth about the hive
In clusters. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There with their clasping feet together clung,
And a long cluster from the laurel hung. Dryden.

3. A body of people collected: used in contempt.

We lov'd him; but like beasts,
And coward nobles, gave way to your clusters,
Who did hoot him out o' th' city. Shakespeare.
My friend took his station among a cluster of mob, who were making themselves merry with their betters. Addison.

To CLUSTER. v. n. [from the noun.]
To grow in bunches; to gather into bunches; to congregate.

Forth flourish'd thick the clustering vine. Milton.
Great father Bacchus, to my song repair;
For clustering grapes are thy peculiar care. Dryden.
Or from the forest falls the cluster'd snow,
Myriads of gems. Tomson's Winter.

To CLUSTER. v. a. To collect any thing into bodies.

CLUSTER GRAPE. n. f. [from cluster and grape.]

The small black grape is by some called the currant; or clustergrape; which I reckon the forwardest of the black fort. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CLUSTERY. adj. [from cluster.] Growing in clusters.

To CLUTCH. v. a. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. To hold in the hand; to gripe; to grasp.

Is this a dagger I see before me,
The handle tow'rd my hand? Come, let me clutch thee. Shakespeare.

They,
Like moles within us, heave and cast about;
And, till they foot and clutch their prey,
They never cool. Herbert.

2. To comprize; to grasp.

A man may set the poles together in his head,
and clutch the whole globe at one intellectual grasp.
Collier on Thought.

3. To contract; to double the hand, so as to seize and hold fast.

Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,
When his fair angels would salute my palm.
Shakespeare's King John.

CLUTCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The gripe; grasp; seizure.

2. Generally, in the plural, the paws, the talons.

It was the hard fortune of a cock to fall into the clutches of a cat. L'Estrange.

3. Hands, in a sense of rapacity and cruelty.

Your greedy slav'ring to devour,
Before 'twas in your clutches pow'r. Hudibras.
Set up the covenant on crutches,
Gainst those who have us in their clutches. Hudib.
I must have great leisure, and little care of myself, if I ever more come near the clutches of such a giant. Stillingfleet.

CLUTTER. n. f. [See CLATTER.] A noise; a bustle; a busy tumult; a hurry; a clamour. A low word.

He saw what a clutter there was with huge,
over-grown pots, pans, and spits. L'Estrange.

The fav'rite child, that just begins to prattle,
Is very humoursome, and makes great clutter,
Till he has windows on his bread and butter. King.

Prithce, Tim, why all this clutter?
Why ever in these raging fits? Swift.

To CLUTTER. v. n. [from the noun.] To make a noise, or bustle.

CLYSTER. n. f. [κλύστηρ.] An injection into the anus.

If nature relieves by a diarrhoea, without sinking the strength of the patient, it is not to be stop'd, but promoted gently by emollient clysters. Arbut.

To COACERVATE. v. a. [coacervo,
Latin.] To heap up together.

The collocation of the spirits in bodies, whether the spirits be coacervate or diffused.
Bacon's Natural History.

COACERVATION. n. f. [from coacervate.]
The act of heaping, or state of being heaped, together.

The fixing of it is the equal spreading of the tangible parts, and the close coacervation of them.
Bacon's Natural History.

COACH. n. f. [coche, Fr. koczny, among the Hungarians, by whom this vehicle is said to have been invented. Minsbew.] A carriage of pleasure, or state, distinguished from a chariot by having seats fronting each other.

Basilus attended for her in a coach, to carry her abroad to see some sports. Sidney.

A better would you fix?
Then give humility a coach and six. Pope.
Suppose that last week my coach was within an inch of overturning in a smooth even way, and drawn by very gentle horses. Swift.

To COACH. v. a. [from the noun.] To carry in a coach.

The needy poet sticks to all he meets,
Coach'd, carted, trod upon; now loose, now fast,
And carry'd off in some dog's tail at last. Pope.

COACH-BOX. n. f. [coach and box.] The seat on which the driver of the coach sits.

Her father had two coachmen: when one was in the coachbox, if the coach swung but the least to one side, she used to shriek.
Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

COACH-HIRE. n. f. Money paid for the use of a hired coach.

You exclaim as loud as those that praise,
For seraps and coach-hire, a young noble's plays.
Dryden.

My expences in coach-hire make no small ac-ticle. Spectator.

COACH-HOUSE. n. f. [coach and house.]
The house in which the coach is kept from the weather.

Let him lie in the stable or the coach-house.
Swift.

COACH-MAKER. n. f. [coach and maker.]
The artificer whose trade is to make coaches.

Her chariot is an empty hazel-nut,
Made by the joyner Squirrel, or old Grub,
Time out of mind the fairies coach-makers. Shak.
Take care of your wheels: get a new set bought, and probably the coach-maker will consider you. Swift.

COACH-MAN. n. f. [coach and man.] The driver of a coach.

Thy nags, the leanest things alive,
So very hard thou lov'st to drive;
I heard thy anxious coachman say,
It cost thee more in whips than hay. Prier.

She commanded her trembling coachman to drive her chariot near the body of her king. South.

To COACT. v. n. [from con and act.]
To act together; to act in concert. Not used.

But if I tell how these two did coact,
Shall I not lye in publishing a truth? Shaksfp.

COACTION. n. f. [coactus, Lat.] Compulsion; force, either restraining or impelling.

It had the passions in perfect subjection; and though its command over them was persuasive and political, yet it had the force of coaction, and despotic. South.

COACTIVE. adj. [from coact.]

1. Having the force of restraining or impelling; compulsory; restrictive.

The Levitical priests, in the old law, never arrogated unto themselves any temporal or coactive power. Raleigh.

2. Acting in concurrence. Obsolete.

With what's unreal thou coactive art. Shaksfp.

Of fierce Euroclydon. Philips.

COADJUTOR. n. f. [from con and adjutor, Lat.]

1. A fellow-helper; an assistant; an associate; one engaged in the assistance of another.

I should not succeed in a project, whereof I have had no hint from my predecessors the poets, or their seconds or coadjutors the critics. Dryden.

Away the friendly coadjutor flies. Garth's Disp.
A gownman of a different make,
Whom Pallas, once Vanessa's tutor,
Had fix'd on for her coadjutor. Swift.

2. [In the canon law.] One who is impowered or appointed to perform the duties of another.

A bishop that is unprofitable to his diocese ought to be deposed and no coadjutor assigned him. Ayl.

COADJUVANCY. n. f. [from con and adjuvo, Lat.] Help; concurrent help; contribution of help; co-operation.

Crystal is a mineral body, in the difference of stones, made of a lentous percolation of earth, drawn from the most pure and limpid juice thereof;
owing to the coldness of the earth some concurrence and coadjuvancy, but not immediate determination and efficiency. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COADUNITIION. n. f. [from con, ad, unitio, Lat.] The conjunction of different substances into one mass.

Bodies seem to have an intusicks principle of,
or corruption from, the coadunitiion of particles endued with contrary qualities.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To COAGMENT. v. a. [from con and agmen, Lat.] To congregate or heap together. I have only found the participle in use.

Had the world been coagmented from that supposed fortuitous jumble, this hypothesis had been tolerable. Glanville.

COAGMENTATION. n. f. [from coagment.] Collection, or concervation, into one mass; union; conjunction.

The third part rests in the well joining, cementing, and coagmentation of words, when it is smooth, gentle, and sweet. Ben Jonson.

COAGULABLE. adj. [from coagulate.] That which is capable of concretion.

Stones that are rich in vitriol, being often drenched with rain-water, the liquor will then extract a fine and transparent substance, coagulable into vitriol. Boyle.

To COAGULATE. v. a. [coagulo, Lat.] To force into concretions; as, by the affusion of some other substance, to turn milk.

Roasted in wrath and fire, And thus o'eriz'd with coagulate gore. - Shakesp.
Vivification ever consisteth in spirits attenuate, which the cold doth congeal and coagulate.

Bacon's Natural History.
Bitumen is found in lumps, or coagulated masses, in some springs. Woodward's Natural History.

The milk in the stomach of calves, which is coagulated by the runnet, is again dissolved and rendered fluid by the gall in the duodenum.

To COAGULATE. v. n. To run into concretions, or congelations.

Spirit of wine commixed with milk, a third part spirit of wine, and two parts milk, coagulate little, but mingleth; and the spirit swims not above.

About the third part of the oil olive, which was driven over into the receiver, did there coagulate into a whitish body, almost like butter. Boyle.

COAGULATION. n. f. [from coagulate.] 1. Concretion; congelation; the act of coagulating; the state of being coagulated.

2. The body formed by coagulation.
As the substance of coagulations is not merely saline, nothing dissolves them but what penetrates and relaxes at the same time. Arbutnot.

COAGULATIVE. adj. [from coagulate.] That which has the power of causing concretion, or coagulation.

To manifest the coagulative power, we have sometimes in a minute arrested the fluidity of new milk, and turned it into a curdled substance, only by dexterously mingling with it a few drops of good oil of vitriol. Boyle.

COAGULATOR. n. f. [from coagulate.] That which causes coagulation.

Coagulators of the humours, are those things which expel the most fluid parts, as in the case of incrassating, or thickening; and by those things which suck up some of the fluid parts, as absorbents. Arbutnot.

COAL. n. f. [col, Sax. kol, Germ. kole, Dut. kul, Danish.]

1. The common fossile fuel.
Coal is a black, sulphurous, inflammatory matter, dug out of the earth, serving for fuel, common in Europe, though the English coal is of most repute. One species of pit-coal is called cannel, or candle coal, which is found in the northern counties; hard, glossy, and light, apt to cleave into thin flakes, and, when kindled, yields a continual blaze till it be burnt out. Clambers.

Coals are solid, dry, opaque, inflammable substances, found in large strata, splitting horizontally more easily than in any other direction; of a glossy hue, soft and friable, not fusible, but easily inflammable, and leaving a large residuum of ashes.

But age, enforced, falls by her own consent;
As coals to ashes, when the spirit's spent. Denkam.

We shall meet with the same mineral lodged in coals, that elsewhere we found in marble.

2. The cinder of scorched wood; charcoal.
Whatever doth so alter a body, as it returneth not again to that it was, may be called alteration major; as when cheese is made of curds, or coals of wood, or bricks of earth. Bacon.

3. Fire; any thing inflamed or ignited.
You are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstones in the sun. Shakespear.

You have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me. Shakespear.

The rage of jealousy then fir'd his soul,
And his face kindled like a burning coal. Dryden.

To COAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To burn wood to charcoal.
Add the tinner's care and cost in buying the wood for this service; selling, framing, and piling it to be burnt; in fetching the same, when it is coaled, through such fat, foul, and cumbersome ways. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Charcoal of roots, coaled into great pieces, lasts longer than ordinary charcoal. Bacon.

2. To delineate with a coal.
Marvelling, he coaled out rhimes upon the wall, near to the picture. Camden.

COAL-BLACK. adj. [coal and black.] Black in the highest degree; of the colour of a coal.

As burning Aetna, from his boiling stew,
Doth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke,
And ragged ribs of mountains molten new,
Enwrapt in coal-black clouds and filthy smoke.

Ethiopians and negroes become coal-black from fuliginous efflorescencies, and complexional tinctures. Brown.

Coal-black his colour, but like jet it shone;
His legs and flowing tail were white alone. Dryden.

COAL-BOX. n. f. [coal and box.] A box to carry coals to the fire.

Leave a pail of dirty water, a coal-box, a bottle, a broom, and such other unfeightly things. Swift.

COAL-FISH. n. f. [ajellus niger.] A species of beardless gadus.

COAL-MINE. n. f. [coal and mine.] A mine in which coals are dug; a coal-pit.

Springs injure land, that flow from coal-mines. Mortimer.

COAL-PIT. n. f. [from coal and pit.] A pit made in the earth, generally to a great depth, for digging coals.

A leaf of the polypody kind, found in the sinking of a coal-pit. Woodward.

COAL-STONE. n. f. [coal and stone.] A sort of cannel coal. See COAL.

Coal-stone flames easily, and burns freely; but holds and endures the fire much longer than coal. Woodward.

COAL-WORK. n. f. [coal and work.] A coality; a place where coals are found.

There is a vast treasure in the old English, from whence authors may draw constant supplies; as our officers make their surest remits from the coal-works and the mines. Felton.

COALERY. n. f. [from coal.] A place where coals are dug.

Two fine stalactites were found hanging from a black stone, at a deserted vault in Benwell coality. Woodward.

To COALESCE. v. n. [coalesco, Latin.] 1. To unite in masses by a spontaneous approximation to each other.

When vapours are raised, they hinder not the transparency of the air, being divided into parts too small to cause any reflection in their superficies; but when they begin to coalesce, and constitute globules, those globules become of a convenient size to reflect some colours. Newton.

2. To grow together; to join.
COALESCE. n. f. [from coalesco.] The act of coalescing; concretion; union.

COALITION. n. f. [from coalesco, coalitum, Latin.] Union in one mass or body; conjunction of separate parts in one whole.

The world 's a mass of heterogeneous consistencies, and every part thereof a coalition of distinguishable varieties. Glanville.

In the first coalition of a people, their prospect is not great: they provide laws for their present exigence. Hale.

'Tis necessary that these squandered atoms should convene and unite into great masses: without such a coalition the chaos must have reigned to all eternity. Bentley.

COALY. adj. [from coal.] Containing coal.

Or coaly Tine, or ancient hallow'd Dec. Milton.

COAPTATION. n. f. [from con and aptus, Lat.] The adjustment of parts to each other.

In a clock, the hand is moved upon the dial, the bell is struck, and the other actions belonging to the engine are performed, by virtue of the size, shape, bigness, and coaptation of the several parts. Boyle.

The same method makes both prose and verse beautiful, which consists in the judicious coaptation and ranging of the words. Brome.

To COARCT. } v. a. [coarctio, La-
To COARCTATE. } tin.]

1. To straiten; to confine into a narrow compass.

The wind finding the room in the form of a trunk, and coarctated therein, forced the stones of the window, like pellets, clean through it. Bacon.

2. To contract power; to restrain.
If a man *coarct*s himself to the extremity of an act, he must blame and impute it to himself, that he has thus coarcted or straitened himself so far. Ayliffe.

COARCTATION. n. f. [from coarct.]

1. Confinement; restraint to a narrow space.

The greatest winds, if they have no coarctation, or blow not hollow, give an interior sound. Bacon.

2. Contraction of any space.

Straiten the artery never so much, provided the sides of it do not meet, the vessel will continue to beat, below or beyond the coarctation. Ray.

3. Refraining of liberty.
Election is opposed not only to coaction, but also to coarctation, or determination to one. Bramhall.

COARSE. adj.

1. Not refined; not separated from impurities or baser parts.

I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are molded. Shakespear.

2. Not soft or fine: used of cloth, of which the threads are large.

3. Rude; uncivil; rough of manners.

4. Gross; not delicate.

'Tis not the coarser eye of human law
That binds their peace. Tomson.

5. Inelegant; rude; unpolished.

Praise of Virgil is against myself, for presuming to copy, in my coarse English, his beautiful expressions. Dryden.

6. Not nicely expert; unfinished by art or education.

Practical rules may be useful to such as are remote from advice, and to coarse practitioners, which they are obliged to make use of. Arbutnot.

7. Mean; not nice; not elegant; vile.
 Ill comfort, and a coarse perfume,
 Disgrace the delicacy of a feast. Roscommon.
 A coarse and useless dunghill weed,
 Fix'd to one spot, to rot just as it grows. Orway.
 From this coarse mixture of terrestrial parts,
 Desire and fear by turns possess their hearts. Dryden.

CO'ARSELY. adv. [from coarse.]

1. Without fineness; without refinement.
 2. Meanly; not elegantly.
 John came neither eating nor drinking, but fare'd coarsely and poorly, according to the apparel
 he wore. Brown.
 3. Rudely; not civilly.
 The good cannot be too much honoured, nor the bad too coarsely used. Dryden.
 4. Inelegantly.
 Be pleas'd to accept the rudiments of Virgil's poetry, coarsely translated, but which yet retains some beauties of the author. Dryden.

CO'ARSENESS. n. f. [from coarse.]

1. Impurity; unrefined state.
 First know the materials whereof the glass is made; then consider what the reason is of the coarseness or clearness. Bacon's Essays.
 2. Roughness; want of fineness.
 3. Grossness; want of delicacy.
 Friends (pardon the coarseness of the illustration)
 as dogs in couples, should be of the same size.
L'Estrange.
 4. Roughness; rudeness of manners.
 A base wild olive he remains;
 The shrub the coarseness of the clown retains. Garib.
 5. Meanness; want of nicety.
 Consider the penuriousness of the Hollanders, the coarseness of their food and raiment, and their little indulgences of pleasure. Addison on the War.

COAST. n. f. [coste, Fr. costa, Latin.]

1. The edge or margin of the land next the sea; the shore. It is not used for the banks of less waters.
 He sees in English ships the Holland coast. Dryden.
 2. It seems to be taken by Newton for side, like the French coste. It was likewise so used by Bacon.
 The fourth-east is found to be better for ripening of trees than the fourth-west; though the southwest be the hottest coast. Bacon.
 Some kind of virtue, lodged in some sides of the crystal, inclines and bends the rays towards the coast, of unusual refraction; otherwise the rays would not be refracted towards that coast rather than any other coast, both at their incidence and at their emergence, so as to emerge by a contrary situation of the coast. Newton's Opticks.
 3. The Coast is clear. [a proverbial expression.] The danger is over; the enemies have marched off.
 Going out, and seeing that the coast was clear, Zelmane dismissed Musidorus. Sidney.
 The royal spy, when now the coast was clear,
 Sought not the garden, but retir'd unseen. Dryden.
 To COAST. v. n. [from the noun.] To fail close by the coast; to fail within sight of land.
 But steer my vessel with a steady hand,
 And coast along the shore in sight of land.
Dryden's Virgil.
 The ancients coasted only in their navigation, seldom taking the open sea. Arbutnot on Coins.

To COAST. v. a. To sail by; to sail near to.
 Nearchus, the admiral of Alexander, not knowing the compass, was fain to coast that shore.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 The greatest entertainment we found in coasting
 it, were the several prospects of woods, vineyards, meadows, and corn-fields which lie on the borders of it. Addison on Italy.

CO'ASTER. n. f. [from coast.] He that fails timorously near the shore.

In our small skiff we must not launch too far;
 We here but coasters, not discoverers are. Dryden.

COAT. n. f. [cotte, Fr. cotta, Italian.]

1. The upper garment.
 He was armed with a coat of mail, and the weight of the coat was five thousand shekels of brass. 1 Samuel.
 The coat of many colours they brought to their father, and said, this have we found: know now whether it be thy son's coat or no. Genesis.
 2. Petticoat; the habit of a boy in his infancy; the lower part of a woman's dress.
 A friend's younger son, a child in coats, was not easily brought to his book. Locke.
 3. The habit or vesture, as demonstrative of the office.
 For his intermeddling with arms, he is the more excusable, because many of his coat, in those times, are not only martial directors, but commanders. Howel's Vocal Forest.
 Men of his coat should be minding their pray'rs,
 And not among ladies, to give themselves airs.
Swift.
 4. The hair or fur of a beast; the covering of any animal.

He clad
 Their nakedness with skins of beasts; or slain,
 Or, as the snake, with youthful coat repaid;
 And thought not much to clothe his enemies.
Milton.

Give your horse some powder of brimstone in his oats, and it will make his coat lie fine.

You have given us milk
 In luscious streams, and lent us your own coat
 Against the winter's cold. Thomson's Spring.

5. Any tegument, tunick, or covering.
 The eye is defended with four coats or skins.
Peacbam.

The optick nerves have their medullary parts terminating in the brain, their teguments terminating in the coats of the eye.
DeKam's Physico-Theology.

Amber is a nodule, invested with a coat, called rock-amber. Woodward on Fossils.

6. That on which the ensigns armorial are portrayed.

The-herald of love's mighty king,
 In whose coat armour richly are display'd
 All sorts of flowers the which on earth do spring.
Spenser.

Cropp'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms;
 Of England's coat one half is cut away.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

At each trumpet was a banner bound,
 Which, waving in the wind, display'd at large
 Their master's coat of arms and knightly charge.
Dryden.

To COAT. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover; to invest; to overspread: as, to coat a retort; to coat a ceiling.

To COAX. v. a. To wheedle; to flatter;
 to humour. A low word.

The nurse had changed her note; she was muzzling and coaxing the child; that a good dear, says she. L'Estrange.

I coax! I wheedle! I'm above it.
Farquhar's Recruiting Officer.

CO'AXER. n. f. [from the verb.] A wheedler; a flatterer.

COB. A word often used in the composition of low terms; corrupted from cop,
 Sax. kopf, Germ. the head or top.

COB. n. f.

1. A sort of sea-fowl; called also sea-cob.
Phillips.

2. In some provinces, and probably in old language, a spider; whence cobweb.

CO'BALT. n. f. A marcasite frequent in Saxony.

Cobalt is plentifully impregnated with arsenick;
 contains copper and some silver. Being sublimed, the fiores are of a blue colour: these, German mineralists call zaffir. Woodward.

Cobalt is a dense, compact, and ponderous mineral, very bright and shining, and much resembling some of the antimonial ores. It is found in Germany, Saxony, Bohemia, and England; but ours is a poor kind. From cobalt are produced the three sorts of arsenick, white, yellow, and red; as also zaffir and smalt. Hill on Fossils.

To CO'BBLE. v. a. [kobler, Danish.]

1. To mend any thing coarsely: used generally of shoes.

If you be out, Sir, I can mend you.—Why, Sir, cobble you. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

They'll sit by th' fire, and presume to know
 What's done i' th' capitol; making parties strong,
 And feeble such as stand not in their liking
 Below their cobbled shoes. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Many underlayers, when they could not live upon their trade, have raised themselves from cobbling to fluxing. L'Estrange.

2. To do or make any thing clumsily, or unhandily.

Reject the nauseous praises of the times;
 Give thy base poets back their cobbled rhimes.
Dryden.

Believe not that the whole universe is mere bungling and blundering, nothing effected for any purpose or design, but all ill-favour'dly cobbled and jumbled together. Bentley.

CO'BBLER. n. f. [from cobble.]

1. A mender of old shoes.
 Not many years ago it happened that a cobbler
 had the casting vote for the life of a criminal.
Addison on Italy.

2. A clumsy workman in general.

What trade are you?—
 Truly, Sir, in respect of a fine workman, I am but, as you would say, a cobbler.

3. In a kind of proverbial sense, any mean person.

Think you the great prerogative t' enjoy
 Of doing ill, by virtue of that race?
 As if what we esteem in cobblers base
 Would the high family of Brutus grace.
Dryden's Juvenal.

CO'BIRONS. n. f. [cob and iron.] Irons with a knob at the upper end.

The implements of the kitchen; as spits, ranges, cobirons, and pots. Bacon's Physical Remains.

COB'SHOP. n. f. [con and bishop.] A coad-jutant bishop.

Valerius, advanced in years, and a Grecian by birth, not qualified to preach in the Latin tongue, made use of Austin as a cobishop, for the benefit of the church of Hippo. Ayliff.

CO'BNU. n. f. [cob and nut.] A boy's game; the conquering nut.

CO'BSWAN. n. f. [cob, head, and swan.]
 The head or leading swan.

I am not taken
 With a cobswan, or a high-mounting bull,
 As foolish Leda and Europa were.

Ben Jonson's Catiline.

CO'BWEB. n. f. [kopweb, Dutch.]

1. The web or net of a spider: from cob, a spider.

The Juckleless Clarion,
 With violent swift flight, forth carried
 Into the curled cobweb, which his foe
 Had framed for his final overthrow. Spenser.

Is supper ready, the house trimmed, rushes
 strewed, and cobwebs swept?
Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
 The

The spider, in the house of a burgher, fell presently to her network of drawing cobwebs up and down. L'Estrange.

2. Any snare, or trap: implying invidiousness and weakness.

For he a rope of sand could twist
As tough as learned Sorbonifit;
And weave fine cobwebs fit for scull
That's empty when the moon is full. Hudibras.
Chronology at best is but a cobweb law, and he broke through it with his weight. Dryden.

Laws are like cobwebs, which may catch small flies, but let wasps and hornets break through. Swift.

CO'COA. n. f. See CACAO.

COCCI'FEROUS. adj. [from κοκός, and fero, Lat.] All plants or trees are so called that have berries. Quincy.

CO'CHINEAL. n. f. [cochinilla, Span. a woodlouse.]

An insect gathered upon the opuntia, and dried: from which a beautiful red colour is extracted. Hill.

CO'CHLEARY. adj. [from coclea, Lat. a screw.] Screwform; in the form of a screw.

That at St. Dennis, near Paris, hath wreathy spires, and cochleary turnings about it, which agree with the description of the unicorn's horn in Ælian. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CO'CHLEATED. adj. [from coclea, Lat.] Of a screwed or turbinated form.

Two pieces of stone, struck forth of the cavity of the umbilici of shells, of the same sort with the foregoing: they are of a coccleated figure. Woodward on Fossils.

COCK. n. f. [cocc, Saxon; coq, French.]

1. The male to the hen; a domestick fowl, remarkable for his gallantry, pride, and courage.

Cocks have great combs and spurs; hens, little or none. Bacon's Natural History.

True cocks o' th' game,
That never ask for what, or whom, they fight;
Bot torn 'em out, and shew 'em but a foe,
Cry liberty, and that's a cause of quarrel. Dryd.
The careful hen
Calls all her chirping family around,
Fed and defended by the fearless cock. Thomson's Spring.

2. The male of any small birds.

Calves and philosophers, tygers and statesmen, cock sparrows and coquets, exactly resemble one another in the formation of the pineal gland. Arbutnot and Pope.

3. The weathercock, that shews the direction of the wind by turning.

You cataracts and hurricanoes, spout
Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks! Shakespeare.

4. A spout to let out water at will, by turning the stop: the handle had probably a cock on the top. Things that were contrived to turn, seem anciently to have had that form, whatever was the reason. When every room

Hath blez'd with lights, and bray'd with minstrelsy,
I have retir'd me to a wasterful cock,
And set mine eyes at flow. Shakespeare.

It were good there were a little cock made in the belly of the upper glass. Bacon's Natural History.
Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock,
Sprits in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock. Pope.

5. The notch of an arrow.

6. The part of the lock of a gun that strikes with the flint. [from cocca, Ital. the notch of an arrow. Skinner. Perhaps from the action, like that of a cock pecking; but it was, I think, so called when it had not its present form.]

With hasty rage he snatch'd
His gunshot, that in holsters watch'd;
And bending cock, he levell'd full Against th' outside of Talgol's skull. Hudibras.

A seven-shot gun carries powder and bullets for seven charges and discharges. Under the breech of the barrel is one box for the powder; a little before the lock another for the bullets; behind the cock a charger, which carries the powder from the box to a funnel at the further end of the lock. Grew.

7. A conqueror; a leader; a governing man.

Sir Andrew is the cock of the club since he left us. Addison.
My schoolmaster call'd me a dunce and a fool;
But at cuffs I was always the cock of the school. Swift.

8. Cockcrowing; a note of the time in a morning.

We were carousing till the second cock. Shakespeare.
He begins at curfew, and goes till the first cock. Shakespeare.

9. A cockboat; a small boat.

They take a view of all sized cocks, barges, and fisherboats hovering on the coast. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice; and yond tall anchoring bark,
Diminish'd to her cock; her cock, a buoy,
Almost too small for fight. Shakespeare.

10. A small heap of hay. [Properly cop.]

As soon as the dew is off the ground, spread the hay again, and turn it, that it may wither on the other side: then handle it, and, if you find it dry, make it up into cocks. Mortimer.

11. The form of a hat. [from the comb of the cock.]

You see many a smart rhetorician turning his hat in his hands, moulding it into several different cocks. Addison.

12. The style or gnomon of a dial.

Chambers.

13. The needle of a balance.

14. Cock on the Hoop. Triumphant; exulting.

Now I am a frisker, all men on me look;
What should I do but set cock on the hoop? Camden's Remains.

You'll make a mutiny among my guests
You will set cock a hoop! Shakespeare.
For Hudibras, who thought h' had won
The field, as certain as a gun,
And having routed the whole troop,
With victory was cock a hoop. Hudibras.

To COCK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To set erect; to hold bolt upright as a cock holds his head.

This is that muscle which performs the motion so often mentioned by the Latin poets, when they talk of a man's cocking his nose, or playing the rhinoceros. Addison.

Our Lightfoot barks, and cocks his ears;
O'er yonder stile see Lubberkin appears. Gray's Pastorals.

Dick would cock his nose in scorn,
But Tom was kind and loving. Swift.

2. To set up the hat with an air of petulance and pertness.

Dick, who thus long had passive sat,
Here strok'd his chin and cock'd his hat. Prior.
An alert young fellow cock'd his hat upon a friend of his who entered. Addison's Spectator.

3. To mould the form of the hat.

4. To fix the cock of a gun ready for a discharge.

Some of them holding up their pistols, cocked, near the door of the house, which they kept open. Dryden's Dedication, Æneid.

5. To raise hay in small heaps.

Sike mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser's Pastorals.

To COCK. v. n.

1. To strut; to hold up the head, and look big, or menacing, or pert.

Sir Fopling is a fool so nicely writ,
The ladies would mistake him for a wit;
And when he sings, talks loud, and cocks, would cry,
I vow, methinks, he's a pretty company. Dryden.
Every one cocks and struts upon it, and pretends to overlook us. Addison's Guardian.

2. To train or use fighting cocks.

Cries out 'gainst cocking, since he cannot bet. Ben Jonson.

COCK, in composition, signifies small or little.

COCKA'DE. n. f. [from cock.] A ribband worn in the hat.

COCKATRICE. n. f. [from cock, and αττερ, Sax. a serpent.] A serpent supposed to rise from a cock's egg.

They will kill one another by the look, like cockatrices. Shakespeare.

This was the end of this little cockatrice of a king, that was able to destroy those that did not espy him first. Bacon.

This cockatrice is soonest crushed in the shell; but, if it grows, it turns to a serpent and a dragon. Taylor.

My wife! 'tis she, the very cockatrice! Congreve.
COCKBOAT. n. f. [cock and boat.] A small boat belonging to a ship.

That invincible armada, which having not fired a cottage of ours at land, nor taken a cockboat of ours at sea, wandered through the wilderness of the northern seas. Bacon.

Did they think it less dishonour to God to be like a brute, or a plant, or a cockboat, than to be like a man? Stillingfleet.

COCKBROT. n. f. Broth made by boiling a cock.

Diet upon spoon-meats; as veal or cockbrots prepared with French barley. Harvey on Consump.

COCKCROWING. n. f. [cock and crow.]

The time at which cocks crow; the morning.

Ye know not when the master of the house cometh; at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning. Mark.

To COCKER. v. a. [coqueline, French.]

To cede; to fondle; to indulge.

Most children's constitutions are spoiled by cockering and tenderness. Locke on Education.
He that will give his son sugar plums to make him learn, does but authorize his love of pleasure, and cock up that propensity which he ought to subdue. Locke on Education.

Bred a fondling and an heirless,
Dress'd like any Lady May'refs,
Cocker'd by the servants round,
Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

COCKER. n. f. [from cock.] One who follows the sport of cockfighting.

COCKEREL. n. f. [from cock.] A young cock.

Which of them first begins to crow?—
The old cock?—The cockerel. Shakespeare.
What wilt thou be, young cockerel, when thy spurs

Are grown to sharpness? Dryden.

COCKERT. n. f. [of uncertain derivation.] A seal belonging to the king's customhouse: likewise a scroll of parchment, sealed and delivered by the officers of the customhouse to merchants, as a warrant that their merchandize is entered. Cowell.

The greatest profit did arise by the cocket of hides; for wool and woollens were ever of little value in this kingdom. Davies.

COCK-

COCKFIGHT. n. f. [cock and fight.] A battle or match of cocks.

In cockfights, to make one cock more hardy, and the other more cowardly. Bacon's Natural History.

At the seasons of football and cockfighting, the little republics reassume their national hatred to each other. Addison.

Alma, they strenuously maintain,
Sits cockhorse on her throne the brain. Prior.

COCKLE. n. f. [coquille, French.]

1. A small testaceous fish.

It is a cockle or a walnut shell. Shakespeare.

We may, I think, from the make of an oyster, or cockle, reasonably conclude, that it has not so many, nor so quick, senses as a man. Locke.

Three common cockle shells, out of gravel pits. Woodward.

2. A little or young cock. Obsolete.

They bearen the crag so stiff and so state,
As cockle on his dunghill crowing crank. Spenser's Pastorals.

COCKLE-STAIRS. n. f. Winding or spiral stairs. Chambers.

COCKLE. n. f. [coccel, Saxon; lolium, zizania, Lat.] A weed that grows in corn, the same with cornrose; a species of poppy.

In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition. Shak.

Good seed degenerates, and oft obeys
The soil's disease, and into cockle strays. Donne.

TO COCKLE. v. a. [from cockle.] To contract into wrinkles, like the shell of a cockle.

Show'rs soon drench the camblet's cockled grain. Gay.

COCKLED. adj. [from cockle.] Shelled; or perhaps cochleate, turbinated.

Love's feeling is more soft and sensible
Than are the tender horns of cockled snails. Shak.

COCKLOFT. n. f. [cock and loft.] The room over the garret, in which fowls are supposed to roost; unless it be rather corrupted from coploft, the cop or top of the house.

If the lowest floors already burn,
Cocklofts and garrets soon will take their turn. Dryden's Juvenal.

My garrets, or rather my cocklofts indeed, are very indifferently furnished; but they are rooms to lay lumber in. Swift.

COCKMASTER. n. f. [cock and master.] One that breeds game cocks.

A cockmaster bought a partridge, and turned it among the fighting cocks. L'Estrange.

COCKMATCH. n. f. [cock and match.] Cockfight for a prize.

At the same time that the heads of parties preferve towards one another an outward shew of good breeding, their tools will not so much as mingle at a cockmatch. Addison.

Though quail-fighting is what is most taken notice of, they had doubtless cockmatches also. Arbutnot and Pope.

COCKNEY. n. f. [A word of which the original is much controverted. The French use an expression, pais de co-caigne, for a country of dainties;

Paris est pour un riche un pais de co-caigne. Boileau.

Of this word they are not able to fettle the original. It appears, whatever was its first ground, to be very ancient, being mentioned in an old Normanno-Saxon poem:

Far in see by west Spaying,
Is a lond yhoze cocaying.

On which Dr. Hicker has this remark:

Nunc coquin, coquine: quæ olim apud Gallos, otio, gula, et ventri deditos, ignavum, ignavam, desidiosum, desidiosam, Jegnem, significabant. Hinc urbanos, utpote à rusticis laboribus ad vitam sedentariam et desidiosam avocatos, pagani nostri olim coaignes, quod nunc scribitur cockneys, vocabant. Et poeta hic noster in monachos & moniales, ut segne genus hominum qui, desidiæ dediti, ventri indulgebant, & coquinæ amatores erant, malevolentissime invehitur; monasteria & monasticam vitam inde scripture teræ cockainæ parabolicè perstringens.]

1. A native of London, by way of contempt.

So the cockney did to the eels, when she put them i' th' patty alive. Shakespeare's King Lear.

For who is such a cockney in his heart,
Proud of the plenty of the southern part,
To scorn that union, by which we may Boast 'twas his countryman that writ this play? Dorset.

The cockney, travelling into the country, is surprized at many common practices of rural affairs. Watts.

2. Any effeminate, ignorant, low, mean, despicable citizen.

I am afraid this great lubber the world will prove a cockney. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

COCKPIT. n. f. [cock and pit.]

1. The area where cocks fight.

Can this cockpit hold
The vasty field of France? Shakespeare.

And now have I gained the cockpit of the western world, and academy of arms, for many years. Howell's Vocal Forest.

2. A place on the lower deck of a man of war, where are subdivisions for the purser, the surgeon, and his mates. Harris.

COCKSURE. adv. [from cock and sure.]

Confidently certain; without fear or diffidence. A word of contempt.

We steal, as in a castle, cocksure. Shakespeare.

I thought myself cocksure of his horse, which he readily promised me. Pope's Letters.

COCKSWAIN. n. f. [coggypane, Saxon.] The officer who has the command of the cock-boat. Corruptly Coxon.

COCKWEED. n. f. [from cock and weed.] The name of a plant, called also Dittander, or Peppervort.

COCOA. n. f. [cacaotal, Span. and therefore more properly written cacao.]

A species of palm-tree, cultivated in the East and West Indies. The bark of the nut is made into cordage, and the shell into drinking bowls. The kernel affords them a wholesome food, and the milk contained in the shell a cooling liquor.

The leaves are used for thatching their houses, and are wrought into baskets. Miller.

The cacao or chocolate nut is a fruit of an oblong figure; is composed of a thin but hard and woody coat or skin, of a dark blackish colour; and of a dry kernel, filling up its whole cavity, fleshy, dry, firm, and fattish to the touch, of a dusky colour, an agreeable smell, and a pleasant and peculiar taste. It was unknown to us till the discovery of America. The tree is of the thickness of a man's leg, and but a few feet in height; its bark rough, and full of tubercles; and its leaves six or eight inches long, half as much in breadth, and pointed at the ends. The flowers are succeeded by the fruit, which is large and oblong, resembling a cucumber, five, six, or eight inches in length, and three or four in thickness; when fully ripe, of a purple colour. Within the cavity of this fruit are lodged the cocca nuts, usually about thirty in number. Hill's Mat. Med.

Amid' those orchards of the sun,
Give me to drain the cocca's milky bowl,
And from the palm to draw its freshening wine. Templeton.

COCTILE. adj. [coctilis, Lat.] Made by baking, as a brick.

COCTION. n. f. [coctio, Lat.] The act of boiling.

The disease is sometimes attended with expectoration from the lungs, and that is taken off by a coction and resolution of the feverish matter, or terminates in suppurations or a gangrene. Arbutnot on Diet.

COD.

CO'DFISH. } n. f. [afellus.] A sea fish.

COD. n. f. [cobbe, Saxon.] Any case or husk in which seeds are lodged.

Thy corn thou there may'st safely sow,
Where in full cods last year rich pease did grow. May.

They let pease lie in small heaps as they are reaped, till they find the haem and cod dry. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TO COD. v. n. [from the noun.] To inclose in a cod.

All codded grain being a destroyer of weeds, an improver of land, and a preparer of it for other crops. Mortimer.

CO'DDERS. n. f. [from cod.] Gatherers of pease. Diet.

CODE. n. f. [codex, Latin.]

1. A book.

2. A book of the civil law.

We find in the Theodosian and Justinian code the interest of trade very well provided for. Arbutnot on Coins.

Indentures, cov'nants, articles they draw,
Large as the fields themselves; and larger far
Than civil codes with all their glosses are. Pope's Sat.

CO'DICIL. n. f. [codicillus, Lat.] An appendage to a will.

The man suspects his lady's crying
Was but to gain him to appoint her,
By codicil a larger jointure. Prior.

CODILLE. n. f. [codille, Fr. codillo, Span.] A term at ombre, when the game is won.

She fees, and trembles at th' approaching ill;
Just in the jaws of ruin, and codille. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

TO CO'DLE. v. a. [coguo, co'dulo, Lat. Skinner.] To parboil; to soften by the heat of water.

CO'DLING. n. f. [from To codle.] An apple generally codled, to be mixed with milk.

In July come gill-flowers of all varieties, early pears and plums in fruit, gennings and codlings.

Bacon's Essays.
Their

Their entertainment at the height,
Is cream and codlings rev'ling with delight.
King's Cookery.
He set it lie all winter in a gravel walk, south of a codling hedge. Mortimer's Husbandry.
A codling, ere it went his lip in,
Would straight become a golden pippin. Swift.

COEFFICACY. n. f. [con and efficacia, Lat.] The power of several things acting together to produce an effect.

We cannot in general infer the efficacy of those stars, or coefficacy particular in medications.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COEFFICIENCY. n. f. [con and efficio, Latin.] Cooperation; the state of acting together to some single end.

The managing and carrying on of this work, by the spirits instrumental coefficiency, requires that they be kept together, without distinction or diffi-pation. Glanville's Sceptis.

COEFFICIENT. n. f. [con and efficiens, Latin.]

1. That which unites its action with the action of another.

2. [In algebra.] Such numbers, or given quantities, that are put before letters, or unknown quantities, into which letters they are supposed to be multiplied, and so do make a rectangle or product with the letters; as, $4a, bx, cxx$;
where 4 is the co-efficient of $4a$, b of bx , and c of cxx . Chambers.

3. In fluxions.
The coefficient of any generating term (in fluxions) is the quantity acting by the division of that term, by the generated quantity. Chambers.

COELIACK Passion. [κοιλία, the belly.]
A diarrhoea, or flux, that arises from the indigestion or putrefaction of food in the stomach and bowels, whereby the aliment comes away little altered from what it was when eaten, or changed like corrupted stinking flesh. Quincy.

COEMPTION. n. f. [coemptio, Lat.] The act of buying up the whole quantity of any thing.

Monopolies and coemption of wares for resale, where they are not restrained, are great means to enrich. Bacon's Essays.

COEQUAL. adj. [from con and equalis, Lat.] Equal; being of the same rank or dignity with another.

Henry the sixth did sometimes prophesy,
If once he came to be a cardinal,
He'll make his cap coequal with the crown.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

COEQUALITY. n. f. [from coequal.] The state of being equal.

To COERCE. v. a. [coerceo, Latin.] To restrain; to keep in order by force.

Punishments are manifold, that they may coerce
this profligate sort. Ayliffe's Paragon.

COERCIBLE. adj. [from coerceo.]

1. That may be restrained.

2. That ought to be restrained.

COERCION. n. f. [from coerceo.] Penal restraint; check.

The coercion or execution of the sentence in ecclesiastical courts, is only by excommunication of the person contumacious. Hale's Common Law.

Government has coercion and animadversion upon such as neglect their duty; without which coercive power, all government is toothless and precarious.
Smith.

COERCIVE. adj. [from coerceo.]

1. That which has the power of laying restraint.

All things, on the surface spread, are bound
By their coercive vigour to the ground! Blackmore.

2. That which has the authority of restraining by punishment.

For ministers to seek that themselves might have coercive power over the church, would have been hardly construed. Hooker, Preface.

The virtues of a general, or a king, are prudence, counsel, active fortitude, coercive power, awful command, and the exercise of magnanimity,
as well as justice. Dryden.

COESSENTIAL. adj. [con and essentia, Latin.] Participating of the same essence.

The Lord our God is but one God, in which indivisible unity we adore the Father, as being altogether of himself; we glorify that consubstantial Word, which is the Son; we bless and magnify that coessential Spirit eternally proceeding from both, which is the Holy Ghost. Hooker.

COESSENTIALITY. n. f. [from coessential.]
Participation of the same essence.

COETANEOUS. adj. [con and ætas, Latin.]
Of the same age with another: with to.

Eve was old as Adam, and Cain their son coeta-neous unto both. Bacon's Vulgar Errors.

Every fault hath penal effects, coetaneous to the act. Gov.

Through the body every member sustains another; and all are coetaneous, because none can subsist alone. Bentley's Sermons.

other.

Arius had dishonoured his coeternally begotten Son. Hooker.

COETERNITY. n. f. [from coeternal.]
Having existence from eternity equal with another eternal being.

The eternity of the Son's generation, and his coeternity and consubstantiality with the Father, when he came down from heaven, and was incarnate. Hammond's Fundamentals.

COEVAL. adj. [coævus, Latin.]

1. Of the same age.

Even his teeth and white, like a young flock,
Coeval, and new-thorn, from the clear brook Recent. Prior.

2. Of the same age with another: followed by with.

This religion cannot pretend to be coeval with man. Hale.

The monthly revolutions of the moon, or the diurnal of the earth upon its own axis, by the very hypothesis, are coeval with the former. Bentley.

Silence, coeval with eternity!
Thou wert, ere nature first began to be:
'Twas one vault nothing all, and all slept fast in thee! Pope.

3. Sometimes with to.

Although we had no monuments of religion ancienter than idolatry, we have no reason to conclude that idolatrous religion was coeval to mankind.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

COEVAL. n. f. [from the adjective.] A contemporary; but properly one not only living at the same time, but of the same time of life.

As it were not enough to have outdone all your coevals in wit, you will excel them in good-nature.
Pope.

COEVIOUS. adj. [coævus, Lat.] One of the same age.

Then it should not have been the first, as supposing some other thing coevious to it. South.

To COEXIST. v. n. [con and existo, Latin.]

1. To exist at the same time.

The three stars that coexist in heavenly constellations, are a multitude of stars. Hale's Orig. of Man.
Of substances no one has any clear idea, farther than of certain simple ideas coexisting together.
Locke.

2. Followed by with.

It is sufficient that we have the idea of the length of any regular periodical appearances, which we can in our minds apply to duration, with which the motion or appearance never coexisted.
Locke.

COEXISTENCE. n. f. [from coexist.]

1. Having existence at the same time with another: with to.

Locke, who in the preceding lines has coexisted with, has here coexistence to.

The measuring of any duration, by some motion, depends not on the real coexistence of that thing to that motion, or any other periods of revolution. Locke.

2. More commonly followed by with.

We can demonstrate the being of God's eternal ideas, and their coexistence with him. Grey's Conf.

COEXISTENT. adj. [from coexist.]

1. Having existence at the same time with another: with to.

To the measuring the duration of any thing by time, it is not requisite that that thing should be coexistent to the motion we measure by, or any other periodical revolution. Locke.

2. Sometimes with.

This proves no antecedent necessity, but coexistent with the act. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbes.

Time is taken for so much of duration as is coexistent with the motions of the great bodies of the universe. Locke.

All that one point is either future or past, and no parts are coexistent or contemporary with it.
Bentley.

To COEXTEND. v. a. [con and extendo, Latin.] To extend to the same space or duration with another.

Every motion is, in some sort, coextended with the body moved. Grey's Cosmologia.

COEXTENSION. n. f. [from coextend.] The act or state of extending to the same space or duration with another.

Though it be a spirit, I find it is no inconvenience to have some analogy, at least of coextension, with my body. Hale.

COFFEE. n. f. [It is originally Arabick, pronounced caheu by the Turks, and cabuah by the Arabs.] The tree is a species of Arabick jessamine.

It is found to succeed as well in the Caribbee islands as in its native place of growth; but whether the coffee produced in the West Indies will prove as good as that from Mocha in Arabia Felix, time will discover. Miller.

COFFEE denotes a drink prepared from the berries, very familiar in Europe for these eighty years, and among the Turks for one hundred and fifty. Thevenot, the traveller, was the first who brought it into France; and a Greek servant, called Pasqua, brought into England by Mr. Daniel Edwards, a Turkey merchant, in 1652, to make his coffee, first set up the profession of coffeeman, and introduced the drink among us. Chambers.

They have in Turkey a drink called coffee, made of a berry of the same name, as black as foot, and of a strong scent, but not aromatical; which they take, beaten into powder, in waer, as hot as they can drink it. This drink comforteth the brain and heart, and helpeth digestion. Bacon.

To part her time 'twixt reading and bohea,
Or o'er cold coffee trifle with the spoon. Pope.

COFFEEHOUSE. n. f. [coffee and house.] A house of entertainment where coffee is fold,

fold, and the guests are supplied with news-papers.

At ten, from coffeehouse or play
Returning, finishes the day. Prior.
It is a point they do not concern themselves about, farther than perhaps as a subject in a coffee- house. Swift.

COFFEE-MAN. n. s. [coffee and man.] One that keeps a coffee-house.

Consider your enemies the Lacedaemonians; did ever you hear that they preferred a coffee-man to Agamemnon? Addison.

COFFEE-POT. n. s. [coffee and pot.] The covered pot in which coffee is boiled.

COFFER. n. s. [cofne, Saxon.]

1. A chest generally for keeping money.

Two iron coffers hung on either side,
With precious metal full as they could hold.
Fairy Queen.

The lining of his coffers shall make coats
To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars.
Shakespeare's Richard II.

If you destroy your governour that is wealthy,
you must chuse another, who will fill his coffers
out of what is left. L'Estrange.

2. Treasure.

He would discharge it without any burthen to the queen's coffers, for honour sake.
Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

3. [In architecture.] A square depression in each intercolumn between the modillions of the Corinthian cornice, usually filled with some enrichment. Chambers.

4. [In fortification.] A hollow lodgment across a dry moat, from six to seven foot deep, and from sixteen to eighteen broad; the upper part being made of pieces of timber, raised two foot above the level of the moat; which little elevation has hurdles laden with earth for its covering, and serves as a parapet with embrasures. Chambers.

TO COFFER. v. a. [from the noun.] To treasure up in chests.

Treasure, as a war might draw forth, so a peace succeeding might coffer up. Bacon's Henry VII.

COFFERER of the King's Household. n. s.
A principal officer of his majesty's court, next under the comptroller, that, in the compting-house and elsewhere, hath a special oversight of other officers of the household, for their good demeanour in their offices. Cowell.

COFFIN. n. s. [coffin, French.]

1. The box or chest in which dead bodies are put into the ground. It is used both of wood and other matter.

He went as if he had been the coffin that carried himself to his sepulchre. Sidney.

Not a flower sweet
On my black coffin let there be strown.
Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

One fate they have,
The ship their coffin, and the sea their grave. Wall.
The joiner is fitting serews to your coffin. Swift.

2. A mould of paste for a pyc.

Of the paste a coffin will I rear,
And make two pasties of your shameful heads.
Shakespeare.

3. A paper case, in form of a cone, used by grocers.

4. In farriery.

COFFIN of a horse, is the whole hoof of the foot midst of the hoof, and possessing the whole form of the foot. Farrier's Dict.

TO COFFIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose in a coffin.

Would'st thou have laugh'd had I come coffin'd
home,

That weep'st to see me triumph? Shak. Coriolanus.
Let me lie

In prison, and here be coffin'd, when I die. Donne.

COFFIN-MAKER. n. s. [coffin and maker.]
One whose trade is to make coffins.

Where will be your sextons, coffinmakers, and plummers? Tatler.

TO COG. v. a. [A word of uncertain original, derived by Skinner from coqueliner, French.]

1. To flatter; to wheedle; to sooth by adu-latory speeches.

I'll mountebank their loves,
Cog their hearts from them, and come home below'd
Of all the trades in Rome. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

2. To Cog a die. To secure it, so as to direct its fall; to falsify.

But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dext'rously to throw the lucky dice.
Dryden's Per. Satires.

For guineas in other men's breeches,
Your gamesters will palm and will cog.
Swift.

Ye gallants of Newgate, whose fingers are nice
In diving in pockets, or cogging of dice. Swift.

3. To obtrude by falsehood.

The outcry is, that I abuse his demonstration by a falsification, by cogging in the word.

I have cogged in the word to serve my turn.
Tillotson, Preface.

Fustian tragedies, or insipid comedies, have, by concerted applauses, been cogged upon the town for masterpieces. Dennis.

TO COG. v. n. To lye; to wheedle.

Now stealeth he, now will he crave;
And now will he copen and cog. Tusser.
Mrs. Ford, I cannot cog; I cannot prate, Mrs.
Ford: now shall I sin in my wish.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

COG. n. s. The tooth of a wheel, by which it acts upon another wheel.

TO COG. v. a. [from the noun.] To fix cogs
in a wheel.

CO'GENCY. n. s. [from cogent.] Force; strength; power of compelling; conviction.

Maxims and axioms, principles of science, because they are self-evident, have been supposed innate; although nobody ever shewed the foundation of their clearness and cogency. Locke.

CO'GENT. adj. [cogens, Latin.] Forcible; resistless; convincing; powerful;
having the power to compel conviction.

Such is the cogent force of nature. Prior.
They have contrived methods of deceit, one repugnant to another, to evade, if possible, this most cogent proof of a Deity. Bentley.

CO'GENTLY. adv. [from cogent.] With resistless force; forcibly; so as to force conviction.

They forbid us to hearken to those proofs, as weak or fallacious, which our own existence, and the sensible parts of the universe, offer so clearly and cogently to our thoughts. Locke.

CO'GGER. n. s. [from To cog.] A flatterer; a wheedler.

CO'GGLESTONE. n. s. [cuogolo, Ital.] A little stone; a small pebble. Skinner.

CO'GITABLE. adj. [from cogito, Latin.]
That which may be thought on; what may be the subject of thought.

TO CO'GITATE. v. n. [cogito, Lat.] To think. Diſt.

COGITA'TION. n. s. [cogitatio, Latin.]

1. Thought; the act of thinking.

Having their cogitations darkened, and being strangers from the life of God, from the ignorance which is in them. Hooker.

A picture puts me in mind of a friend: the intention of the mind, in seeing, is carried to the object represented; which is no more than simple cogitation, or apprehension of the person. Stillingf.

This Descartes proves that brutes have no cogi- tation, because they could never be brought to signify their thoughts by any artificial signs.
Ray on the Creator.

These powers of cogitation, and volition, and sensation, are neither inherent in matter as such, nor acquirable to matter by any motion and modification of it. Bentley.

2. Purpose; reflection previous to action.

The king, perceiving that his desires were intemperate, and his cogitations vast and irregular, began not to brook him well. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. Meditation; contemplation; mental speculation.

On some great charge employ'd
He seem'd, or fixt in cogitation deep. Milt. Par. Lost.

CO'GITATIVE. adj. [from cogito, Latin.]
1. Having the power of thought and reflection.

If these powers of cogitation and sensation are neither inherent in matter, nor acquirable to matter, they proceed from some cogitative substance, which we call spirit and soul. Bentley.

2. Given to thought and deep meditation.

The earl had the closer and more reserved countenance, being by nature more cogitative. Wotton.

COGNA'TION. n. s. [cognatio, Latin.]

1. Kindred; descent from the same original.

Two vices I shall mention, as being of near cog- nation to ingratitude; pride, and hard-heartedness, or want of compassion. South.

Let the critics tell me what certain sense they could put upon either of these four words, by their mere cognition with each other. Watts on the Mind.

2. Relation; participation of the same nature.

He induceth us to ascribe effects unto causes of no cognition. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COGNISEE'. n. s. [In law.] He to whom a fine in lands or tenements is acknowledged. Cowell.

CO'GNISOUR. n. s. [In law.] Is he that passeth or acknowledgeth a fine in lands or tenements to another. Cowell.

COGNIT'ION. n. s. [cognitio, Latin.]
Knowledge; complete conviction.

I will not be myself, nor have cognitio
Of what I feel: I am all patience.
Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

God, as he created all things, so is he beyond and in them all; not only in power, as under his subjection; or in his presence, as in his cognition;
but in their very essence, as in the soul of their causalities. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CO'GNITIVE. adj. [from cognitus, Latin.]
Having the power of knowing.

Unless the understanding employ and exercise its cognitive or apprehensive power about these terms, there can be no actual apprehension of them.
South's Sermons.

CO'GNIZABLE. adj. [cognosibile, Fr.]

1. That falls under judicial notice.
2. Liable to be tried, judged, or examined.

Some are merely of ecclesiastical cognizance;
others of a mixed nature, such as are cognizable
both in the ecclesiastical and secular courts.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

CO'GNIZANCE. n. s. [cognosance, Fr.]

1. Judicial notice; trial; judicial authority.

It is worth the while, however, to consider how we may discountenance and prevent those evils which the law can take no cognizance of. L'Esfr.

Happiness or misery, in converse with others, depends upon things which human laws can take no cognizance of. Seurb.

The moral crime is completed, there are only circumstances wanting to work it up for the cognizance of the law. Addison.

2. A badge, by which any one is known.

And at the king's going away the earl's servants stood, in a seemly manner, in their livery coats, with cognizances, ranged on both sides, and made the king a bow. Bacon's Henry VII.

These were the proper cognizances and coat-arms of the tribes. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COGNOMINAL. adj. [cognomen, Lat.]

Having the same name.

Nor do those animals more resemble the creature on earth, than they on earth the constellations which pass under animal names in heaven; nor the dog-fish at sea much more make out the dog of the land, than his cognominal or namesake in the heavens. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COGNOMINATION. n. f. [cognomen, Latin.]

1. A surname; the name of a family.
2. A name added from any accident or quality.

Pompey deserved the name Great: Alexander, of the same cognomination, was generalissimo of Greece. Brown.

COGNOSCENTE. n. f. [cognosco, Lat.]

Knowledge; the state or act of knowing. Diff.

COGNOSCIBLE. adj. [cognosco, Lat.] That may be known; being the object of knowledge.

The same that is said for the redundancy of matters intelligible and cognoscible in things natural, may be applied to things artificial.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To COHABIT. v. n. [cohabito, Latin.]

1. To dwell with another in the same place.

The Philistines were worsted by the captivated ark, which foraged their country more than a conquering army: they were not able to cohabit with that holy thing. South.

2. To live together as husband and wife.

He knew her not to be his own wife, and yet had a design to cohabit with her as such. Fiddes's Sermons.

COHABITANT. n. f. [from cohabit.] An inhabitant of the same place.

The oppressed Indians protest against that heaven where the Spaniards are to be their cohabitants. Dwight of Piety.

COHABITATION. n. f. [from cohabit.]

1. The act or state of inhabiting the same place with another.
2. The state of living together as married persons.

Which defect, though it could not evacuate a marriage after cohabitation, and actual consummation, yet it was enough to make void a contract. Bacon's Henry VII.

Monsieur Brumars, at one hundred and two years, died for love of his wife, who was ninety-two at her death, after seventy years cohabitation. Tatler.

COHEIR. n. f. [coheres, Lat.] One of several among whom an inheritance is divided.

Married persons, and widows, and virgins, are all coheirs in the inheritance of Jesus, if they live within the laws of their estate. Taylor's Holy Living.

COHEIRESS. n. f. [from coheir.] A woman who has an equal share of an inheritance with other women.

VOL. I.

To COHERE. v. n. [cohereo, Latin.]

1. To stick together; to hold fast one to another, as parts of the same mass.

Two pieces of marble, having their surface exactly plain, polite, and applied to each other in such a manner as to intercept the air, do cohere firmly together as one. Woodward.

We find that the force, whereby bodies cohere, is very much greater when they come to immediate contact, than when they are at ever so small a finite distance. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

None want a place; for all, their centre found, Hung to the goddess, and coher'd around; Not closer, orb in orb conglomb'd, are seen The buzzing bees about their dusky queen. Pope's Dunciad.

2. To be well connected; to follow regularly in the order of discourse.

3. To suit; to fit; to be fitted to.

Had time coher'd with place, or place with wishing. Shakespeare.

4. To agree.

COHERENCE. } n. f. [coherentia, Latin.]

COHERENCY. } n. f. [coherentia, Latin.]

1. That state of bodies in which their parts are joined together, from what cause soever it proceeds, so that they resist division and separation; nor can be separated by the same force by which they might be simply moved, or, being only laid upon one another, might be parted again. Quincy.

The pressure of the air will not explain, nor can be a cause of, the coherence of the particles of air themselves. Locke.

Matter is either fluid or solid; words that may comprehend the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion. Bentley.

2. Connection; dependency; the relation of parts or things one to another.

It shall be no trouble to find each controversy's resting place, and the coherence it hath with things, either on which it dependeth, or which depend on it. Hooker, Preface.

Why between sermons and faith should there be ordinarily that coherence, which causes have with their usual effects? Hooker.

3. The texture of a discourse, by which one part follows another regularly and naturally.

4. Consistency in reasoning, or relating, so that one part of the discourse does not destroy or contradict the rest.

Coherence of discourse, and a direct tendency of all the parts of it to the argument in hand, are most eminently to be found in him. Locke's Preface to St. Paul's Epistles.

COHERENT. adj. [coherens, Latin.]

1. Sticking together, so as to resist separation.

By coagulating and diluting, that is, making their parts more or less coherent. Arbutn. on Alim. Where all must full, or not coherent be; And all that rises, rise in due degree. Pope's Essay on Man.

2. Connected; united.

The mind proceeds from the knowledge it stands possessed of already, to that which lies next, and is coherent to it, and so on to what it aims at. Locke.

3. Suitable to something else; regularly adapted.

Instruct my daughter, That time and place, with this deceit so lawful, May prove coherent. Shak. All's well that ends well.

4. Consistent; not contradictory to itself.

A coherent thinker, and a strict reasoner, is not to be made at once by a set of rules. Watts's Log.

COHESION. n. f. [from cohere.]

1. The act of sticking together.

Hard particles heaped together touch in a few points, and must be separable by less force than breaks a solid particle, whose parts touch in all the space between them, without any pores or interstices to weaken their cohesion. Newton's Opt. Solids and fluids differ in the degree of cohesion, which, being increased, turns a fluid into a solid. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. The state of union or inseparability.

What cause of their cohesion can you find? What props support, what chains the fabrick bind? Blackmore.

3. Connection; dependence.

In their tender years, ideas that have no natural cohesion come to be united in their heads. Locke.

COHESIVE. adj. [from cohere.] That has the power of sticking to another, and of resisting separation.

COHESIVENESS. n. f. [from cohesive.] The quality of being cohesive; the quality of resisting separation.

To COHIBIT. v. a. [cohibeo, Lat.] To refrain; to hinder. Dict.

To COHOBATE. v. a. To pour the distilled liquor upon the remaining matter, and distil it again.

The juices of an animal body are, as it were, cohabated, being excreted, and admitted again into the blood with the fresh aliment. Arbutn. on Alim.

COHOBATION. n. f. [from cohabitare.] A returning any distilled liquor again upon what it was drawn from, or upon fresh ingredients of the same kind, to have it the more impregnated with their virtues. Quincy.

Cohobation is the pouring the liquor distilled from any thing back upon the remaining matter, and distilling it again. Locke.

This oil, dulcified by cohabation with an aromatized spirit, is of use to restore the digestive faculty. Greav's Muscum.

COHORT. n. f. [cohortis, Latin.]

1. A troop of soldiers in the Roman armies, containing about five hundred foot.

The Romans levied as many cohorts, companies, and ensigns, from hence, as from any of their provinces. Camden.

2. [In poetical language.] A body of warriors.

Th' arch-angelic pow'r prepar'd For swift descent; with him the cohort bright Of watchful cherubim. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Here Churchill, not so prompt To vaunt as fight, his hardy cohorts join'd With Eugene. Philips's Blenheim.

COHORTATION. n. f. [cohortatio, Latin.] Encouragement by words; incitement. Dict.

COIFF. n. f. [coiffe, French; from coiffe, for cucufa, low Lat.] The head-dress; a lady's cap; the serjeant's cap.

The judges of the four circuits in Wales, although they are not of the first magnitude, nor need be of the degree of the coiff, yet are they considerable. Bacon's Advice to Villiers No less a man than a brother of the coiff began his suit, before he had been a twelvemonth at the Temple. Addison, Spectator.

Instead of home-spun coiffs were seen Good pinners edg'd with colbertine. Swift.

COIFFED. adj. [from coiff.] Wearing a coiff.

COIFFURE. n. f. [coiffure, Fr.] Head-dress.

I am pleas'd with the coiffure now in fashion, and think it shews the good taste of the most able part of the sex. Addison.

COIGNE. n. f. [An Irish term, as it seems.]

Fitz Thomas of Desmond began that extortion of coigne and livery, and pay; that is, he and his army took horse meat and man's meat, and money, at pleasure. Davies on Ireland.

COIGNE. n. f. [French.]

1. A corner.

No jutting frieze,
Buttrice, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant bed. Shaksp. Macbeth.
See you yond' coin u' t'n' capitol, yond' corner stone? Shaksp.peare.

2. A wooden wedge used by printers.

To COIL. v. a. [cueillir, Fr.] To gather into a narrow compass; as, to coil a rope, to wind it in a ring.

The lurking particles of air, so expanding themselves, must necessarily plump out the sides of the bladder, and so keep them turgid, until the pressure of the air, that at first coiled them, be re-admitted to do the same thing again. Boyle.

COLL. n. f. [kolleren, Germ.]

1. Tumult; turmoil; bustle; stir; hurry; confusion.

Who was so firm, so constant, that this coil
Would not infect his reason. Shaksp. Tempest.
You, mistress, all this coil is long of you. Shak.
In that sleep of death, what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
Must give us pause. Shaksp.peare's Hamlet.

2. A rope wound into a ring.

COIN. n. f. [coigne, French.] A corner; any thing standing out angularly; a square brick cut diagonally: called often quain, or quine.

COIN. n. f. [by some imagined to come from cuneus, a wedge, because metal is cut in wedges to be coined.]

1. Money stamped with a legal impression.

He gave Demetrius a good sum of gold in ready coin, which Menalcas had bequeathed. Sidney.
You have made
Your holy hat be stamp'd on the king's coin.
Shaksp.peare's Henry VIII.

I cannot tell how the poets will succeed in the explication of coins, to which they are generally very great strangers. Aldison.

She now contracts her vast design,
And all her triumphs shrink into a coin. Pope.

2. Payment of any kind.

The loss of present advantage to flesh and blood, is repaid in a nobler coin. Hammond's Fundamentals.

To COIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mint or stamp metals for money.

They cannot touch me for coining; I am the king. Shaksp.peare.
They never put in practice a thing so necessary as coined money is. Peacham of Antiquities.
Tenants cannot coin rent just at quarter-day, but must gather it by degrees. Locke.
Can we be sure that this medal was really coined by an artificer, or is but a product of the soil from whence it was taken? Bentley.

2. To make or invent.

My lungs
Coin words till their decay, against those measles
Which we disdain should tetter us.
Shaksp.peare's Coriolanus.

3. To make or forge any thing, in an ill sense.

Never coin a formal lye on't,
To make the knight overcome the giant. Hudibras.
Those motives induced Virgil to coin his fable. Dryden.
Some tale, some new pretence, he daily coin'd,
To sooth his sister, and delude her mind.
Dryden's Virgil.

A term is coined to make the conveyance easy.
Attorney.

COINAGE. n. f. [from coin.]

1. The art or practice of coining money.

The care of the coinage was committed to the inferior magistrates; and I don't find that they had a public trial, as we solemnly practise in this country. Arbutnot.

2. Coin; money; stamped and legitimated metal.

This is conceived to be a coinage of some Jews, in derision of Christians, who first began that portrait. Brown.

Moor was forced to leave off coining, by the great crowds of people continually offering to return his coinage upon him. Swift.

3. The charges of coining money.

4. New production; invention.

Unnecessary coinage, as well as unnecessary revival of words, runs into affectation; a fault to be avoided on either hand. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

5. Forgery; invention.

This is the very coinage of your brain;
This bodiless creation ecstasy
Is very cunning in. Shaksp.peare's Hamlet.

To COINCIDE. v. n. [coincido, Latin.]

1. To fall upon the same point; to meet in the same point.

If the equator and ecliptick had coincided, it would have rendered the annual revolution of the earth useless. Cbeyne.

2. To concur; to be consistent with.

The rules of right judgment, and of good ratiocination, often coincide with each other. Watts's Logic.

COINCIDENCE. n. f. [from coincide.]

1. The state of several bodies, or lines, falling upon the same point.

An universal equilibrium, arising from the coincidence of infinite centres, can never be naturally acquired. Bentley.

2. Concurrence; consistency; tendency of many things to the same end; occurrence of many things at the same time.

The very concurrence and coincidence of so many evidences that contribute to the proof, carries a great weight. Hale.

3. It is followed by with.

The coincidence of the planes of this rotation with one another, and with the plane of the ecliptick, is near near the truth. Cbeyne's Philosophical Principles.

COINCIDENT. adj. [from coincide.]

1. Falling upon the same point.

These circles I viewed through a prism; and, as I went from them, they came nearer and nearer together, and at length became coincident. Newton's Opticks.

2. Concurrent; consistent; equivalent: followed by with.

Christianity teaches nothing but what is perfectly suitable to and coincident with the ruling principles of a virtuous and well inclined man. Sentb.

These words of our apostle are exactly coincident with that controverted passage in his discourse to the Athenians. Bentley.

COINCIDATION. n. f. [from con and indico, Latin.] Many symptoms betokening the same cause.

COINER. n. f. [from coin.]

1. A maker of money; a minter; a stamp-er of coin.

My father was I know not where
When I was stamp'd: some coiner with his tools
Made me a counterfeit. Shaksp.peare's Cymbeline.
It is easy to find designs that never entered into the thoughts of the sculptor or the coiner. Aldison on Medals.

There are only two patents referred to, both less advantageous to the coiner than this of Wood. Swift.

2. A counterfeiter of the king's stamp; a maker of base money.

COLD. adj. [cold, Saxon; kalt, German.]

1. Not hot; not warm; gelid; wanting warmth; being without heat.

The diet in the state of manhood ought to be solid; and their chief drink water cold, because in such a state it has its own natural spirit. Arbutnot on Aliments.

The aggregated soil
Death, with his mace petrifick, cold, and dry,
As with a trident, smote. Milton.

2. Causing sense of cold.

Bids us seek
Some better shroud, some better warmth, to cherish
Our limbs benumb'd, ere this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gaber'd beams Reflected may with matter fere foment. Milton.

3. Chill; shivering; having sense of cold.

O noble English, that could entertain,
With half their forces, the foul power of France;
And let another half stand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action.

4. Having cold qualities; not volatile; not acrid.

Cold plants have a quicker perception of the heat of the sun than the hot herbs; as a cold hand will sooner find a little warmth than an hot.

5. Indifferent; frigid; wanting passion; wanting zeal; without concern; unactive; unconcerned; wanting ardour.

There sprung up one kind of men, with whose zeal and forwardness the rest being compared, were thought to be marvellous cold and dull.

Infinite shall be made cold in religion, by your example, that never were hurt by reading books.

Temp'rately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress.—Sir, these cold ways,
That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous.

New dated letters these,
Their cold intent, tenour, and substance thus;
Here doth he wish his person, and his power,
The which he could not levy.

We should not, when the blood was cold, have threatened our prisoners with the sword.

To see a world in flames, and an host of angels in the clouds, one must be much of a stoick to be a cold and unconcerned spectator.

No drum or trumpet needs
T' inspire the coward, or to warm the cold;
His voice, his sole appearance, makes them bold.

O, thou hast touch'd me with thy sacred theme,
And my cold heart is kindled at thy flame.

A man must be of a very cold or degenerate temper, whose heart doth not burn with him in the midst of praise and adulation.

6. Unaffected; unable to move the passions.

What a deal of cold business doth a man mispend
the better part of life in? In scattering compliments, tendering visits, following feasts and plays.

The rabble are pleased at the first entry of a disguise; but the jest grows cold even with them too, when it comes on in a second scene.

7. Reserved; coy; not affectionate; not cordial; not friendly.

Let his knights have colder looks
Among you.

The commissioners grew more reserved, and cold towards each other.

8. Chaste; not heated by vitious appetite.

Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seem cold, the time you may in hoodwink;
We've willing dames enough.

My master's suit will be but cold,
Since she respects my mistress' love.

Not hasty; not violent.

Not affecting the scent strongly.

At the hedge corner, in the coldest fault.

Smell this business with a sense as cold
As is a dead man's nose.

1. The cause of the sensation of cold; the privation of heat; the frigorifick power.

Fair lined slippers for the cold.
Heat and cold are nature's two hands, whereby she chiefly worketh: and heat we have in readiness, in respect of the fire; but for cold, we must stay till it cometh, or seek it in deep caves, or high mountains: and, when all is done, we cannot obtain it in any great degree.

Had first his precept so to move, so shine,
As might affect the earth with cold and heat

Scarce tolerable, and from the north to call Decrepid winter, from the south to bring Solstitial summer's heat.

2. The sensation of cold; coldness; chilnests.

When the saw her lord prepar'd to part,
A deadly cold ran shiv'ring to her heart.

A whoreson cold, Sir; a cough.

All that we have of heavenly joy,
Those rains, so covering the earth, might pro-videntially contribute to the disruption of it, by stopping all the pores and all evaporation, which would make the vapours within struggle violently, as we get a fever by a cold.

What disease hast thou?
Let no ungentle cold destroy

3. A disease caused by cold; the obstruction of perspiration.

What England says, say briefly, gentle lord;
We coldly pause for thee.

Swift seem'd to wonder, what he meant,
Nor would believe my lord had sent;

So never offer'd once to stir,
But coldly said, Your servant, Sir.

Co'LDLY. adv. [from cold.]

Without heat.

Without concern; indifferently; negligently; without warmth of temper or expression.

What England says, say briefly, gentle lord;
We coldly pause for thee.

Swift seem'd to wonder, what he meant,
Nor would believe my lord had sent;

So never offer'd once to stir,
But coldly said, Your servant, Sir.

Co'LDNESS. n. s. [from cold.]

He relates the excessive coldness of the water they met with in summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter.

Such was the discord, which did first disperse
Form, order, beauty, through the universe;
While dryness, moisture, coldness heat resist;

All that we have, and that we are, subsists.

Divisions of religion are not only the farthest spread, because in religion all men presume themselves interested; but they are also, for the most part, hotly profetured forasmuch as coldness, which, in other contentions, may be thought to proceed from moderation, is not in these so favourably construed.

If, upon reading admired passages in authors, he finds a coldness and indifference in his thoughts, he ought to conclude, that he himself wants the faculty of discovering them.

It betrayed itself in a sort of indifference and carelessness in all her actions; and coldness to her best friends.

Unhappy youth! how will thy coldness raise Tempests and storms in his afflicted bosom!

Let ev'ry tongue its various censures chuse,

Absolve with coldness, or with spite accuse.

Ten brace and more of greyhounds;

With golden muzzles all their mouths were bound,

Add collars of the same their necks furround.

Let ev'ry tongue its various censures chuse,

Absolve with coldness, or with spite accuse.

4. Chastity; exemption from vehement desire.

The silver stream her virgin coldness keeps,
For evert murmurs, and for ever weeps.

COLE. n. s. [capl, Saxon.] A general name for all sorts of cabbage.

CO'LESEED. n. s. [from cole and seed.]
Cabbage seed.

Where land is rank, it is not good to sow wheat after a fallow; but coleseed or barley, and then wheat.

CO'LEWORT. n. s. [caplypwt, Sax.] A species of cabbage.

The decoction of coleworts is also commended to bathe them.

She took the coleworts, which her husband got
From his own ground (a small well-water'd spot);
She stripp'd the stalks of all their leaves; the best
She cull'd, and then with handy care she dress'd.

CO'LUCK. n. s. [colicus, Latin.]
It strictly is a disorder of the colon; but loosely, any disorder of the stomach or bowels that is attended with pain. There are four sorts: 1. A bilious colick, which proceeds from an abundance of acrimony or choler irritating the bowels, so as to occasion continual gripes, and generally with a looseness; and this is best managed with lenitives and emollients. 2. A flatulent colick, which is pain in the bowels from flatules and wind, which distend them into unequal and unnatural capacities; and this is managed with carminatives and moderate openers. 3. An hysterical colick, which arises from disorders of the womb, and is communicated by confeder of parts to the bowels; and is to be treated with the ordinary hystericks. 4. A nervous colick, which is from convulsive spasms and contortions of the guts themselves, from some disorders of the spirits, or nervous fluid, in their component fibres; whereby their capacities are in many places frightened, and sometimes so as to occasion obstinate obstructions: this is best remedied by brisk catharticks, joined with opiates and emollient diluters. There is also a species of this distemper which is commonly called the stone colick, by consent of parts, from the irritation of the stone or gravel in the bladder or kidneys; and this is most commonly to be treated by nephriticks and oily diureticks, and is greatly assisted with the carminative turpentine clysters.

CO'LUCK. adj. Affecting the bowels.

Intestine stone and ulcer, colick pangs.

To COLLA'PSE. v. n. [collabor, collapsus,

COLLIQUEFACTION. n. f. [colliquefacio, Latin.] The act of melting together; reduction to one mass by fluxion in the fire.

After the incorporation of metals by simple colliquefaction, for the better discovering of the nature and consents and dissents of metals, it would be tried by incorporating of their dissolutions. Bacon's Physical Remains.

COLLISION. n. f. [from collisio, Latin.]

1. The act of striking two bodies together.

Or, by collision of two bodies, grind the air attrite to fire. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The flint and the steel you may move apart as long as you please; but it is the hitting and collision of them that must make them strike fire. Bentley.

2. The state of being struck together; a clash.

Then from the clashes between popes and kings,
Debate, like sparks from flint's collision, springs.

The devil sometimes borrowed fire from the altar to consume the votaries; and, by the mutual collision of well-meant zeal, set even orthodox Christians in a flame.

To COLLOCATE. v. a. [colloco, Latin.]
To place; to station.

for the eyes.

COLMAR. n. f. [Fr.] A sort of pear.

CO'LOGN Earth. n. f. Is a deep brown, very light bastard ochre, which is no pure native fossil; but contains more vegetable than mineral matter, and owes its origin to the remains of wood long buried in the earth.

CO'OLON. n. f. [κόλον, a member.]
1. A point [:] used to mark a pause greater than that of a comma, and less than that of a period. Its use is not very exactly fixed; nor is it very necessary, being confounded by most with the semicolon.
It was used, before punctuation was refined, to mark almost any sense less than a period. To apply it properly, we should place it, perhaps, only where the sense is continued without dependence of grammar or construction; as, I love him, I despise him: I have long ceased to trust, but shall never forbear to succour him.

2. The greatest and widest of all the intestines, about eight or nine hands breadth long. It begins where the ilium ends, in the cavity of the os ilium on the right side; from thence ascending by the kidney on the same side, it passes under the concave side of the liver, to which it is sometimes tied; as likewise to the gall-bladder, which tinges it yellow in that place: then it runs under the bottom of the stomach to the spleen in the left side, to which it is also knit:
from thence it turns down to the left kidney; and thence passing, in form of an S, it terminates at the upper part of the os sacrum in the rectum.

Now, by your cruelty hard bound,
I strain my guts, my colon wound.

The contents of the colon are of a sour, fetid,
acid smell in rabbits.

CO'OLONEL. n. f. [of uncertain etymology. Skinner imagines it originally colonialis, the leader of a colony. Minsbeu deduces it from colonna, a pillar: as, patriæ columen; exercitus columen. Each is plausible.] The chief commander of a regiment; a field officer of the highest rank, next to the general officers. It is now generally founded with only two distinct syllables, col'nel.

The chiefest help must be the care of the colonel, that hath the government of all his garrison.

Captain or colonel, or knight in arms,
Whose chance on these defenceless doors may seize,
If deed of honour did thee ever please,
Guard them, and him within protect from harms.

CO'OLONELSHIP. n. f. [from colonel.] The office or character of colonel.
While he continued a subaltern, he complain'd against the pride of colonels towards their officers, yet, in a few minutes after he had received his commission for a regiment, he confessed that colonelship was coming fast upon him.

To CO'OLONIZE. v. a. [from colony.] To plant with inhabitants; to settle with new planters; to plant with colonies.
There was never an hand drawn, that did double the rest of the habitable world, before this; for so a man may truly term it, if he shall put to account as well that that is, as that which may be hereafter, by the farther occupation and colonizing of those countries: and yet it cannot be affirmed, if one speak ingenuously, that it was the propagation of the Christian faith that was the adamant of that discovery, entry, and plantation; but gold and silver, and temporal profit and glory; so that what was first in God's providence, was but second in man's appetite and intention.

Druina hath advantage by acquist of islands,
which she colonizeth, and fortifieth daily.

COLONNA'DE. n. f. [from colonna, Ital. a column.]
1. A peristyle of a circular figure; or a series of columns disposed in a circle, and insulated within side.

COLOSSEAN. adj. [colossæus, Lat.] In form of a colossus; of the height and bigness of such a statue; giantlike.

COLOUR. n. f. [color, Latin.]

1. The appearance of bodies to the eye only; hue; dye.

It is a vulgar idea of the colours of solid bodies, when we perceive them to be a red, or blue, or green tincture of the surface; but a philosophical idea, when we consider the various colours to be different sensations, excited in us by the refracted rays of light, reflected on our eyes in a different manner, according to the different size, or shape, or situation of the particles of which surfaces are composed. Watts.

Her hair shall be of what colour it please God. Shakespeare.

For though our eyes can nought but colours see, Yet colours give them not their pow'r of sight. Davies.

The lights of colours are more refrangible one than another in this order; red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, deep violet. Newton's Opticks.

2. The freshnets, or appearance of blood in the face.

My cheeks no longer did their colour boast. Dryd. A sudden horror seiz'd his giddy head, And his ears trickled, and his colour fled. Dryden.

3. The tint of the painter.

When each bold figure just begins to live, The treach'rous colours the fair art betray, And all the bright creation fades away. Pope.

4. The representation of any thing superficially examined.

Their wisdom is only of this world, to put false colours upon things, to call good evil, and evil good, against the conviction of their own consciences. Swift.

5. Concealment; palliation; excuse; superficial cover.

It is no matter if I do halt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable. Shakespeare's Henry IV. Their sin admitted no colour or excuse. King Charles.

6. Appearance; pretence; false shew.

Under the colour of commending him, I have access my own love to prefer. Shakespeare. Merchants came to Rhodes with a great ship led with corn; under the colour of the sale whereof, they noted all that was done in the city. Kneller's History of the Turks.

7. Kind; species; character.

Boys and women are, for the most part, cattle of this colour. Shakespeare's As you like it.

8. In the plural, a standard; an ensign of war: they say the colours of the foot, and standard of the horse.

He at Venice gave.

His body to that pleasant country's earth, And his pure soul on o his captain Christ, Under whose colours he had fought so long. Shakespeare's Richard II.

Against all checks, rebukes, and manners, I must advance the colours of my love, And not retire. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

The banks were filled with companies, passing all along the river under their colours, with trumpets sounding. Kneller.

An author compares a ragged coin to a tattered colour. Addison.

TO COLOUR. v. a. [coloro, Latin.]

1. To mark with some hue, or dye.

The rays, to speak properly, are not coloured: in them there is nothing else than a certain power and disposition to stir up a sensation of this or that colour. Newton's Opticks.

2. To palliate; to excuse; to dress in specious colours, or fair appearances.

I told him, that I would not favour or colour in any sort his former folly. Raleigh's Essays. He colours the falsehood of Æneas by an express command from Jupiter to forsake the queen. Dryden's Dedicat. Æneid.

3. To make plausible.

We have scarce heard of an insurrection that was not coloured with grievances of the highest kind, or countenanced by one or more branches of the legislature. Addison's Freeholder.

4. TO COLOUR a stranger's goods, is when a freeman allows a foreigner to enter goods at the Custom House in his name; so that the foreigner pays but single duty, when he ought to pay double. Phillips.

TO COLOUR. v. n. To blush. A low word, only used in conversation.

COLOURABLE. adj. [from colour.] Specious; plausible. It is now little used.

They have now a colourable pretence to withstand innovations, having accepted of other laws and rules already. Spenser.

They were glad to lay hold on so colourable a matter, and to traduce him as an author of suspicious innovation. Hooker.

Had I sacrificed ecclesiastical government and revenues to their covetousness and ambition, they would have found no colourable necessity of an army. King Charles.

We hope the mercy of God will consider us unto some mineration of our offences; yet had not the sincerity of our parents so colourable expectations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COLOURABLY. adv. [from colourable.]

Speciously; plausibly.

The process, howsoever colourably awarded, hath not hit the very mark whereat it was directed. Bacon.

COLOURED. participial adj. [from colour.]

Streaked; diversified with variety of hues.

The coloured are coarser juiced, and therefore not so well and equally concocted. Bacon's Natural History.

COLOURING. n. f. [from colour.]

The part of the painter's art that teaches to lay on his colours with propriety and beauty.

But as the slightest sketch, if justly trac'd, Is by ill colouring but the more disgrac'd; So by false learning is good sense defac'd. Pope.

COLOURIST. n. f. [from colour.] A painter who excels in giving the proper colours to his designs.

Titian, Paul Veronese, Van Dyck, and the rest of the good colourists, have come nearest to nature. Dryden's Duffenoy.

COLOURLESS. adj. [from colour.] Without colour; not distinguished by any hue; transparent.

Transparent substances, as glass, water, and air, when made very thin by being blown into bubbles, or otherways formed into plates, exhibit various colours, according to their various thinness; although, at a greater thickness, they appear very clear and colourless. Newton's Opticks.

Pellucid colourless glass or water, by being beaten into a powder or froth, do acquire a very intense whiteness. Bentley.

COLT. n. f. [colt, Saxon.]

1. A young horse: used commonly for the male offspring of a horse, as foal for the female.

The colt hath about four years of growth, and so the fawn, and so the calf. Bacon's Nat. History. Like colts or unmanaged horses, we start at dead bones and lifeless blocks. Taylor's Holy Living.

No sports, but what belong to war, they know; To break the stubborn colt, to bend the bow. Dryden's Æneid.

Mutual combustions, bloodsheds, and wastes may enforce them, through very faintness, after the experience of so endless miseries. Hooker.

Prophesying, with accents terrible,
Of dire combustion, and confus'd events,
New-burth'd to th' woeful time. Shakesp. Macb.

Those cruel wars between the houses of York and Lancaster, brought all England into an horrible combustion.

How much more of pow'r,
Army against army, numberless to raise Dreadful combustion warring, and disturb,
Though not destroy, their happy native seat! Milr.

But say, from whence this new combustion springs?
Dryden.

The comet moves in an inconceivable fury, and combustion, and at the same time with an exact regularity. Addison's Guardian.

To COME. v. n. pret. came, particip. come. [coman, Saxon; komen, Dut. kommen, German.]

1. To remove from a distant to a nearer place; to arrive: opposed to go.

And troubled blood through his pale face was seen
To come and go, with tidings from the heart.

Cæsar will come forth to-day. Shak. Julius Cæs.
Coming to look on you, thinking you dead,
I spake unto the crown as having sense.

The colour of the king doth come and go,
Between his purpose and his conscience.

Are come to play a pleasant comedy. Shakefp. Taming of the Shrew.
A long, exact, and serious comedy;
In every scene some moral let it teach,
And, if it can, at once both please and preach. Pope.
- COMELINESS. n. s.* [from comely.] Grace; beauty; dignity. It signifies something less forcible than beauty, less elegant than grace, and less light than prettiness.
A careless comeliness with comely care. Sidney.

The service of God hath not such perfection of grace and comeliness, as when the dignity of the place doth concur. Hooker.

They skilled not of the goodly ornaments of poetry, yet were sprinkled with some pretty flowers, which gave good grace and comeliness. Spenser on Ireland.

Hardly shall you meet with man or woman so aged or ill-favoured, but, if you will commend them for comeliness, nay and for youth too, shall take it well. South.

There is great pulchritude and comeliness of proportion in the leaves, flowers, and fruits of plants. Ray on the Creation.

A horseman's coat shall hide,
Thy taper shape, and comeliness of side. Prior.

COMELY. adj. [from become; or from cpeman, Sax. to please.]

1. Graceful; decent; having dignity or grandeur of mien or look. Comeliness seems to be that species of beauty which excites respect rather than pleasure.

If the principal part of beauty is in decent motion, no marvel though persons in years seem many times more amiable; for no youth can be comely but by pardon, and considering the youth as to make up the comeliness. Bacon.

He that is comely, when old and decrepit, surely was very beautiful when he was young. South.

Thou art a comely, young, and valiant knight. Dryden.

2. Used of things, decent; according to propriety.

Oh, what a world is this, when what is comely Envenoms him that bears it. Shak. As you like it.

This is a happier and more comely time,
Than when these fellows ran about the streets,
Crying confusion. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

COMELY. adv. [from the adjective.]
Handsomely; gracefully.

To ride comely, to play at all weapons, to dance comely, be very necessary for a courtly gentleman. Ajebam's Schoolmaster.

COMER. n. s. [from come.] One that comes. Time is like a fashionable host;

That slightly shakes his parting guest by th' hand;
But with his arms outstretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps in the comer: welcome ever smiles,
And farewell goes out sighing. Shak. Troil. and Cress.

Yourself, renowned prince, then stood as fair,
As any comer I have look'd on yet,
For my affection. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.

Plants move upwards; but, if the sap puts up too fast, it maketh a slender stalk, which will not support the weight; and therefore these are all swift and hasty comers. Bacon.

It is natural to be kind to the last comer. L'Esq.
Now leave those joys, unsuited to thy age,
To a fresh comer, and resign the stage. Dryden.

The renowned champion of our lady of Loretto, and the miraculous translation of her chapel; about which he hath published a defiance to the world, and offers to prove it against all comers. Stillingfleet.

There it is not strange, that the mind should give itself up to the common opinion, or render itself to the first comer. Locke.

House and heart are open for a friend; the passage is easy, and not only admits, but even invites, the comer. South.

COMET. n. s. [cometa, Lat. a hairy star.]

A heavenly body in the planetary region, appearing suddenly, and again disappearing; and, during the time of its appearance, moving through its proper orbit like a planet. The orbits of comets are ellipses, having one of their foci in the centre of the sun; and being very long and eccentric, they become invisible when in that part most remote from the sun. Comets, popularly called blazing stars, are distinguished from other stars by a long train or tail of light, always opposite to the sun: hence arises a popular division of comets into three kinds, bearded, tailed, and haired comets; though the division rather relates to the different circumstances of the same comet, than to the phenomena of the several. Thus, when the comet is eastward ward of the sun, and moves from it; the comet is said to be bearded, barbatus, because the light marches before it. When the light is westward of the sun, the comet is said to be tailed, because the train follows it. When the comet and the sun are diametrically opposite, the earth being between them, the train is hid behind the body of the comet, excepting a little that appears around it, in form of a border of hair, hence called reinitur.

According to Sir Isaac Newton, the tail of a comet is a very thin vapour, emitted by the head or nucleus of the comet, ignited by the neighbourhood to the sun; and this vapour is furnished by the atmosphere of the comet. The vapours of comets being thus dilated, rarefied, and diffused, may probably, by means of their own gravity, be attracted down to the planets, and become intermingled with their atmospheres. For the conservation of the water and moisture of the planets, comets seem absolutely requisite; from whose condensed vapours and exhalations all that moisture which is spent in vegetations and putrefactions, and turned into dry earth, may be resupplied and recruited; for all vegetables increase wholly from fluids, and turn, by putrefaction, into earth. Hence the quantity of dry earth must continually increase, and the moisture of the globe decrease, and at last be quite evaporated, if it have not a continual supply. And I suspect, adds Sir Isaac, that the spirit which makes the finest, subtlest, and best part of our air, and which is absolutely requisite for the life and being of all things, comes principally from the comets.

The same great author has computed that the sun's heat, in the comet of 1680, was, to his heat with us at Midsummer, as twenty-eight thousand to one; and that the heat of the body of the comet was near two thousand times as great as that of red-hot iron. He also calculates, that a globe of red-hot iron, of the dimensions of our earth, would scarce be cool in fifty thousand years. If then the comet be supposed to cool a hundred times as fast as red-hot iron, yet, since its heat was two thousand times greater, supposing it of the bigness of the earth, it would not be cool in a million of years.

And wherefore gaze this goodly company,
As if they saw some wondrous monument,
Some comet, or unusual prodigy?

Such his fell glances as the fatal light
Of staring comets,

I considered a comet, or, in the language of the vulgar, a blazing-star, as a sky-rocket discharged by an hand that is almighty. And comets march with lawless horrors bright.

CO'METARY. } adj. [from comet.] Relat-

COMMON LAW contains those customs and usages which have, by long prescription, obtained in this nation the force of laws. It is distinguished from the statute law, which owes its authority to acts of parliament.

COMMON PLEAS. The king's court now held in Westminster Hall, but anciently moveable. Gavin observes, that till Henry III. granted the magna charta, there were but two courts, the exchequer, and the king's bench, so called because it followed the king; but, upon the grant of that charter, the court of common pleas was erected, and settled at Westminster. All civil causes, both real and personal, are, or were, formerly tried in this court, according to the strict laws of the realm; and Fortescue represents it as the only court for real causes. The chief judge is called the lord chief justice of the common pleas, and he is assisted by three or four associates,

Z. z. ciates,

ciates, created by letters patent from the king. Corwell.

In strange concealments. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Few own such sentiments; yet this concealment derives rather from the fear of man than of any Being above. Glanville.

2. The state of being hid; privacy; delitescence.

A person of great abilities is zealous for the good of mankind, and as solicitous for the concealment as the performance of illustrious actions. Addison's Freeholder.

3. Hiding-place; retreat; cover; shelter.

The choice of this holy name, as the most effectual concealment of a wicked design, supposes mankind satisfied that nothing but what is just is directed by the principles of it. Rogers.

The cleft tree
Offers its kind concealment to a few,
Their food its insects, and its moss their nests. Thomson.

TO CONCE'DE. v. a. [concedo, Latin.]

To yield; to admit; to grant; to let pass undisputed.

By expurgatory animadversions we might strike out great numbers of hidden qualities; and, having once a conceded list, we might with more safety attempt their reasons. Brown.

This must not be conceded without limitation. Boyle.

The atheist, if you concede to him that fortune may be an agent, doth presume himself safe and invulnerable. Bentley.

CONCE'IT. n. f. [concept, French; conceptus, Latin.]

1. Conception; thought; idea; image in the mind.

Here the very shepherds have their fancies lifted to so high concepts, as the learned of other nations are content both to borrow their names, and imitate their cunning. Sidney.

Impossible it was, that ever their will should change or incline to remit any part of their duty, without some object having force to avert their conceit from God. Hooker.

His grace looks cheerfully and smooth this morning;

There's some conceit, or other, likes him well,
When that he bids good-morrow with such spirit. Shakespeare.

In laughing there ever precedeth a conceit of somewhat ridiculous, and therefore it is proper to man. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Understanding; readiness of apprehension.

How often, alas! did her eyes say unto me, that they loved! and yet I, not looking for such a matter, had not my conceit open to understand them. Sidney.

The first kind of things appointed by laws humane, containeth whatsoever is good or evil, is notwithstanding more secret than that it can be discerned by every man's present conceit, without some deeper discourse and judgment. Hooker.

I shall be found of a quick conceit in judgment, and shall be admired. Wisdom, viii. 11.

3. Opinion, generally in a sense of contempt; fancy; imagination; fantastical notion.

I know not how conceit may rob
The treasury of life, when life itself
Yields to the theft. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Strong conceits, like a new principle, carries all easily with it, when yet above common sense. Locke.

Malbranche has an odd conceit,
As ever enter'd Frenchman's pate. Prior.

4. Opinion, in a neutral sense.

Scelt thou a man wise in his own conceit?
There is more hope of a fool than of him. Proverbs, xxvi. 12.

I shall not fail t' approve the fair conceit
The king hath of you. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

5. Pleasant fancy; gaiety of imagination; acuteness.

His wit is as thick as Tewksbury mustard:
there is no more conceit in him than is in a mallet. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

While he was on his way to the gibbet, a freak took him in the head to go off with a conceit. L'Esfrange.

6. Sentiment, as distinguished from imagery.

Some to conceit alone their works confine,
And glitt'ring thoughts struck out at ev'ry line. Pope.

7. Fondness; favourable opinion; opinionative pride.

Since by a little studying in learning, and great conceit of himself, he has lost his religion; may he find it again by harder study, under humbler truth. Bentley.

8. Out of CONCEIT with. No longer fond of.

Not that I dare assume to myself to have put him out of conceit with it, by having convinced him of the fantasticalness of it. Tillotson, Preface.

What hath chiefly put me out of conceit with this moving manner, is the frequent disappointment. Swift.

TO CONCE'IT. v. a. [from the noun.] To conceive; to imagine; to think; to believe.

One of two bad ways you must conceit me,
Either a coward, or a flatterer. Shak. Jul. Cæsar.

They looked for great matters at their hands, in a cause which they conceited to be for the liberty of the subject. Bacon.

He conceits himself to be struck at, when he is not so much as thought of. L'Esfrange.

The strong, by conceiting themselves weak, are thereby rendered as unactive, and consequently as useless, as if they really were so. South's Sermons.

CONCE'ITED. particip. adj. [from conceit.]

1. Endowed with fancy.

He was of countenance amiable, of feature comely, active of body, pleasantly conceited, and sharp of wit. Knoll's.

2. Proud;

2. Proud; fond of himself; opinionative; affected; fantastical.

There is another extreme in obscure writers, which some empty conceited heads are apt to run into, out of a prodigality of words, and a want of sense.

If you think me too conceited, Or to passion quickly heated.

What you write of me, would make me more conceited than what I scribble myself.

3. With of before the object of conceit.

Every man is building a several way, impotently conceited of his own model and his own materials.

If we consider how vicious and corrupt the Athenians were, how conceited of their own wit, science, and politeness.

CONCEITEDLY. adv. [from conceited.] Fancifully; whimsically.

Conceitedly dress her, and be assign'd By you fit place for every flower and jewel: Make her for love fit fuel.

CONCEITEDNESS. n. s. [from conceited.] Pride; opinionativeness; fondness of himself.

When men think none worthy esteem, but such as claim under their own pretences, partiality and conceitedness make them give the pre-eminence.

CONCEITLESS. adj. [from conceit.] Stupid; without thought; dull of apprehension.

Think'st thou I am so shallow, so conceitless, To be seduced by thy flattery.

CONCEIVABLE. adj. [from conceive.]

1. That may be imagined or thought. If it were possible to contrive an invention, whereby any conceivable weight may be moved by any conceivable power, with the same quickness, without other instrument, the works of nature would be too much subject to art.

2. That may be understood or believed. The freezing of the words in the air, in the Northern climes, is as conceivable as this strange union.

It is not conceivable, that it should be indeed that very person, whose shape and voice it assumed.

CONCEIVABLENESS. n. s. [from conceivable.] The quality of being conceivable.

CONCEIVABLY. adv. [from conceivable.] In a conceivable or intelligible manner.

TO CONCEIVE. v. a. [concevoir, Fr. concipere, Lat.]

CONCEIVER. n. s. [from conceive.] One that understands or apprehends.

Though hereof prudent symbols and pious allegories be made by wiser conceivers, yet common heads will fly unto superstitious applications.

CONCENT. n. s. [concentus, Latin.]

1. Concert of voices; harmony; concord of sound.

It is to be considered, that whatsoever virtue is in numbers, for conducting to concert of notes, is rather to be ascribed to the ante-number than to the entire number.

2. Consistency.

Reasons borrowed from nature and the schoolmen, as subservient mediums, carry a musick and consent to that which God hath said in his word.

'Tis in consent to his own principles, which allow no merit, no intrinsic worth, to accompany one state more than another.

TO CONCENTRATE. v. a. [concentrer, Fr. from con and centrum, Lat.] To drive into a narrow compass; to drive towards the centre: contrary to expand or dilate.

Spirit of vinegar, concentrated and reduced to its greatest strength, will coagulate the serum.

CONCENTRATION. n. s. [from concentrate.] Collection into a narrow space round the centre; compression into a narrow compass.

All circular bodies, that receive a concentration of the light, must be shadowed in a circular manner.

TO CONCENTRE. v. n. [concentrer, Fr. from con and centrum, Latin.] To tend to one common centre; to have the same centre with something else.

The bricks having first been formed in a circular mould, and then cut, before their burning, into four quarters or more, the sides afterwards join so closely, and the joints centre so exactly, that the pillars appear one entire piece.

All these are like so many lines drawn from several objects, that some way relate to him, and centre in him.

TO CONCENTRE. v. a. To direct or contract towards one centre.

The having a part left to animate, will serve to centre the spirits, and make them more active in the rest.

In thee concentrating all their precious beams Of sacred influence!

CONCENTRICAL. } adj. [concentricus, CONCENTRICK. } Lat.] Having one common centre.

If, as in water stir'd, more circles be Produce'd by one, love such additions take; Those, like so many spheres, but one heav'n make;

For they are all concentrick unto thee.

Any substance, pitched steady upon two points, as on an axis, and moving about on that axis, also describes a circle concentrick to the axis.

CONCEPTIBLE. adj. [from concipio, conceptum, Lat.] That may be conceived; intelligible; capable to be understood.

Some of his attributes, and the manifestations thereof, are not only highly delectable to the intellectual faculty, but are most suitable and easily conceivable by us, because apparent in his works.

If the crystalline humour had been concentrick to the sclerodes, the eye would not have admitted a whole hemisphere at one view.

If a stone be thrown into stagnating water, the waves excited thereby continue some time to arise in the place where the stone fell into the water, and are propagated from thence into concentrick circles upon the surface of the water to great distances.

The manner of its concretion is by concentrick rings, like those of an onion about the first kernel.

Circular revolutions in concentrick orbs about the sun, or other central body, could in no wise be attained without the power of the Divine arm.

CONCEPTACLE. n. s. [conceptaculum, Lat.] That in which any thing is contained; a vessel.

There is at this day resident, in that huge conceptacle, water enough to effect such a deluge.

CONCEPTIBLE. adj. [from concipio, conceptum, Lat.] That may be conceived; intelligible; capable to be understood.

Some of his attributes, and the manifestations thereof, are not only highly delectable to the intellectual faculty, but are most suitable and easily conceivable by us, because apparent in his works.

CONCEPTION. n. s. [conceptio, Latin.]

1. The act of conceiving, or growing quick with pregnancy.

I will greatly multiply thy sorrow by thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children.

Thy sorrow I will greatly multiply By thy conception; children thou shalt bring In sorrow forth.

2. The state of being conceived. Joy had the like conception in our eyes, And, at that instant, like a babe sprung up, Our own productions flatter us: it is impossible not to be fond of them at the moment of their conception.

3. Notion; idea; image in the mind. As conceptions are the images or resemblances of things to the mind within itself, in the like manner are words or names the marks, tokens, or resemblances of those conceptions to the minds of them whom we converse with.

Consult the acutest poets and speakers, and they will confess that their quickest, most admired conceptions, were such as darted into their minds, like sudden flashes of lightning, they knew not how, nor whence; and not by any certain consequence, or dependence of one thought upon another, as it is in matters of ratiocination.

To have right conceptions about them, we must bring our understandings to the inflexible natures and unalterable relations of things, and not endeavour to bring things to any preconceived notions of our own.

4. Sentiments; purpose. Thou but remember'st me of my own conception, have perceived a most faint neglect of late; which have rather blamed as my own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness.

Please your highness, note His dangerous conception in this point: Not friendly by his wish to your high person, His will is most malignant, and it stretches Beyond you to your friends.

5. Apprehension; knowledge. And as if beasts conceiv'd what reason were, And that conception should distinctly show They should the name of reasonable bear; For, without reason, none could reason know.

6. Conceit; sentiment; pointed thought. He is too flatulent sometimes, and sometimes too dry; many times unequal, and almost always forced; and, besides, is full of conceptions, points of epigram, and witticisms; all which are not only below the dignity of heroic verse, but contrary to its nature. Dryden's Funeral, Dedication.

CONCEPTIOUS. adj. [conceptum, Latin.] Apt to conceive fruitful; pregnant.

Common mother,
Enscar thy fertile and conceptious womb;
Let it no more bring out to ingrateful man.
Shakespeare's Timon.

Let early care thy main concerns secure,
Things of less moment may delays endure.
Debam.

This manner of exposing the private concerns of families, and sacrificing the secrets of the dead to the curiosity of the living, is one of those licentious practices, which might well deserve the animadversion of our government. Addis. Freeholder.

A Heathen emperor said, if the gods were offended, it was their own concern, and they were able to vindicate themselves.
Swift.

Religion is no trifling concern, to be performed in any careless and superficial manner.
Rogers.

2. Interest; engagement.

No plots th' alarm to his retirements give;
'Tis all mankind's concern that he should live.
Dryden.

When we speak of the conflagration of the world, these have no concern in the question.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. Importance; moment.

Mysterious secrets of a high concern,
And weighty truths, solid convincing sense,
Explain'd by unaffected eloquence. Roscommon.

The mind is stunned and dazzled amidst that variety of objects: she cannot apply herself to those things which are of the utmost concern to her.
Addison's Spectator.

4. Passion; affection; regard.

Ah, what concerns did both your souls divide!
Your honour gave us what your love denied. Dryd.
O Marcia, let me hope thy kind concerns,
And gentle wishes, follow me to battle.
Addison's Cato.

Why all this concern for the poor? We want them not, as the country is now managed: where the plough has no work, one family can do the business of fifty.
Swift.

CONCERNEDLY. adv. [from concern.]

With affection; with interest.

They had more positively and concernedly wedded his cause, than they were before understood to have done.
Clarendon.

CONCERNING. prep. [from concern: this word, originally a participle, has before a noun the force of a preposition.] Relating to; with relation to.

There is not any thing more subject to error, than the true judgment concerning the power and forces of an estate.
Bacon.

The ancients had no higher recourse than to nature, as may appear by a discourse concerning this point in Strabo.
Brown.

None can demonstrate that there is such an island as Jamaica; yet, upon testimony, I am free from all doubt concerning it.
Tillotson, Preface.

CONCERNMENT. n. s. [from concern.]

1. The thing in which we are concerned or interested; affair; business; interest.

To mix with thy concernments I desist
Henceforth, nor too much disapprove my own.
Milton's Agonistes.

This shews how useful you have been,
To bring the king's concernments in. Hudibras.

Yet when we're sick, the doctor's fetch in haste,
Leaving our great concernment to the last. Debam.

When my concernment takes up no more room or compass than myself, then, so long as I know where to breathe and to exist, I know also where to be happy.
South.

He that is wise in the affairs and concernments of other men, but careless and negligent of his own, that man may be said to be busy, but he is not wise.
Tillotson.

Our spiritual interests, and the great concernments of a future state, would doubtless recur often.
Atterbury.

Propositions which extend only to the present life, are small, compar'd with those that have influence upon our everlasting concernments.
Watts on the Mind.

2. Relation; influence.

Sir, 'tis of near concernment, and imports
No less than the king's life and honour.
Debam's Sophy.

He justly fears a peace with me would prove
Of ill concernment to his haughty love.
Dryden's Indian Emperor.

3. Intercourse; business.

The great concernment of men is with men, one amongst another.
Locke.

4. Importance; moment.

CONCLUSIBLE. adj. [from conclude.] Determinable; certain by regular proof.

'Tis as certainly concluſible from God's preſcience, that they will voluntarily do this, as that they will do it at all. Hammond.

CONCLUSION. n. s. [from conclude.]
1. Determination; final deciſion.

Ways of peaceable concluſion there are but theſe two certain; the one a ſentence of judicial deciſion, given by authority thereto appointed within ourſelves; the other, the like kind of ſentence given by a more univerſal authority. Hloker.

2. The collection from propoſitions pre-miſed; the conſequence.

The concluſion of experience, from the time paſt to the time preſent, will not be found and perfect, Bacon's War with Spain.

And marrying divers principles and grounds,
Out of their match a true concluſion brings. Davies.
Then doth the wit

Build ſound concluſions on thoſe idle grounds;
Then doth it fly the good, and ill purſue. Davies.

I only deal by rules of art,
Such as are lawful, and judge by Concluſions of aſtrology. Hudibras.

It is of the nature of principles, to yield a concluſion different from themſelves. Tilloſon.

He granted him both the major and the minor; but denied him the concluſion. Addiſon's Freeholder.

3. The cloſe; the laſt reſult of argumentative deduction.

Let us hear the concluſion of the whole matter:
Fear God, and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man. Eccleſi. xii. 13.

I have been reaſoning, and in concluſion have thought it beſt to return to what fortune hath made my home. Swift.

4. The event of experiments; experiment.

Her phyſician tells me,
She has purſued concluſions infinite
Of eaſy ways to die. Shak. Antony and Cleopatra.
We praſtiſe likewiſe all concluſions of grafting and inoculating, as well of wild trees as fruit trees. Bacon's New Atlantis.

5. The end; the laſt part.

I can ſpeak no longer; yet I will ſtrain myſelf to breathe out this one invocation, which ſhall be my concluſion. Howel.

6. In Shakeſpeare it ſeems to ſignify ſilence; confinement of the thoughts.

Your wife Octavia, with her moſt eyes
And ſtill concluſion, ſhall acquire no honour, Demuring upon me. Shak. Antony and Cleopatra.

CONCLUSIVE. adj. [from conclude.]
1. Decifive; giving the laſt determination to the opinion.

The agreeing votes of both houſes were not by any law or reaſon concluſive to my judgment. King Charles.

The laſt dictate of the underſtanding is not always abſolute in itſelf, nor concluſive to the will, yet it produces no antecedent nor external neceſſity. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbes.

They have ſecret reaſons for what they ſeem to do, which, whatever they are, they muſt be equally concluſive for us as they were for them. Regers.

2. Regularly conſequential.

Thoſe that are not men of art, not knowing the true forms of ſyllogiſm, cannot know whether they are made in right and concluſive modes and figures. Locke.

CONCLUSIVELY. adv. [from concluſive.]
Deciſively; with final determination.

This I ſpeak only to deſire Eupolis not to ſpeak peremptorily, or concluſively, touching the point of poſſibility, till they have heard me deduce the means of the execution. Bacon.

CONCLUSIVENESS. n. s. [from concluſive.]
Power of determining the opinion; regular conſequence.

To CONCOCT. v. a. [concoquo, Latin.]

1. To digest by the stomach, so as to turn food to nutriment.

The working of purging medicines cometh two or three hours after the medicines taken; for that the stomach first maketh a proof, whether it can concoct them.

Bacon.

Assuredly he was a man of a feeble stomach, unable to concoct any great fortune, prosperous or adverse.

Hayward.

The vital functions are performed by general and constant laws; the food is concocted, the heart beats, the blood circulates, the lungs play.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

The notions and sentiments of others judgment, as well as of our own memory, makes our property: it does, as it were, concoct our intellectual food, and turns it into a part of ourselves.

Watts on the Mind.

2. To purify or sublime by heat; to heighten to perfection.

The small close-lurking minister of fate, Whose high concocted venom through the veins A rapid lightning darts.

Thomson's Summer.

3. To ripen.

The root which continueth ever in the earth, is still concocted by the earth; and fruits and grains are half a year in concocting, whereas leaves are out and perfect in a month.

Bacon.

CONCOCTION. n. f. [from concoct.] Digestion in the stomach; maturation by heat; the acceleration of any thing towards purity and perfection.

This hard rolling is between concoction and a simple maturation.

Bacon's Natural History.

The constantest notion of concoction is, that it should signify the degrees of alteration of one body into another, from crudity to perfect concoction, which is the ultimity of that action or process.

Bacon's Natural History.

He, though he knew not which soul spake, Because both meant, both spake the same, Might thence a new concoction take, And part far purer than he came.

Donne.

CONCOLOUR. adj. [concolor, Latin.] Of one colour; without variety.

In concolour animals, and such as are confined unto the same colour, we measure not their beauty thereby; for if a crow or blackbird grow white, we account it more pretty.

Brown.

CONCOMITANCE. n. f. [from concomitant.] Subsistence together with another thing.

The secondary action subsisteth not alone, but in concomitancy with the other; so the nostrils are useful for respiration and smelling, but the principal use is smelling.

Brown.

To argue from a concomitancy to a causality, is not infallibly conclusive.

Glanville's Sceptis.

CONCOMITANT. adj. [concomitans, Latin.] Conjoined with; concurrent with; coming and going with, as collateral, not causative or consequential.

These effects are, from the local motion of the air, a concomitant of the sound, and not from the sound.

Bacon.

He made him the chief concomitant of his heir apparent and only son, in a journey of much adventure.

Wotton.

In consumptions, the preternatural concomitants, an universal heat of the body, a torminous diarrhoea, and hot distillations, have all a corrosive quality.

Harvey on Consumptions.

The other concomitant of ingratitude is hardness of heart, or want of compassion.

South's Sermons.

Horror stalks around,

Wild staring, and his sad concomitant

Despair, of abject look.

Philips.

Reproach is a concomitant to greatness, as satires and invectives were an essential part of a Roman triumph.

Addison.

And for tobacco, who could bear it?

Filthy concomitant of claret!

Prior.

Where antecedents, concomitants and consequents, causes and effects, signs and things signified, subjects and adjuncts, are necessarily connected with each other, we may infer.

Watts.

CONCOMITANTLY. adv. [from concomitant.] In company with others.

Diſt.

He confusedly and obscurely delivered his opinion. Clarendon.

4. Tumultuously; hastily; not deliberately; not exactly.

The propriety of thoughts and words, which are the hidden beauties of a play, are but confusedly judged in the vehemence of action. Dryden.

CONFUSEDNESS. n. f. [from confused.]
Want of distinctness; want of clearness.

Hitherto these titles of honour carry a kind of confusedness, and rather betokened a successive office than an established dignity. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

The cause of the confusedness of our notions, next to natural inability, is want of attention. Norris.

CONFUSION. n. f. [from confuse.]

1. Irregular mixture; tumultuous medley.

God, only wise, to punish pride of wit,
Among men's wits hath this confusion wrought;
As the proud tow'r, whose points the clouds did hit,
By tongues confusion was to ruin brought. Davies.

2. Tumult; disorder.

God is not a God of sedition and confusion, but of order and of peace. Hooker, Preface.
This is a happier and more comely time,
Than when these fellows ran about the streets
Crying confusion. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Indistinct combination.

The confusion of two different ideas, which a customary connexion of them in their minds hath made to them almost one, fills their heads with false views, and their reasonings with false consequences. Locke.

4. Overthrow; destruction.

The strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him in to his confusion. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

5. Astonishment; distraction of mind; hurry of ideas.

Confusion dwelt in ev'ry face,
And fear in ev'ry heart,
When waves on waves, and gulphs in gulphs,
O'ercome the pilot's art. Spectator.

CONFUTABLE. adj. [from confute.] Possible to be disproved; possible to be shewn false.

At the last day, that inquisitor shall not present to God a bundle of calumnies, or confutable accusations; but will offer unto his omniscience a true list of our transgressions. Brown.

CONFUTATION. n. f. [confutatio, Latin.] The act of confuting; disproof.

A confutation of atheism from the frame of the world. Bentley.

To CONFUTE. v. a. [confuto, Latin.] To convict of error or falsehood; to disprove.

He could on either side dispute;
Confute, change hands, and still confute. Hudibras.
For a man to doubt whether there be any hell, and thereupon to live as if there were none, but, when he dies, to find himself confuted in the flames, must be the height of woe. South.

CONGE. n. f. [congé, French.]

1. Act of reverence; bow; courtesy.

The captain salutes you with congé profound,
And your ladyship curtsies half way to the ground. Swift.

So courteous congé both did give and take,
With right hands plighted, pledges of good-will. Fairy Queen.

To CONGE. v. n. [from the noun.] To take leave.

I have conged with the duke, and done my adieu with his nearest. Shak. All's well that ends well.

CONGE D'ELIRE is French; and signifies, in common law, the king's permission royal to a dean and chapter, in time of vacation, to chuse a bishop. The king, as sovereign patron of all archbishopricks, bishopricks, and other ecclesiastical benefices, had, in ancient times, the free appointment of all ecclesiastical dignities; investing them first per baculum & annulum, and afterwards by his letters patent. In process of time he made the election over to others, under certain forms and conditions; as, that they should, at every vacation, before they chuse, demand of the king a congé d'elire, that is, licence to proceed to election. Cowell.

A woman, when she has made her own choice, for form's sake, sends a congé d'elire to her friends. Spectator.

CONGE. n. f. [In architecture.] A moulding in form of a quarter round, or a cavetto, which serves to separate two members from one another: such is that which joins the shaft of the column to the cincture. Chambers.

To CONGEAL. v. a. [congelio, Latin.]

1. To turn, by frost, from a fluid to a solid state.

What more miraculous thing may be told,
Than ice, which is congeal'd with senseless cold,
Should kindle fire by wonderful device? Spenser.
In whose capacious womb
A vapoury deluge lies, to snow congeal'd.
Thomson's Winter.

2. To bind or fix, as by cold.

Oh, gentlemen, see! see! dead Heary's wounds
Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh.
Shakespeare's Richard III.
Too much sadness hath congeal'd your blood.
Shakespeare.

To CONGEAL. v. n. To concreate; to gather into a mass by cold.

In the midst of molten lead, when it beginneth to congeal, make a little dent, into which put quicksilver wrapt in linen, and it will fix and run no more, and endure the hammer. Bacon.

When water congeals, the surface of the ice is smooth and level, as the surface of the water was before. Burnet's Theory.

CONGEALMENT. n. f. [from congeal.] The clot formed by congelation; concretion.

Enter the city, clip your wives, your friends;
Tell them your feats, whilst they with joyful tears
Wash the congealment from your wounds.
Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

CONGEALABLE. adj. [from congeal.] Susceptible of congelation; capable of losing its fluidity.

The consistencies of bodies are very divers: dense, rare, tangible, pneumatical, fixed, hard, soft, congealable, not congealable, liquefiable, not liquefiable. Bacon.

The chymists define salt, from some of its properties, to be a body fixable in the fire, and congealable again by cold into brittle globes or crystals. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CONGELATION. n. f. [from congeal.]

1. Act of turning fluids to solids by cold.

The capillary tubes are obstructed either by outward compression or congelation of the fluid. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CONSTABLE. n. f. [comes stabuli, as it is supposed.]

1. Lord high constable is an ancient officer of the crown. The function of the constable of England consisted in the care of the common peace of the land in deeds of arms, and in matters of war. To the court of the constable and marshal belonged the cognizance of contracts, deeds of arms without the realm, and combats and blazonry of arms within it. The first constable of England was created by the Conqueror, and the office continued hereditary till the thirteenth of Henry VIII. when it was laid aside, as being so powerful as to become troublesome to the king. From these mighty magistrates are derived the inferior constables of hundreds and franchises; two of whom were ordained, in the thirteenth of Edward I. to be chosen in every hundred, for the conservation of the peace, and view of armour. These are now called high constables; because continuance of time, and increase both of people and offences, have occasioned others in every town of inferior authority, called petty constables. Besides these, we have constables denominated from particular places; as, constable of the Tower, of Dover Castle, of the Castle of Carnarvon: but these are properly castellani, or governours of castles.

Corwell. Chambers.

When I came hither, I was lord high constable, And duke of Buckingham; now poor Edward Bohun.

Shakespeare.

The knave constable had set me i' th' stocks, i' th' common stocks, for a wretch.

It was neither in contempt nor pride that I did not bow. Esther.

The shame of being miserable,
Exposes men to scorn and base contempt,
Even from their nearest friends. Denbam.

There is no action, in the behaviour of one man towards another, of which human nature is more impatient than of contempt; it being an undervaluing of a man, upon a belief of his utter uselessness and inability, and a pitiful endeavour to engage the rest of the world in the same slight esteem of him. Soutb.

His friend smil'd scornful, and with proud contempt
Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt. Dryden's Fables.

Nothing, says Longinus, can be great, the contempt of which is great. Addison.

Wotton.
 Every species, afterwards expressed, was produced from that idea, forming that wonderful texture of created beings.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 Hence 'gan relax
 The ground's texture; hence Tartarian dregs,
 Sulphur and nitrous spume, enkindling fire,
 Bellow'd within their darksome caves.
Philips.

This apt, this wife texture of the sea,
 Makes it the ships, driv'n by the winds, obey;
 Whence hardy merchants sail from shore to shore.
Blackmore.

CONTIGNATION. n. f. [from contignatio, Lat.]

1. A frame of beams joined together; a story.
 We mean a porch, or cloister, or the like, of one contignation, and not in storied buildings.

Controlment for controlment.

Shakespeare's King John.

CONTROVERSIAL. adj. [from controver-

si.] Relating to disputes; disputatious.

It happens in controversial discourses—as it does in the assaulting of towns, where, if the ground

be, but firm whereon the batteries are erected, there is no farther enquiry whom it belongs to, so it affords but a fit rise for the present purpose.

Locke.

CONTROVERSY. n. f. [controverſia, Lat.]

1. Dispute; debate; agitation of contrary opinions: a dispute is commonly oral, and a controversy in writing.

How cometh it to pass that we are so rent with mutual contentions, and that the church is so much troubled? If men had been willing to learn, all these controversies might have died the very day

they were first brought forth.

Hooker.

Without controversy great is the mystery of god-liness.

1 Timothy.

Wild controversy then, which long had slept, Into the pres from ruin'd cloisters leapt.

Denham.

This left no room for controversy about the title,

nor for encroachment on the right of others.

2. A suit in law.

If there be a controversy between men, and they come unto judgment, that the judges may judge them, then they shall justify the righteous and condemn the wicked.

Deuteronomy, xxv. 1.

3. A quarrel.

The Lord hath a controversy with the nations.

Jer. xxv. 31.

4. Opposition; enmity. This is an unusual sense.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it

With lusty sinews; throwing it aside,

And stemming it with hearts of controversy.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

To CONTROVERT. v. a. [controverto, Lat.] To debate; to ventilate in opposite books; to dispute any thing in writing.

If any person shall think fit to controvert them,

he may do it very safely for me.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

Hooker seems to use the word controverse, if it be not an erratum.

Persuasion ought to be fully settled in men's hearts, that, in litigations and controverted causes of such quality, the will of God is to have them to do whatsoever the sentence of judicial and final decision shall determine.

Hooker.

CONTROVERTIBLE. adj. [from controvert.] Disputable; that may be the cause of controversy.

Discourſing on matters dubious, and many con-trovertible truths, we cannot without arrogance

intreat a credulity, or implore any farther assent than the probability of our reasons and verity of our experiments.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONTROVERTIST. n. f. [from controvert.] Disputant; a man versed or engaged in literary wars or disputations.

Who can think himself so considerable as not to dread this mighty man of demonstration, this prince of controvertists, this great lord and possessor of first principles?

Tillotson.

CONTUMACIOUS. adj. [contumax, Latin.] Obstinate; perverse; stubborn; inflexible.

He is in law said to be a contumacious person, who, on his appearance afterwards, departs the court without leave.
